I am informed by the publishers of the Congressional Globe that they do not receive $22 50 per page, nor more nor less than two mills per page. There is such a vast difference between these two statements that there must be something very essentially erroneous in the one or the other. I suppose that the proper course for this matter to take would be a fair and true investigation of it by the Committee on Printing. I think it ought to take that course. The subject ought to be investigated and reported upon by that committee before the Senate ceases to take its proper and usual action on the subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I think it would be as well to understand this question definitely. I confess my mind is in a state of some confusion with reference to it. I believe on looking back that when this appropriation was first made it was not in the form of an appropriation for the Congressional Globe as it is now, but simply an appropriation of so much for publishing the proceedings of the two Houses.

Mr. WADE. That was it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was the language, Subsequently, as I am informed, the Senate passed two resolutions in different years directing that these publications might be made by Mr. Rives in the Globe. I think since then there has been no particular resolution passed, but we have gone on making the appropriations. The House passed no resolution specifically, but provided in the appropriation bills in this form, "for the Congressional Globe" and "to be published in the Daily Globe," &c., and made their appropriations. Ours were different until within a very few years, when the same phraseology has been adopted in making the appropriations of the Senate. I think it was not adopted until after the present Secretary of the Senate became Secretary.

Now, if we make this appropriation in this form for the Congressional Globe and publishing the proceedings in the Daily Globe it ties us down to them and the appropriations cannot be used in any other way, or for any other purpose, whatever may be the condition of affairs. On the contrary, if we strike out these words and substitute others, and simply make the appropriation for the year for the publication of our proceedings, if there is a contract with anybody for publishing the proceedings that contract will be carried out under the appropriation and the money will be ready. If there is no contract, we may still go on with the publishers of the Globe if we see fit, and if it is ascertained that it is best to do so on an examination, the money being appropriated, they may be employed as usual by a resolution of either or both Houses passed afterward to that effect.

The only effect, therefore, of striking out the words proposed to be stricken out by my friend from Ohio, and other words in different parts of the bill to make it conform to that, would be that the appropriations would stand made to pay for reporting the proceedings, and if we choose and if the publishers choose, also, to go on as usual, if that is considered best on an examination of the whole subject, the appropriations being made they could be used for the purpose. On the contrary, if we think it best to have the reports made by a corps of reporters of our own and printed at the Government Printing Office that can be done. We can do just as we see fit in relation to that matter unless there is an existing contract. The appropriations will all be made in either form.

The simple question is, whether we shall nail ourselves down by naming the Globe in such a way that we cannot, whatever may be the circumstances, dispose of the appropriations thus made in any other manner. That is the only question at issue really. If we adopt these appropriations as they came from the House, we cannot amend them afterward; we cannot change whatever may be the condition of affairs. If we strike them out, it opens the whole matter for the consideration of the House itself, and for the consideration of a committee of conference, if there should be one upon this matter after more information has been obtained with reference to the subject.

I see, therefore, no difficulty that can arise at all from striking out these words and making the other necessary changes, because if we do so the appropriations are made to pay for the reports of the proceedings and everything necessary to be paid for, and those appropriations may be used according to the circumstances as they arise. Of course the gentlemen who publish the Globe would not contract with us to continue it for less than one Congress probably; and if they would not there is time enough to look around and see what can be done with reference to publishing the proceedings in the Government Printing Office. I know that the late Superintendent, Mr. De-frees, stated to me on several occasions that it could be done at the Government Printing Office without any difficulty, and in his judgment by so doing a very considerable sum of money would be saved. I am told—I do not know how true it is—that the present Superintendent is of the same opinion. I know nothing of his opinions, however. I am also told that a large addition has been made to the Printing Office lately by which the force has been much increased, and that this work could be done there. How that is I do not know. The Committee on Printing has more information on the subject than I have.

I have deemed it my duty to explain this proposition thus far to the Senate in order that the Senate may understand what my view of the consequences will be if they choose to strike out these words, and what they must necessarily be if they choose to leave them in. Of course the Senate will do with it as it thinks wise on the subject.

Mr. ANTHONY. By the original contract, or at least the contract that existed when I first became connected with the public printing, the publishers of the Globe were entitled to deliver to each new member of Congress the back numbers of the Globe from the beginning of the publication, and they were also entitled to the allowance of one cent for every five pages exceeding three thousand pages for the long session and fifteen hundred pages for the short session, including the indexes and laws in the Globe. Congress, however, failed to make the necessary appropriations to carry out these two provisions, and at the same time the expense of the publication increased enormously, and the publisher of the Globe stated to me and to many other Senators that it was impossible for him to continue the publication at the price which Congress paid, although he was willing to go on with it at what he always held to be the contract price. He held that these two provisions for the supplying of the back numbers of the Globe and the additional compensation when the whole volume exceeded three thousand pages for the long session and fifteen hundred for the short, were part of the original contract; and he also said that Congress was equitably bound to pay him the money for the time it had refused to make the appropriation.

By the act approved July 4, 1864, these two provisions were restored. I thought at the time that the publishers of the Globe were entitled to additional compensation. Certainly if anything like a fair price had been paid in the beginning they were entitled to a very considerable addition, because there was an enormous increase in the expenses of publication. Paper was more than double, and has been three times the original price, and everything else was at least double. But I did not like that provision of paying one cent for every five pages, for no one knew how much it came to. It was a good deal like the sum we used to have in Daboll's Arithmetic about buying a horse and paying one cent for the first nail in his shoe, two for the second, and going on in arithmetical or geometrical progression.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the honorable Senator know how much that has amounted to in the past?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think about forty thousand dollars; I am not sure. I think it amounts to about that. But this act to which I refer contains in the fourth section this provision:

Provided, however, That the above provisions are made upon the express condition that they may be abrogated by either Congress or the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix at any time after giving two years' notice for that purpose.

I am by no means prepared to say that I think a more economical arrangement could be made for the publication of the debates of Congress than now exists. It was the opinion of the late, and it is the opinion of the present Superintendent of Printing that it might be done more profitably to the Government at the Government Printing Office. I do not know whether it could be done more profitably there. I state that merely upon their judgment, not upon mine. Their judgment is better than mine. I have not given the subject any examination. I do not think it is wise for Congress to be bound by this contract to give two years' notice; and I notice in the bill under consideration that there is a proviso for giving the notice. It is on page 9, beginning at line one hundred and sixty-three:

Provided, That notice is hereby given that at the close of the Fortieth Congress the United States will terminate the purchase of one complete set of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate, provided for by the act of July 4, 1864.

That only gives notice for the abrogation of one of the provisions of this act. I do not know that the act authorizes the abrogation of one or the other, and I suppose that whatever object there is to give notice of the abrogation of one provision applies equally to the other. Therefore the notice had better be general if it is to be given.

Mr. SHERMAN. If they do not get the proceedings and reports as a matter of course that will fall to the ground; they cannot deliver a copy for each member. That would follow as a matter of course.

Mr. ANTHONY. But this is for the delivery of the back numbers. They have them already printed and on hand. There is also a provision that requires two years' notice of the abrogation of the additional compensation of one cent for every five pages over three thousand.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but we may abrogate the whole arrangement by which they report and publish the proceedings daily, and as a matter of course there would never be any volumes published.

Mr. ANTHONY. Have we a right to do that without giving them two years' notice?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; there is no contract. I think the Senator will agree with me, if he examines the subject, that there is no contract except continuing the appropriations, as they have been from year to year, simply by common consent.

Mr. ANTHONY. It would be simply a question of good faith whether we are not obliged to do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but after that goes, there never would be any publication of more than three thousand pages. As a matter of course that would fall with the abrogation of the original contract, the main contract.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Government is not bound by the contract there is no need of giving the notice at all; but if any notice is to be given, I think it had better be given generally.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator does not yet understand me. If we continue the publication of the books and if they exceed three thousand pages then undoubtedly we shall have to give them notice if we wish to get rid of the payment of the excess to them; but, as a matter of course, if we do not allow them to report the proceedings and they do not publish a volume they cannot publish more than three thousand pages; neither can they give the extra copies. If we dispense with the old contract—the original contract—it is not necessary to dispense with the particular clause which depends upon the main contract.

Mr. ANTHONY. I can see no objection to the amendments proposed to this appropriation; and here I will say that I wish the appropriations for publishing the debates of Congress were all in one clause, and not scattered over seven or eight pages. The effect of the amendment is, I understand, to leave it optional how the money shall be spent, but subject, of course, to any contracts we may have made, if we have made any, to publish the proceedings in the Globe. When I say this I do not mean to say I would advise it to be taken from the Globe by any means; but I do not think that Congress ought to be bound, or that anything should imply that the faith of Congress was bound, to give two years' notice before the arrangement should be terminated. I think we ought to be free from that on both sides. After this motion is disposed of, if it is thought advisable to have any proviso at all, I would suggest that it should be in this language:

That the notice required by the fourth section of the act entitled "An act to pay, in part, for publishing the debates of Congress, and for other purposes," approved July 4, 1864, is hereby given that Congress will in two years abrogate the provisions of said act.

But if in the opinion of legal gentlemen there is no contract to be abrogated, I do not know that it is necessary to put in that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think you had better substitute that for the other proviso; but this other motion is pending now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have mentioned it that I shall offer this when the present amendment is disposed of.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am opposed to the amendment, because I am a friend of the Globe. For a great number of years the proceedings of Congress have been very satisfactorily published. No man, I believe, has ever complained of the manner in which the proceedings of Congress have been published there. The contract under which this publication has taken place, or rather the arrangement, was made many years ago, as I understand. The price was fixed a great number of years ago, and has not been increased except as the legislation of 1864 has had an effect upon that. Now, when a work is well done and at a reasonable rate, a rate that has been agreed to for so many years, I do not see the necessity of disturbing it.

In 1864 it was found to be impossible for the publishers of the Globe to go on with the work. Congress had declined to take the full sets of the Globe, as had been the custom when the arrangement was first made, and for a great number of years thereafter; and the pay did not compensate in view of the greatly increased cost of the publication. Paper and labor had both gone up in price so much that in 1864 the Globe was losing large sums of money. Congress felt the propriety of giving relief to the establishment, and it was done in the act of July 4, 1864. That act provided that thereafter the members of Congress coming in should receive full sets of the Globe. That was the first provision, and it was a very important provision, for their relief.

The next was that if at the short session the Congressional Globe should exceed fifteen hundred pages, or at the long session should exceed three thousand pages, then the pay for that increased amount of printed matter should be the same as for the three thousand or fifteen hundred pages, to wit: one cent for five pages. Then in the last section of the act it was provided:

"That the above provisions are made upon the express condition that they may be abrogated by either Congress or the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix at any time after giving two years' notice for that purpose."

I understand the Senator from Ohio to express the opinion that we can discontinue the publication by the Globe office without notice. I am not able to see how he comes to that opinion. He says we can discontinue everything except the pay provided for in the second section and the back numbers of the Globe, and if we discontinue that, of course they cannot publish more than fifteen hundred pages at the short, or more than three thousand at the long session, and therefore you do indirectly that which you cannot do directly.

I do not think that will quite do. I will ask the Senator, or any other Senator, whether the publishers of the Globe can discontinue the publication without giving Congress two years' notice?

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Indiana is a lawyer, and I will put to him a question which I think will settle it. Suppose I am his tenant from year to year; tenancies that are made from year to year by the custom of the country expire on the 1st of April; suppose while the tenancy is going on I make a bargain with him that I shall have firewood in his woods, and that he shall not deprive me of that firewood unless he gives me six months' notice; suppose the tenancy should terminate and the whole of the subsequent arrangement was made on the basis of the existing tenancy; I ask whether the right to get firewood would be continued, or whether he would have to give notice? That is precisely this case reduced to an ordinary case in court.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the contract in regard to the wood entered into and became a part of the contract under which the man held his term you could not discontinue the term for the purpose of disturbing his rights under the subsequent contract. But I will ask the Senator a question which I think is more analogous. Suppose the term is held at a fixed rent, and then the parties agree for an additional rent, and it is agreed that that rent shall not be disturbed except there be a notice of two years by either party: can you affect that increased rent by putting an end to the term otherwise than by the notice required in the subsequent contract?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not this case. Mr. Rives himself in his very claim admitted, and always claimed, that this was only a provision from time to time; and it was modified and changed to suit his convenience; and his claim was made at the time on the ground that he was not bound to publish the Globe; and he gave us fair notice that he would discontinue the publication of the Globe, he himself claiming the right to discontinue, and he said the only way he could continue it was by the Government giving him additional compensation. That did not vary the original contract by which each party had a right to discontinue it; nor do I think Mr. Rives ever claimed it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know what was the original understanding, for I have not examined all the statutes on the subject, nor any correspondence, nor is it important for the purpose of my present argument to go back of the act of 1864. This is the case: Congress paid a fixed price, but that price was limited by the number of pages. It only paid for three thousand pages at the long session and fifteen hundred pages at the short session. Then Congress said, "That compensation shall be changed thus: the pay shall extend to all the pages; it shall not be limited to three thousand; it shall not be limited to fifteen hundred; but Congress will pay for all the pages printed at that rate," and in that very act Congress said it should not be discontinued except upon two years' notice.

As a question of law, in my judgment, there is no question about it, because this change of compensation changed the whole contract; it entered into the whole. The Riveses could not continue the Globe; Congress said to them, "Continue it and we will pay you, not for three thousand pages alone, not for fifteen hundred pages alone, but we will pay you for all the pages you publish, and the compensation shall be at this fixed rate." In other words, Congress said in 1864 to the publishers of the Globe, "Go on and publish it and we will pay you at the rate of one cent for every five pages exceeding three thousand." The effect of it was to say, "We will pay you one cent for every five pages that you may publish of the proceedings of Congress."

Mr. SHERMAN. Exceeding three thousand and fifteen hundred pages.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly; that is what it is; but that is the same rate; that is the old rate; that is no change of rates. It said, "Go on, and you shall have pay for all." Here is the compensation fixed in 1864, one cent for five pages for all the pages published.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken. For the first three thousand pages, they do not get any pay at all in that way. They are paid in a different way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was not aware of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. The first three thousand pages are paid for by the subscriptions to the Globe. Formerly the Globe did not exceed three thousand pages; but finally it became more bulky, and then this additional compensation was given some years ago. Sometimes Congress discontinued it, and sometimes continued it, according to the exigencies of the case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. So I understand. Prior to the passage of this law of 1864 I do not claim there was any notice to be given, and I suppose none was requisite, except that good faith that ought to be kept with a large establishment, where money is invested with a view of carrying on a work, where type is purchased, paper purchased, hands hired, and all that. There is good faith that we should not arbitrarily stop the arrangement to the loss of the men who are engaged in the business.

But, sir, when this law of 1864 was passed, the Government, as I think, became bound by the arrangement being a change of compensation, became bound for two years. I have no doubt about it. That was the purpose of it. Can the publishers discontinue it short of two years? Can they say, "We will not publish it" unless they give Congress two years' notice? Clearly not, under this proviso. I suppose it became binding as a contract upon them as soon as they published anything and received any compensation under the law. It became a contract binding upon them if they accepted it by any act of theirs. Then they cannot discontinue the publication except they give us two years' notice. Can we then say, under the same proviso, that we will discontinue it arbitrarily without giving them this notice? What is the object of the notice? That they shall not be going on upon uncertainties, but that they shall know when they purchase type and paper and employ hands that this thing will continue as much as two years at least.

I do not know what are the influences that bring about this proposed change. I am not going to discuss that. I have heard a great deal about it. This is a work that is done for this Government honestly. It is one of the establishments that has acted honestly with this Government. John C. Rives, in my judgment—I knew him well—never took a dollar from this Government that was not clearly according to the law and the arrangement with Congress. Since his death I have never heard a word from any man that it was not honestly done in quality of work, in quality of binding, and that the accounts were not fairly rendered. I have never heard the breath of suspicion of the integrity of this one establishment. It is the one that is to be stricken down. Why, sir? This Globe publication is a credit to the Government; it is a credit to our people. I understand that the proceedings of no legislative body in the world are more satisfactorily published than ours are in the Globe. I admit some interest because of my attachment to Mr. Rives. I knew him when I was quite a young man, and I admired him for his integrity and for his rare sagacity. I have admired the work because it is a credit to Congress and to the country. I should regret to see a personal matter brought into a question of this sort.

I think the Government is committed for two years. We said we would give two years' notice. We had better live up to it. As we would insist that the Globe office should not discontinue without giving us the two years' notice, it is common, plain, straightforward honesty that we should not except upon giving the same notice. We had that agreement. It was so understood. I never doubted that we would give that notice. Giving that notice there is no loss to anybody. If, then, it is the pleasure of the Senate to give the notice, that is square and fair and right, too; but to stop it short of the two years, in my judgment, is not complying with the contract.

Mr. CONNESS. I have only a few words to say on this subject. I appreciate a great deal of what has been said by the Senator from Indiana; but, sir, there are probably two sides to this question. For one I am willing to investigate it, and then go according to the burden of facts.

It has been stated by the Senator that the expenses of the proprietors of the Globe have largely increased with the general advance that has been made in the cost of material and labor in the country. That is undoubtedly so; but I apprehend it will be found that they have not been quite generous enough in considering that important fact in their relations to those who do the actual labor of reporting. Now, sir, I am disposed before I act in the case to ascertain the exact facts upon this point. The men who sit here and record our proceedings so faultlessly, and then who sit until not the small hours of the morning but until the gray dawn comes preparing them for print ought to be remembered when the question of the increase of expenses is considered. Sir, if we will not consider that aspect of the case I think we shall fall short of performing our duty in the premises.

I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. It does not discharge the Globe, nor interfere with the contract, but it does not conclude us in the premises. If there be a contract and we are legally and morally bound to execute it, we can, when we ascertain all the facts in the case, execute the contract. On the other hand, if we find that they are a mammoth establishment grown rich by the favors of the Government—I will not impute to them that they have not performed their part of the contract at all and done it well—but if they take advantage in their rich position to oppress and impose upon those who perform the actual labor, those who bring the real genius and industry and application to the work, I am in favor of interfering by any power that is in my possession for that purpose.

I apprehend, sir, that a thorough investigation of the case will leave perhaps no quarrel or cause of difference as between the proprietors of the Globe and Congress; but that it will lead to a measure of justice being done to the worthy class of whom I have spoken. I hope the amendment will be adopted, so that the case shall be acted upon that we may see that justice is done to all.

Mr. YATES. Mr. President, a remark that fell from the honorable Senator from Indiana induces me to say a word. He said that he could not understand the underground of this proposition. If I understand the motion, it is the motion of the honorable Senator from Ohio to strike out the words "in the Daily Globe" in regard to the printing for the Fortieth Congress. If these words are stricken out it will not preclude us hereafter, as has been remarked by the honorable Senator from California, from still having this printing done at the Globe office.

But, sir, that is not the point on which I rose to say a few words. For a long time I have fought the doctrine that the spoils belong to the victors. I was a Henry Clay Whig, a Webster Whig, and I fought with all my might the doctrine that the spoils belonged to the victors. I did not believe it was the best doctrine for the Government. I believed in the principle to which the honorable Senator from Wisconsin referred the other day, that in the employment of public officers, the question should be, Is he honest? Is he capable? Is he faithful to the Constitution?—the Jeffersonian doctrine. We fought this other doctrine with a zeal that was worthy of patriots, as I supposed at the time; but, sir, we failed, we went down. The glorious and dominant Democratic party succeeded, and they established the doctrine that the spoils belong to the victors—a doctrine to which we submitted per force. But, sir, having been conquered and having yielded, like lambs to the slaughter, to this doctrine as we did, now, the principle having been established against our patriotic wishes, having the power, I propose that the spoils shall belong to the victors. That is my doctrine now. I am now for carrying out this great principle that you have fastened upon the country contrary to the Jeffersonian doctrine.

Now, sir, while I admit that the Congressional Globe is published well, and I accord all praise to the publishers, I am here to-day to say that if the Republican Union party of this country cannot have a printer and cannot have a man that is devoted in his very heart and soul and radically to the Republican party to do its printing, then they do not act as I believe the honorable Senator from Indiana would act were he in the ascendant and had the power. Therefore I am in favor of striking out the proposition that this printing shall be done by the Congressional Globe. Under my modern notions of political parties, I would not give a cent for a party that would not take care of its own children and stand by them, and give the crumbs of patronage to the men who stand by the country, who stood by it in the war, who are radical in their notions in favor of human rights and human liberty.

Sir, we ought to strike this out and give the printing to a man who is on our side, and about whom there should be no question. It will not do to say to me that he is neutral, that he is not political. The President does not act upon that principle. The Senator from Indiana does not act upon that principle with regard to appointments now. It will not do to say that to me; but say to me that the printer of the proceedings of the Congress of the United States of America is a Radical Union Republican, that he has supported the war through all its scenes and all its trials.

I hope, sir, that the Republican Union members of Congress will stand by this proposition. It is right. It is returning to the Senator from Indiana and his friends on the other side of the Chamber the pill which they administered to us after so many elections, and through so many hard fights that we had throughout this country.

Mr. WADE. I did not suppose when I moved this amendment that I should cause so earnest and so long a debate over it, because really there was nothing conclusive about it. I wanted to prevent a conclusion being prematurely made. I have been told that the Government Printer could do this business so as to save sixty or seventy thousand dollars per year to the Government. I knew there had been some dispute about this Globe, and I thought we ought not for the Fortieth Congress to conclude ourselves absolutely from looking into it. I did not expect on this occasion to do anything more than prevent a final conclusion being, as I thought, without deliberation and prematurely made. Hence it was that I offered this amendment, with no design to repudiate any contract, if we have any that ought to bind us. That was the furthest possible thing from my thoughts. I have not had time since the thought occurred to me to investigate it so as to pronounce upon that important subject with authority. I cannot say but that we are bound to the Globe so that without giving two years' notice we cannot stir hand or foot, whether we like it or not. If we are, I am the very last man that will flinch from the contract that we have honestly made.

But I hardly think, from the superficial examination that I have given the subject, that we are so bound. From all that I can see we are only bound by a series of resolutions passed from time to time giving the Globe so much for doing the printing, and without any such obligation as has been alluded to. It may be, however, that on more mature and thorough examination we shall find that we have done something to bind us and tie our hands. All I ask is that these words shall be stricken out, which will save the appropriation being fixed there so that we can hardly get rid of it, and leaving the appropriation made which may be carried to a point by a simple resolution any day, when we shall have investigated far enough to know what we really wish to do with it. That is the extent and all there is in the amendment that I propose.

I agree in a great deal that the Senator from Illinois has just said. If I am here where expenses are to be incurred, and even if profitable jobs are to be given out, like him I would prefer to give them to those who support the principles that I believed to be right and indispensable for the administration of this Government rather than to one who holds principles diametrically opposite to me, and that I considered to be destructive of the Government. Of course, if favors are to be given, so far as my voice and my vote can go they shall be given to those who support the principles that I maintain here. Being serious and honest in those principles, I am equally so in using all means that honorably can be used to make them triumphant; and therefore when agencies are to be employed by the Government—not that I would rob the Treasury to support a party; I would not do any such thing—but if we are to make expenditures that are to inure to the advantage of any party, I do not deny that I prefer that they should go to the support of the party to which I belong rather than to those who hold principles as I believe not as good as our own.

In saying that, I do not impeach the principles of any party, nor those who are opposed to me; but I feel compelled always to maintain by all honorable means those principles that I believe to be just. Another man has just as good a right to his opinions, but I know that the party in opposition to us have for many years acted upon the same principle, with which I find no fault.

But to come back to this question: it involves nothing; no apprehensions need be entertained; but if an investigation should be made and a definite proposition presented, then it will be time enough for gentlemen to ascertain whether it will be right or wrong. I only want to save the Government for the present; that is all there is in the proposition.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is a little difficult to see upon what ground the friends of this proposition do stand. The Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] wants to provide for the reporters of the Senate; the Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] wants to provide for some partisan; the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] seems to want this printing done at the Government Printing Office, if possible. These are the three authoritative views expressed in support of this measure. I knew there was something in it. I knew as soon as the Senator from Illinois got up that we should have just what it was, so far as he chose to speak at all. I intend now to speak very briefly of these three propositions.

First, the Senator from California intimates that the Globe office is not doing exactly fair by the reporters of this body. There is no Senator who would be more earnest in demanding that full justice should be done to the two young gentlemen that report the proceedings of this body than myself. They are very expert and able in their profession; they are very laborious in the discharge of their duties; and no compliment could be paid to them in too extravagant terms. But, sir, are we to decide that we will not continue a publication which has been approved for so many years because of a temporary disagreement, if such a disagreement does exist, between the Globe office and some of its employés?

I suppose when the thing comes to be investigated it will be found that the reporters in the Senate have been very well paid. I do not intend to discuss it now at any length; but I understand that three reporters in the Senate get the same compensation that is paid to five in the House. They are paid in the same way, $4 50 per column, and this is paid to three reporters in the Senate and five in the House, at one session six in the House; it being so very difficult to report in so large a body as the House, a larger corps seems to be necessary in that body than in this. A statement that I have in my hand shows that for the second session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress the proprietors of the Globe paid the reporters of the Senate $12,048 20, and Congress paid them $4,000. For the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress they received from the proprietors of the Globe $5,464 92, and $4,000 from Congress. For the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress they received from the proprietors of the Globe $11,450 72, and $4,000 from Congress. For the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress they received from the proprietors of the Globe $12,784 61, and $4,000 from Congress. In all for these five sessions they received $66,589 03; and at one session, as I understand, they received the twenty per cent. voted to the employés of Congress, twenty per cent. not only upon what was paid by Congress, but upon what was paid by the proprietors of the Globe.

I am not prepared to say whether that was a full compensation or not, or whether the employment of these reporters during the vacation on courts-martial and otherwise did not make up a very handsome compensation. I do not choose to discuss that. I suppose that the Senate will hardly abandon a policy that has been approved by so many years merely because of a temporary disagreement between the employés of the Globe and that office. That is all I have to say in reply to the Senator from California.

Now, sir, I come to the argument of the Senator from Illinois. He fairly stated it so as not to be misunderstood. How far does he claim that the principle which he now indorses shall go, that to the victors belong the spoils? I supposed that applied to the public offices, and that it was made consistent to the moral sense of the country, because the President of the United States, being charged by his oath of office with the execution of the laws, it was due to him that he should have around him in important official positions men that sympathized with him in his views and policy.

The Democratic party claimed that for the President, and I think the Whig party claimed the same for its President when it came into power. But does the Senator say that the money paid by the tax-payers of this country into the coffers of the Government is public spoils to be plundered upon by the party in power? Here is a question of work to be done, of contracts to be complied with, as I think.

Is that arbitrarily to be given to some partisan that he shall make money out of it? When a house is to be built by the Government, when the mails are to be carried over some route for the benefit of the people, does the Senator from Illinois claim that that house shall be built by a partisan without a competition allowed to all the mechanics of the country? When the mails are to be carried and paid for, does the Senator claim that the public Treasury may be plundered upon to enrich a partisan?

I know very well that the Senator's party has indorsed the doctrine that to the victors belong the spoils, and illustrated it in a way never known to a free country before. He speaks of the crumbs of office. For five years past it has not been crumbs, it has been whole loaves, whole car-loads and ship-loads of spoils to the men in office and to the favorites of men in office. A few have grown wonderfully rich. Men who before your party came into power were poor and scarcely able to make the ends of the year meet are now living in gorgeous palaces and rolling in wealth. This is known; it is seen in every locality; it is seen in every city and village of the country that men, because of their party attachments, have grown rich out of the money that the people sweated that they might pay it into the public Treasury. Is that the illustration of the doctrine which the Senator from Illinois to-day approves?

I do not, as a Democrat I never held to any such doctrine. I say that the money which goes from the pockets of the people into the public Treasury must only be paid out according to law, and when a contract is made it must be made fairly, without a view to giving to a partisan more than it is worth. The Senator does not say that the pay which has been given to Mr. Rives for the publication of the Globe has been more than was a fair return. He has not said that. He has admitted that the work has been well done, but he simply wants to take it away from these people, the present owners of the Globe office, that the work may be given to a partisan.

Mr. President, if a contract has been made to carry the mails between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts will he claim that that contract ought to be set aside that some partisan may have the benefit of it? I understand the force of his appeal, that the men ought to have the benefit of the crumbs who have stood by the war, as he says. Why, sir, I believe one of the sons of Mr. Rives occupies a soldier's grave. Mr. Rives himself could not go to the war, but I never heard that his purse-strings remained tight when an appeal was made to his generosity on behalf of any soldier. He was liberal, generous, kind to all—a model in all these respects.

Is this Globe to become a partisan paper? Are the reports of our proceedings to be made up for partisan purposes, as is the case in the partisan papers of the country and to some extent on the part of the Associated Press, that the views expressed upon one side of the Chamber shall be fully represented and that the views which are expressed in reply on the other side of the Chamber shall be suppressed? Why is it that this shall become a matter of partisan strife? It never has been so. When the great party that the Senator speaks of was in power I never heard that work which was to be done for the Government and to be paid for at a fair price was regarded as the spoils of office or the spoils belonging to a party triumph.

But I do not intend to discuss this question further. I believe we are committed by the bill of 1864 to give two years' notice. That is the fair, plain reading of the law, and I think we ought to live up to it.

Mr. YATES. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana seems to manifest a modest and maiden sort of surprise at the doctrine which I have advanced. He wanted to know what was the motive principle with Senators in introducing this amendment. I did not know what the sentiment of the honorable Senator from Ohio was in introducing the amendment, but I had a right to speak for myself, as I am in the habit of doing, and I spoke for myself. I said that when I occupied the position relatively that the honorable Senator from Indiana now occupies, when I was in the minority, I resisted the position that the spoils belonged to the victors; I believed that doctrine then demoralizing and unpatriotic; but, sir, like every good American citizen, when fairly overcome by the voice of the majority I yielded, and said vox populi vox dei. Sir, the principle which I propose is that which is now acted upon by both parties throughout this country. There is no Legislature in the United States of America where the dominant party does not employ its own agents in carrying out its principles, whether it be in public printing or whether it be in the dispensation of patronage in any shape whatever. There is no State in the United States of America where this principle is so rigidly adhered to as in the State of Indiana.

If the party to which the honorable Senator belongs in the State of Indiana were in the ascendant to-day, that honorable Senator will not stand up before the Senate and say that the public printer of the State of Indiana should not be a Democrat true from his head to his heels. He contends for no such principle. When he pretends to say that we propose to "plunder" upon the Treasury, what does he mean? My object is to place the patronage of the Government in the hands of a party which is not distinguished for plunder; whose record is clear and pure upon the subject of public plunder. I propose to place it in the hands of the Republican Union party, that is not so much distinguished for plunder and spoils as for exalted devotion to the country during the trying scenes which have tested the patriotism of the various parties of this country.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Are the publications as we have them now partisan publications, or do you propose that they shall be partisan publications?

Mr. YATES. If the gentleman wishes a distinct answer (though the term "partisan" seems to be employed by the honorable Senator from Indiana as an odious term) I respond affirmatively. I propose that the public printing of the United States of America shall be under the control of and shall be carried on by men who are true to the Union, who are true to the party, who are radical Republicans; and I propose that not one dollar, not one cent of public patronage shall be given to a party who sympathized with treason during the rebellion through which we have passed. These are my individual sentiments. These are the sentiments for which I have contended for years past and for which I shall contend until the last day in the evening of my life.

Now, Mr. President, of course in this matter I have not pretended to refer to what may be the obligation of the Government by way of contract. If there is a contract by which we are bound to give the printing to the Congressional Globe, then I stand by the contract; but if the road is clear, I am for conferring this printing upon a man or upon a firm that are true and have been true and will be true to the Republican Union party of the Government. I repeat what I said before, that after the trials we have passed through, after the contests we have had, I would not give a cent for a dominant party which would not thus confer its patronage. Upon the subject of "plunder" it is true that in the millions which composed the Republican Union party of this country we have not men who can honestly discharge the duties of public printer or any other office? The country will expect of us that we shall be true to this principle and that we will carry it out, especially since it has been established and forced upon us by that party of which the honorable Senator from Indiana is a very distinguished and worthy member.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I never did agree to the observation made many years since, "to the victor belong the spoils." I think it as false a maxim as ever was incorporated into political policy. It has been well laid down that in republican States virtue is the true foundation, and not partisanship, not art, not management, not fraud, not the results that may be culminated by these forces. Upon virtue the foundations of this Government must rest.

I care not to embark in this particular argument, but I think the Senator from Illinois is wrong; I do not care to discuss the matter with him, because I am afraid that he would be angered—if that is a good word—if I should do it. The philosophy of the discussion can be better read in Butler's Hudibras, and there I will leave it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I thought, Mr. President, at the time this amendment was first offered, that this matter was open; but I have since examined with some care the act referred to by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, and the conclusion to which I have come is that, for two years at any rate we are bound, impliedly bound, to give this printing to the Globe.

Mr. HOWARD. Bound in law?

Mr. FESSENDEN. We are impliedly bound. The enactment is this:

"That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to purchase from the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in the present and each succeeding Congress, who has not heretofore received the same, one complete set of the Congressional Globe and Appendix.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid to the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, out of the contingent funds of the two Houses, according to the number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix taken by each, one cent for every five pages exceeding three thousand pages for a long session or fifteen hundred pages for a short session, including the indexes and the laws of the United States for this and each future Congress."

That is specific; and then the third section makes an appropriation for the Congress at which the act was passed. Then the fourth section provides:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That the above provisions are made upon the express condition that they may be abrogated by either Congress or the publishers of the Congressional Globe and the Appendix at any time after giving two years' notice for that purpose."

By the first section we agreed to take a set of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each new member. By the next section we agreed to pay them so much for the additional printing over three thousand pages at a long session. Then we say that either party may abrogate the arrangement by giving two years' notice.

Mr. HOWARD. And that notice has not been given.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Notice has not been given. Mr. Rives, therefore, if he is the publisher, must publish for us for two years. We must pay him that amount of money extra. It assumes that they are necessarily to do this printing for Congress. It does not mean that they are bound to furnish this additional printing whether they do the other or not, and that we are bound to take it of them if they do. It imposes upon us an obligation to continue them; an implied obligation, not directly. It assumes that they are to publish the debates and imposes upon us an implied obligation to continue them as publishers and to pay them so much until we give the notice specified. That is my construction of the act; and that being so I do not think we can very readily vary it; but I think the notice ought to be given and given at once in this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt the honorable member from Maine has correctly stated the law to which he has referred. At the time that the law was passed, 4th July, 1864, Mr. Rives was the publisher of the Globe, and he had been for some time before. The object of that bill was not to change the mode of publishing the proceedings of Congress, but to continue as it was going on, with certain changes, changes for his benefit and changes for our benefit; and the latter part of the law, the provision as to notice, to be found in the last section, was intended to apply to the whole of the antecedent portions of the law. It is therefore to be read, as I think, in this way: that this law is to stand as the agreement between the publisher of the Globe and the United States until either party shall give notice of two years that it is to terminate. The language of the clause is that it may be abrogated upon the giving of two years' notice, the meaning of which necessarily is that it is not to be abrogated without giving that notice. It is to me, therefore, a very clear question. The true interpretation of the law is that the United States are bound until the prescribed notice is given to go on and discharge what they undertook to do by this law. It is purely a question of law, and the political question which the honorable Senator from Illinois stated does not arise. But I cannot help saying before I sit down that I should think it exceedingly unfortunate to connect the publication of the Globe with any party newspaper. I know what would necessarily be the result of such connection. If the paper happened to differ (as of course it would, for we are always divided into parties and will continue to be so) with either side of the Senate or of the House, the editor could not avoid indulging in strictures to the prejudice of the party with whom he differed, and the proceedings of the Senate, which are supposed to go to the country to speak for themselves, would go with such remarks as a partisan editor, whoever he might be, might think it due to his party to make. The Globe, as it has been published in the past, as it is now published, is entirely free from any party bias. There is nothing of a party character to be found in the paper of its publishers. Whatever of party is in it is in the speeches which are made by the several members.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to correct a mistake which I made a little while ago. One Senator asked me what the cost of this "one cent for five pages" item was, and I stated a much larger sum than it really amounts to. I must have got my impression from taking a whole Congress, a long and a short session together. I see the amount appropriated in this bill is $15,000.

Mr. CRESWELL. For each House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I merely wish to make the correction. I thought, when the law of 1864 was passed, it bound us for two years, and that is the reason why I did not vote for it. I thought the proprietors of the Globe ought to have a larger compensation than they then received, but I did not think we ought to bind ourselves for any specified time. I am not lawyer enough to decide how the law should be construed, but it seems to me the faith of the Government is pledged to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest now that in line fifty-nine we strike out the words "for the first session of the Fortieth Congress," as I do not see any necessity for having those words in; so as to make the clause read:

For reporting and printing the proceedings in the Daily Globe, $21,250.

There is no use in these words, and I move to strike them out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In lines sixty-three and sixty-four I move the same amendment, to strike out the words "for the first session of the Fortieth Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then on page 7, line one hundred and fifty, I move to strike out the words "the first regular session of."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those words will be stricken out to make the bill uniform.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then on page 9, lines one hundred and ninety-four and one hundred and ninety-five, I move to strike out "for the first regular session of the Fortieth Congress."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made to make the bill conform to the previous amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now I move to change the proviso at the bottom of page 7, which reads:

Provided, That notice is hereby given that at the close of the Fortieth Congress the United States will terminate the purchase of one complete set of the Congressional Globe and the Appendix for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate provided for by the act approved July 4, 1864.

I move to strike out all after the word "provided," and to insert:

That the notice required by the fourth section of the act entitled "An act to pay in part for publishing the debates of Congress, and for other purposes," approved July 4, 1864, is hereby given that Congress will in two years from the close of the present Congress abrogate the provisions of the first and second sections of said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. By request I move a reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] was rejected. I refer to the amendment striking out in lines fifty-eight and fifty-nine, on page 8, the words "in the Daily Globe."

Mr. FESSENDEN. He moved also to insert in their place the words "the proceedings of the Senate daily."

Mr. WADE. And to make the same change in the other places of the bill where it is necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are half a dozen changes which should be made to conform to this amendment if it is to be made; and when the vote is taken, if it shall be adopted, I shall suggest them.

Mr. WADE. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. On this motion to reconsider I wish to say a word. The Senator from Maine a while ago said it was his impression that under the act of July 4, 1864, Congress could not without a breach of faith stop the publication of the Globe. If I thought so, if such was the effect of the law, as a matter of course it would end the argument, for I take it no Senator would violate a contract made by Congress with the publishers of the Globe. There would be no occasion to do it, and I certainly would not do it. I would even resolve a doubt in their favor, if I thought there was a doubt about it. I remember the circumstances under which that law was passed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator will excuse me for saying that I did not wish to be understood as suggesting that the making of this amendment would be a violation of the contract. If they have a contract we can just as well fulfill it with this amendment as without it.

Mr. SHERMAN. But still, if we are bound to take the Globe at the next Congress we may as well appropriate in the ordinary way, and the amendment would be idle, to say the least of it, if the Senator's view of the law is correct; but I do not so see it.

I remember that the bill of 1864 was introduced at the close of the session by the Senator from Rhode Island merely to provide against a temporary exigency. It was then claimed by the Senator from Rhode Island, representing the Committee on Printing, that Mr. Rives could not continue the publication of the Globe in the then condition of affairs on account of the high price of paper and the high price of labor. That bill was intended to give him relief. It was not to provide for the publication of the Globe, but to give him relief first on account of the large size of the Congressional Globe, it having extended beyond three thousand pages at a long session; and next, because on account of the absence of members from the southern States the number of Globes taken had fallen off. The old custom of giving to every new member of Congress a set of certain documents had been discontinued. In this condition of affairs he was not receiving what he had formerly received under more favorable circumstances.

The equity of the claim seemed to be so strong as to carry it through without a division, I think.

It seems to me that the notice required by the fourth section of that law simply relates to the additional price provided for by it. For instance, suppose the Globe was going on in the ordinary way, reaching its three thousand pages, if we intended to discontinue that we ought to give Mr. Rives reasonable notice, so that he might condense, if possible, the Globe within three thousand pages, because up to three thousand pages he is paid in a different way, by the subscription of Congress to the publication of the Globe. The provision in the second section of the act of 1864 was simply intended to pay him for the additional expense caused by the swelling of the Globe beyond three thousand pages; and the other provision requiring a full set of the Globe to be given to new members was to compensate for the condition of affairs in which we were then placed, by which he was not required to supply so great a number of Globes to members as before.

It seems to me that the fourth section of that act does not require any notice for a change of the original contract. The original contract for the publication of the Globe is in certain resolutions passed from time to time by the two Houses of Congress directing the manner of publishing the Globe. If I remember aright, when I examined the question, there were eight or ten of them, perhaps more. They have been varied from time to time. Many of the appropriation bills varied them. That contract was simply a continuing contract at the pleasure of either party, the one to publish the Globe and the other to pay a certain rate for reporting and a certain rate for the volumes that were published. The fourth section did not affect that contract at all; it did not change the right of either party to discontinue that contract at any moment. It simply provided that this extra compensation should be paid as long as the work was continued, and if we thought the extra compensation should not be paid we should give two years' notice so that Mr. Rives might exercise his right under the original contract to discontinue the work.

It seems to me that is the meaning of the law, taking into view all the facts connected with it. Full force can be given to the fourth section by confining it to the construction I give to it; and it seems to me that is the entire force of it. The original contract for the publication of the Globe depended upon the pleasure of both parties. The stipulation about extra pay for the increased size of the volume, and also about the back volumes to the new members was a new contract, not for years embraced in the appropriations. The appropriation for the additional sets was discontinued in 1860, if I remember aright, and for years Mr. Rives did not get this extra compensation. The fourth section was intended simply to give him this extra compensation for a period of time without changing the original contract, or the terms of the original contract, except as to the extra compensation, and that this extra compensation should be paid until two years' notice was given for its discontinuance.

It seems to me that notice applies only to the extra compensation and does not extend to the original contract. Either party is at liberty to abandon the original contract, and as a matter of course the furnishing of additional volumes and the extra pay for the additional size of the volumes would fall with the falling of the original contract. So it seems to me, and I think also from the statements which have been made, that a change ought to occur in regard to the publication of the Globe. Since the Globe was organized we have established a Public Printing Bureau. In consequence of the struggles for political patronage and political power, the distribution of the printing of Congress became a disgusting spectacle. Those who remember the contest for it during the three years from 1857 to 1860 will remember that there was the most disgusting spectacle presented in the action of Congress. The public printing was a matter of barter and sale; the profits arising from the public printing were distributed for political purposes and political objects. To put an end to this both parties, under the lead of one of our colleagues from Ohio, now dead, thought it wise at a time when the Senate was one way politically and the House the other, to adopt the system of severing Congress from the public printing, throwing the whole matter into a bureau organized under the control of Congress and in the power of Congress, but in such a way that no part of the public money could go to the Superintendent of Public Printing. A colleague of mine in the House, who took great interest in the matter in connection with the chairman of the Committee on Printing of the Senate, framed the bill organizing this bureau with a view to separate entirely from politics the printing of Congress and the Departments. It was not carried out as far as the Globe was concerned, though the transfer of the Globe to the Public Printing Office was then talked about, and the reason was this: it was said that the buildings were not large enough; but it was even then contemplated that the whole printing of Congress, including the printing of the Globe, should be done at the Government Printing Office.

Under present circumstances it seems to me we ought to carry out that design. Since then the returns of the Superintendent of Public Printing show that something near three or four hundred thousand dollars a year are saved in the publication of the matter ordered by Congress. We ought to carry out the original design in this respect unless we are prevented from doing so by some contract. In the view I take of this law I do not think it is a case of contract. If it is a contract, Mr. Rives will be entitled to damages. If the proper court should hold that this was in the nature of a contract he would have a fair claim for damages, and if I believed he had a contract which was binding on us I would certainly be the last man to violate it to save two or three hundred thousand dollars a year.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think with the honorable member from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] that the printing of the Globe ought to be transferred as soon as we can do it to the public printing establishment; and if I thought there was no difficulty in the way of attaining that end now I would vote in support of the amendment of the honorable member from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.] But in my opinion there is a very clear contract between the United States and the present publishers of the Globe that they are to continue to be the publishers until the notice prescribed in the law shall be given. The honorable member from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] construes the meaning of that law by facts outside of the law altogether. The true mode of interpreting a law is to interpret it by itself, without any reference to facts abundant; and so interpreted by itself I think the honorable member would say that if the Globe never had been published before that law was passed the publishers would be entitled to the benefit of the notice before their publication under that law should be terminated. Now, does it make any difference that they were at the time that law was passed, and had been for some time before, the publishers of the Globe? I think not. Upon what rule of construction can my friend from Ohio maintain that the last section of that law is to be applied only to one of the antecedent sections?

Mr. SHERMAN. I said it applied to both those sections, but not to any contract pre-existing.

Mr. JOHNSON. My friend says there was no antecedent contract except from year to year, as we agreed that they should go on to publish the Globe. They were publishing the Globe at the time we passed that law. We say what is to be done there; that is to say, they are to publish the Globe and we are to pay them something extra for publishing the Globe; and we say that shall not be put an end to without giving two years' notice. I read that section as applying to the entire law, as covering every thing which the law implies, if it does not in words direct, that the publishers of the Globe shall do. So construed, I cannot vote for the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I am in favor of this amendment, not because I propose to disturb any contract if such exists, but I do not feel disposed to commit myself. I do not think it right for the Senate to commit itself on a question not under consideration. The question whether we shall continue this contract, if one exists, is not involved. I understand that every object desired by the appropriation will be answered by passing it in the form in which this amendment will put it. The effect of this amendment is simply to leave the Senate in a position to investigate the question. I am free to confess that I have not enough of the facts before me, I have not sufficiently examined the law, to be prepared to pass upon that question, and I say it is not before us. I do not believe in determining such a question indirectly. But as the bill now stands the money must necessarily go to the Globe, and it commits us for the next two years. That may be proper or it may not. If there is a contract in existence which binds us to that the party holding the contract will get the benefit of this appropriation if it is put in this form. I think the amendment had better be adopted, so that we may investigate that question.

Mr. HOWE. When this question was first put to the Senate I had not had an opportunity of examining the law on the subject, and listened only to the statement of the Senator from Maine commenting upon the act of 1864. Consulting the same authority from which he read, it seems to me that when the act of 1864 was passed there was no obligation of law requiring either the Senate or the House of Representatives, or any individual in either the Senate or the House, to take a single copy of the Globe except as that obligation was conferred by resolutions from session to session. Then laying out of view the act of 1864, where is the obligation on the part of anybody to order a single copy of the Globe? Where is the law which says that Congress shall pay for one copy or one million copies? I do not find it.

What, then, is the act of 1864? What obligation did that impose upon Congress? First, the obligation to purchase at every succeeding Congress a full set of the Globe for new members; second, an obligation to pay one cent for every five pages above a certain amount—three thousand pages for a long session and fifteen hundred for a short session—one cent for each five pages upon so many volumes as Congress might take, but not settling at all the question how many copies Congress should take. Congress was still at liberty to take few or many or none.

The fourth section provides in the language which has been read that these provisions—the provision which requires Congress at each succeeding session to supply new members with full sets of the Globe, and the provision which requires Congress to pay one cent for every five pages above the given amount on so many copies as are taken—these particular provisions shall not be repealed without two years' notice. What, then, if we do not give the two years' notice, but do not take a single copy of the Globe? Who can find fault? What law is violated? What contract is impaired? I do not see, and therefore I shall vote for this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to agree to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.]

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment to strike out in lines fifty-eight and fifty-nine, on page 3, the words "in the Daily Globe," and to insert "of the Senate, daily."

Mr. JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Creswell, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Guthrie, Henderson, Nesmith, Nye, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Willey—14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Regarding that as settled, it will be necessary to make several other amendments which I will suggest. In the same page, in line fifty-six, the words "Congressional Globe" should be struck out, and "the reports and debates of the proceedings of the Senate in book form" inserted. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line sixty-two, on the same page, the words "for the Congressional Globe" should be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those words will be stricken out to conform to the previous amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line one hundred and forty-nine, on page 7, the words "Congressional Globe and Appendix" should be stricken out, and "debates and proceedings of the House" inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made to make the bill uniform.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In lines one hundred and fifty-five and one hundred and fifty-six, on page 7, I move to strike out "Congressional Globe and Appendix" and to insert "debates and proceedings of the House;" in line one hundred and eighty-nine, on page 9, I move to strike out "in the Daily Globe" and to insert "of the House, daily;" and in line one hundred and ninety-three to strike out "for the Congressional Globe."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These alterations will be made to make the bill uniform.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer an additional section to complete this matter:

And be it further enacted, That the joint Committee on Public Printing be directed to invite proposals for the execution of the work now done in the publication of the Daily and Congressional Globe, and that the committee report whether the same may be done with greater accuracy by the Public Printer or by continuing the present arrangement, or by accepting some other proposal; and the committee is hereby authorized to contract with the publishers of the Globe for the publication of the debates of the first session of the next Congress at rates not exceeding those now paid.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be adopted because that assumes that there is no contract existing. I think that matter can be arranged hereafter without putting it on this appropriation bill. We are not ready for that yet. Some part of the provision I might be in favor of. I have no objection to an inquiry, but I do not wish it put in this form. I hope the Senator will withdraw it and offer it separately.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to offering it as a resolution; but I submitted it to the chairman of the Committee on Printing and he thought it ought to be done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It would be better to offer it as a resolution and let it go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to offer an amendment which is varied from one on the same subject formerly presented:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th day of June next the salaries of each of the judges of the Court of Claims shall be $4,500.

I desire to say a word or two in reference to this amendment. Since the vote was taken on the amendment I offered before, giving a salary of $5,000, I have looked into the statutes in reference to the Court of Claims. This court was established in 1855, and the salary then given was the same as it now stands, $4,000 a year. Every body understands that the expenses of living have doubled in that time.

In 1855, when this Court of Claims was established, members of this and of the other House of Congress received eight dollars a day during the session. Our pay was not raised to $3,000 a year till a year or two after that time. The Court of Claims at that time, and for some years, were simply a committee of Congress; their judgments were not final; they merely examined all cases that came before them and reported to Congress. There was no finality about their judgments, and no effectual responsibility about them, more than upon an ordinary master in chancery who reports a case to the court.

Since that time the law has been altered, so that the judgments of this court are conclusive, binding between the Government and the claimant; their jurisdiction has been very much enlarged; their duties are altogether more arduous than they were at that time. While the pay of the members of Congress at that time was eight dollars a day during the session, it has been raised to $5,000 a year—more than double what the members received at the time the salary of $4,000 was fixed for the judges of the Court of Claims. Their expenses have doubled in that time, their duties have doubled; and it seems to me that it is not asking too much to ask that $500 should be added to their pay when ours has been more than doubled in that time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The whole argument adduced with reference to the former amendment applies to this: it is raising salaries in another form. I think the Senate substantially decided that these salaries were about right as they are now: we had one debate upon it. I do not accede to the strength of the argument that because men have to work in a position you must therefore pay them more. If the salary of these judges was $4,000 some years ago, according to the Senator's statement, it was a great deal more than it ought to have been at that time. The question is whether it is not enough now in comparison with the salaries paid to other persons who perform duties which take their time as much as these. I hope this amendment will be voted down as decidedly as the other was.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The argument which was adduced before against $5,000 was that it was making a salary higher than that of the chief justice of the district. This places it at the same sum. It seems to me that the character of the service rendered by these judges is such that they should receive good, liberal compensation. Vast claims in which the Government is interested come before them to the amount of millions. There is no doubt that these judges will be a better character of men and will discharge their duties better receiving a proper compensation. There is something in the way a person is paid as to the manner in which he discharges his duties and the diligence with which he does it. I think the Government can well afford to pay judges who are competent to discharge such duties as those that are imposed upon this court $4,500. This subject was before the committee; it was considered carefully, and I hope the committee will be sustained in their report.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If we have men who do not discharge their duties well because they do not get as much money as they would like to have, if that is the argument, it is high time that we abolished the court and got rid of them, or got judges who would do their duty without regard to the amount of money they are paid.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That was not the argument. The suggestion I made was that the degree of diligence, the amount of wear and tear upon one's health that one will submit to, does depend something upon the obligations that receiving full compensation imposes on a person.

Mr. POLAND called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand this amendment comes from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the compensation is very moderate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senate votes down a good many amendments that come from the Committee on Finance, and that is considered no great imputation on them. I take it we have a right to differ from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Creswell, Doolittle, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Johnson, Patterson, Poland, Pomeroy, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Yates—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cragin, Davis, Fessenden, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Edmunds, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, and Riddle—16.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The title of the printed bill reads "1867" instead of "1868." I move to correct that; and to amend the title by adding "and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 276) directing the Secretary of War to furnish certain muster-rolls to the different States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA—VETO.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up the bill for the admission of Nebraska with the veto message accompanying it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 456) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union, which had been returned by the President of the United States with his objections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? It is a question that under the Constitution must be taken by the yeas and nays.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Hendricks, Morgan, Norton, Patterson, and Saulsbury—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Guthrie, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Nye, and Riddle—12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this question the yeas are 31 and the nays 9. Two thirds of the Senators present having voted for the bill, it is passed, notwithstanding the objections of the President, and will be sent to the House with the message of the President.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO—VETO.

Mr. WADE. I now move to take up the bill for the admission of Colorado. ["No, no."]

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understood that the Senator from Ohio was not going to call up that bill until we knew that it was coming up. He told me he would call up the Nebraska bill.

Mr. WADE. Very well; I will not insist upon the motion against the Senator's wishes. He has lived up to his contract; and if he thinks this is not embraced in it I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It was my understanding that the Nebraska bill would be called for, but not the Colorado bill.

Mr. WADE. I withdraw the motion, because I made an arrangement with the other side that they do not understand exactly as I did; but I want perfect fairness. I withdraw the motion.

LEAGUE ISLAND.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 452) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes and to dispense with and dispose of the existing yard at Philadelphia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 8, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MUSTER-ROLLS FOR STATES.

Mr. BLAINE, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to furnish certain muster-rolls to the different States; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It directs the Secretary of War to furnish, on the application of the adjutant general of any State, certified copies of the muster-in and muster-out rolls of any organization of volunteers from such State, serving in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, on the representation of such adjutant general that said rolls have not been returned to his department by United States mustering officers.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS.

Mr. WENTWORTH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to this House the amount of bonds issued to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and also to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with the date of their issue, and also the number of miles of road completed.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN CONVICTS.

Mr. RAYMOND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to prohibit the transportation from foreign countries to the United States of persons convicted of or charged with crime, and prescribing punishment therefor; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RAILROADS IN INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. SPALDING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to report to this House what railroad companies in the rebellious States have purchased rolling stock and other property of the United States Government after the surrender of the rebel army, the amount thus purchased in each individual case, the amount remaining unpaid, with the nature of the security held for the same; and that he further report what set-off, if any, the said companies or any of them profess to have against the United States Government, and its said claims, arising upon the sale of said railroad stock, &c.

ASSAY OF GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to establish certain offices for the assay of gold and silver; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

MEXICAN CATTLE DISEASE.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the nature, causes, and results of what is commonly known as Spanish fever or Texas cattle disease, and to report by bill or otherwise.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, one of his Secretaries.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. BALDWIN. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be directed to consider the expediency of amending the rules of the House so as to provide that when, on a call of the House after eight o'clock in the evening, it is found that a quorum is not present, the House shall immediately adjourn to meet on the next day at ten o'clock a. m.

Mr. RADFORD. I object.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The House then resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1143, to provide for the more effectual government of the insurrectionary States, upon which Mr. SHANKLIN was entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHANKLIN addressed the House for an hour. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to make a motion that speeches be limited to twenty minutes for the remaining discussion of this bill?

Mr. THAYER. I must decline in view of the engagements I have made in regard to my time.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to enter into any labored discussion of the particular details of this bill. Neither do I intend to debate the legal questions involved in its consideration. They have been already fully discussed on this and on other occasions. I wish to indicate, however, in as brief and concise a manner as I may, the views which operate upon my own mind in bringing me to the conclusion at which I have arrived, that it is my duty to vote for the measure now before the House.

Mr. Speaker, when the ship is among shoals and shallows a brisk breeze is preferable to a calm. I fear very much that in the present situation of public affairs we are drifting we know not whither upon that lifeless calm which has been created by the unfortunate dead-lock between the President and Congress.

Sir, I hail this measure as interrupting this baleful calm which, if not disturbed by a proper exercise of legislative power upon this subject, may be succeeded by disaster and collision. It furnishes at least an initial point from which we can start in the consideration and adjustment of the great question of reconstruction. I regard this as a measure which lays the grasp of Congress upon this great question, a grasp which is to hold on to it until it shall be finally settled. I regard it as a measure which is to take that great question out of that sea of embarrassment and sluggish inactivity in which, through the course which the President has thought proper to pursue, it now rests. Sir, the terms and conditions upon which this question is to be settled, belong, in my judgment, as I have had occasion to say on this floor, to the people who triumphed in the great struggle through which we have passed, and the only organ of the people in the making of that settlement, and in the enunciation of these terms and conditions, is the body composed of their Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled. I deny that it is just or expedient that the attitude which is now maintained on the part of the several parties to that recent struggle should continue any longer. I deny that it is either politic or just that the attitude of the United States toward the revolted communities which were lately engaged in the rebellion should any longer remain of that doubtful character which now and for some months past it has worn.

Sir, the people of the United States who were triumphant in this great struggle will not submit to be placed upon terms of equality with their late enemies in negotiating and settling the terms upon which rebel States may be restored to power and authority in the Union. They will in some way or other vindicate and establish their own right to settle those terms and conditions in spite of the hostility of those who were lately in organized rebellion against the Government, and in spite also of the machinations and conspiracies of the public agents who have betrayed them.

It was conceded everywhere at the termination of the armed struggle between the rebellious States and the United States that the settlement of the terms and conditions upon which the people of those States should be restored to power and participation in the Government must of necessity rest with the people of the loyal States who had stood faithfully and resolutely by the Government of the United States, and who had carried it triumphantly to victory through seas of blood and under mountains of debt.

The President of the United States himself, it is a matter of public notoriety, conceded this position. He publicly announced in his proclamations and his official communications upon this subject that whatever might be done by executive authority, under the pressure of existing necessity, for the restoration of order in the rebellious States, must be subject to the revision and ratification of Congress. He did not then pretend to arrogate to himself the exclusive control of this great question, or the power which belongs, under the Constitution of this country, to the representatives of the people. He had not then the temerity to set up any such claim of power. The subject was remitted by him to Congress to approve or to disapprove the temporary governments which he had undertaken to establish in the rebellious States. But the attitude of the President of the United States has undergone a most tremendous and startling change. The President now denies that power to Congress which he once distinctly and specifically conceded. The President now claims, it would seem, the power to enter into negotiations with the Governors of those States, and to settle with them the terms upon which the people of those States are to be restored to their political relations.

Sir, a most extraordinary spectacle is now presented to the country; it is the spectacle of the President of the United States, who has by the Constitution no authority whatever on this question, undertaking, in conference with persons from the rebel States, who lately were active participants in the rebellion itself, to arrange terms of accommodation between the people of those States and the people of the loyal States. He is, if we are to credit public statements which are not contradicted now, engaged in consultations with leading men from the revolted section who influence the public mind and control the political movements of that region; not for the purpose of carrying out the demands of the people, which were made through their representatives in Congress at its last session, and which were ratified by overwhelming majorities in the loyal States at the recent elections; but in order to frame some new plan, to contrive some new scheme, not in accordance with the scheme presented by Congress and indorsed by the people, but such as will square with his own wishes, his own prejudices, his own intentions—I will not say his own pledges.

The President of the United States in his annual message recommends that "Congress should hasten to bring legislation within the boundaries prescribed by the Constitution." He grossly charges the Congress of the United States with unconstitutional legislation. The people of this country have passed upon that slandered legislation; they have given it their sanction, and have announced at the ballot-box their determination to abide by and enforce it. That is the answer, the sufficient and conclusive answer by Congress to the charge of unconstitutional legislation.

But how does the matter stand with regard to the accuser? How does the matter stand with regard to the President himself, who makes against Congress this charge of unconstitutional legislation? Let him show where he gets the authority to enter into conferences, secret or public, with the late leaders of the rebellion, to arrange terms for the settlement of this question. Let him put his finger upon that part of the Constitution which authorizes his intermeddling with it at all, except merely to express his approval or disapproval of the acts which may be passed by Congress. Yet, sir, the extraordinary condition of affairs to which I have alluded exists, in which, notwithstanding the people have decided upon and ratified the plan of Congress, namely, the adoption of the constitutional amendment proposed at the last session as a prerequisite to restoration, the President persists in his negotiations with those who were lately the public and armed enemies of the country.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THAYER. I cannot yield now; my time is brief, and I have promised to give a portion of it to other gentlemen who desire to speak.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Only a question.

Mr. THAYER. The gentleman must excuse me. I must insist upon being allowed to proceed without any interruption.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this measure, because I believe it is calculated to lift this great question out of that sluggish slough into which it has fallen by reason of the conduct of the President of the United States in setting himself up in opposition to the will of the people upon this subject. We proposed one measure of reconstruction. The President opposed it, although he had no constitutional authority or power to interfere. The question, therefore, remains not only unsettled, but apparently as far removed from settlement as it was at the adjournment of the last session. The President continues his machinations and his consultations; the rebellious States continue obdurate and defiant; Congress remains passive and inactive, and the country is as far as ever from the security and repose which it demands.

We have adopted no measures which furnish even an initial point from which to start afresh in the settlement of the question at issue, which, if it ever be settled, must be settled here, for only here can laws be made for the Government of the United States. The measure under consideration proposes to grasp the control of this great question, and to hold on to it, until it is finally determined and settled upon such terms as shall be agreeable to the people of the United States, acting by their chosen Representatives in Congress. We will not submit to enter into treaty as equals with those who brought on the war, with those who initiated and brought upon the country the endless and innumerable calamities which follow in the train of the war.

Without regard to any question of political casuistry, turning upon the question of States in the Union or States out of the Union, one thing let gentlemen depend upon, that the people, who do not appreciate these fine metaphysical distinctions, will and do insist that this question shall be settled, not by the rebellious States, not by the President of the United States, but by their own immediate Representatives, and upon such terms as they the people may through those Representatives dictate to a subdued and beaten enemy.

Sir, nobody I suppose regards this bill as a reconstruction bill. It is not a reconstruction bill; but it is a bill the effect of which will be to assert within the rebel States the authority and supremacy of the United States. It is a bill which will convince those people that they must submit to such terms as the loyal people of the United States through their Representatives in this body may choose to propound, and not to such terms as they may beg or buy from the President of the United States. It is of no consequence to this body what the President of the United States thinks upon this subject. This question is removed from his jurisdiction by the Constitution. It is a question above and beyond him. He has nothing to do with it. It belongs here. It is the people's question, and belongs to us as the agents and immediate Representatives of the people.

The bill under consideration proposes to assert the presence and the living power of the United States in the region which was lately the scene of the rebellion. It does not propose, as I understand it, to do away with the local governments, to abolish the courts, (whether they have been established lawfully or unlawfully,) to reduce the people of that section, as has been said, to subjection to military despotism; but it proposes to erect there an appellate power, strong and irresistible, to which the down-trodden and persecuted Union men of the South may appeal from the injustice and the outrage of their enemies and persecutors. It proposes to enforce everywhere in the southern States the authority of the United States. It proposes to protect all men there in the enjoyment of their inalienable rights, and it proposes to do this by this means only until such laws can be made and such arrangements consummated as will place the future safety and peace of the country upon immovable foundations, and secure permanent protection and immunity from wrong to the loyal men in that region, who are now subjected to persecutions and wrongs for which they have no redress and against which they have no shield. No one contemplates that this shall be a permanent measure. It is of a temporary character and is demanded by present exigencies. Its object and aim is to guaranty present protection and equal justice to the Union men of the South. It is to prevent assassination, murder, robbery, arson, banishment, and all that long catalogue of cruelties to which the Union men and the freedmen of the South are, as is shown by overwhelming evidence adduced before the committee which reported this bill, subjected, without remedy and without redress. It is impossible that we shall abandon them any longer to the cruel fate to which they have been subjected. This bill proposes to extend to them the only protection which we can at present give them. It proposes to protect them by the strong arm of power until they shall be protected by equal laws and just and impartial tribunals.

Beyond this, the bill proposes no "oppression." If it be "oppression" to guaranty universal liberty and equality under the law, and to afford protection to those who have for their true allegiance been driven from their homes and many of whom have shed their blood in the cause of the Union, then this is oppressive. It is not oppressive in any other sense.

Sir, when the authority of the United States is once firmly established in that region, and when it is understood throughout the length and breadth of that country that the United States will protect from outrage all its citizens there, and that this question of reconstruction is to be determined and settled by the body to whom it belongs—by the Congress of the United States, and when that is acquiesced in, as it must be acquiesced in before any reconstruction can take place, the way to reconstruction will be swift and sure. But it is a point from which we can begin. The question is as it were, through the course being pursued by the President, floating away from us. We must reclaim it. We must lay hands upon it; and we must, in the name and on behalf of the loyal people of this country, hold on to it until it is settled upon our terms and at our dictation.

Sir, this measure will be of brief duration and will be followed, as I am informed, by other measures, which will secure the permanent and peaceful restoration of these States to their proper and just position in the Union, upon their acceptance of such terms as are necessary for the future security of the country. When that is done, and when order is restored and permanent protection is guarantied to all citizens in that section of the country, this measure will be abrogated and abandoned. In the reconstruction which is to ensue it is not intended to ask them to accept anything which we will not accept ourselves. The same law, the same rights, the same powers, which belong to us will belong to them. We shall not seek to make one law for them and another law for ourselves. But we intend, at the proper time, when the authority of Congress to settle this question is once recognized, and when equal justice and equal protection is secured to all, to propose such terms as will insure uniform liberty, uniform justice, and uniform protection throughout the length and breadth of the whole land.

Mr. Speaker, I yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARDING.]

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I cordially accord with those gentlemen who have expressed their approval of the purposes and objects of the bill now before the House. I represent a constituency who are second to no constituency in this Union in their devotion to the cause of the Union and the cause of freedom, and in their firm determination that, cost whatever it may of treasure or of blood, they will maintain the rights of the citizens of the United States against lawlessness and crime. Those are the declared objects of this bill.

I do not deem it necessary—I regard it as worse than useless—to discuss the issue of fact upon which depends the conclusion that there is a necessity for the passage of this bill. From all quarters the evidence is satisfactory to my mind that during the last two years this Congress has been derelict in respect to measures which should give protection to the faithful men of the late rebellious States, the men who struggled along with us, and who suffered more than us for the preservation of the Union.

The practical effect of this measure, if adopted without the least amendment, places us, in my opinion, where we were at that period, since the death of the lamented Lincoln, when the policy of protecting the Union men of the South was departed from. For more than a year, if my recollection is correct, and I think for a year and a half, after the termination of hostilities before Richmond and the surrender of all the martial forces of the enemy, we held jurisdiction and authority over the entire South by military power. It is true, sir, whether we were conquerors or not, we had control to assert the jurisdiction, the constitutional authority of the United States in the exercise of the war power. This bill proposes nothing more, nothing less.

If it were proper to maintain the power of the President over those States for so long a period, how is this measure so fatal to liberty now? If there is an officer in the service, the civil service so called, if there is a court there exercising jurisdiction relative to the rights of the people, it is all done under the authority, express or implied, of this Congress. As the conqueror by sufferance we have recognized the acts of these courts. However illegally constituted as civil government, still by sufferance we have recognized them; and whenever the conqueror chooses their municipal regulations can be wiped out and the local institutions removed. These local governments can be removed and ought to be removed. They ought to have been removed long ago. Out of regard to proper protection to loyal citizens they ought to have been in the grasp of the military power long ago.

For our neglect to exert the military power of the Government we are responsible for the blood and suffering which disgrace this Republic. I think this is the best measure that has been offered for the relief of the loyal people who have been and are still suffering so much in the South. I will vote any amount of men and money. I will strain the ship of state till all her timbers crack rather than give up the loyal people of the South to the murderous fury of their enemies. I have no fear but we have constitutional power to direct the commanding general to perform this duty. He is an executive officer of the law. I know we have the power, and I am in favor of exerting it.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TRIMBLE] thinks, although the general in command has the power to appoint all these officers, the President can pervert this bill from the purposes intended. No, sir, he cannot. It is intended to protect the liberty and property of the loyal citizens. He cannot put a man at the head of any department to pervert the object of this measure. If he attempted it the thing would be as great treason as anything we have heard of. But I have no fear but when you give explicit directions to him or to any subaltern the laws will be executed.

We have arrived on this bill, sir, at the point from which we diverged. We establish the necessary supervising power over the people recently subdued. Let us go back, then, or rather let us come up to where we were before, and exercise jurisdiction over the territory conquered from the rebels, which jurisdiction the President has given up to those rebels, to the great suffering and injury of the Government and of loyal people.

Mr. THAYER. I now yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.]

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity to explain the reasons for the vote I shall give on this important measure, and in what I have to say I shall not go much beyond that.

Now, if I agreed with the other side of this House in regard to the state of fact and the resulting state of law that is now upon our country, I would most heartily and thoroughly agree with them that it would not only be incompetent but monstrous for us to pass this bill into law on the state of facts assumed by my friends on the other side of the House: that we are in a state of profound peace, that there is peace in every sense of the word all over the Republic in the civil administration of the law; that the courts are open everywhere, and redress for violence and wrong can be obtained. I say if that is the state of the Republic we must not pass this bill.

Your Constitution, with that strange wisdom that amounts to inspiration, which, as we go along in these turbulent times, only excites more and more the admiration of every right-thinking man, has foreseen and provided for the exact state of the country which is now, alas! upon us. In that provision of your Constitution to which I now allude, and which is the one touching the suspension of the habeas corpus, the framers of the instrument provided for and have indicated what the duties of the hour are. Whenever in time of rebellion or of invasion the public safety requires that the privileges of that writ shall be suspended, it becomes not only the right, but the duty of the Government of the United States, either Congress or the Executive—and for the purposes of this inquiry it makes no difference whether the power be lodged in the President or in Congress—to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. That is this bill in all its scope and effect, and nothing beyond that. The bill assumes that the Republic is in a condition of rebellion when the public safety requires that the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus shall be suspended, because the courts are unable to administer the law. Now, if we are mistaken in that fact, then this bill must be wrong, as indeed must every other conceivable method of reconstruction.

Now, let me remind learned gentlemen—for there are learned gentlemen on the other side of this House and as patriotic as those on this side—that every work on international law contemplates, recognizes, and provides for two states of war, namely: one in which it is flagrant and the other in which it is cessante, in the technical language of the books. The latter condition of things (I simply state the fact to be so, without, of course, stopping now to argue and prove it) is now upon the country, in which a rebellion is simply crushed by war, by the arms of the Republic, but is still sufficiently strong to overthrow and defy the courts in nearly half the territories of the Republic. That is state of war cessante; that is a state of things contemplated by your Constitution, and, thank God, the wise men who framed the Constitution provided for the case. The duties of the hour require that we should see to it that this mighty reserved force of your Government, lodged in the ultimate powers of war, shall be brought into play for the preservation of the life of your Republic. That is all there is of it. If I mistake the fact, then my law goes. If that is not the condition of the country, then we must abandon the bill.

Now, in the few minutes that have kindly been accorded to me I want to make a suggestion or two in regard to the detailed objections that are made to the provisions of this bill. They are every one of them worthy of consideration, and I desire to give to them that careful and kind attention that their value entitles them to in the twenty minutes that are allowed to me.

First, it is said that this is an assumption of the powers of the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and that it is incompetent for Congress to indicate to any portion of the military forces of the Government a particular or specific duty that the Congress shall require to be done. Let me suggest to the gentlemen on the other side that if they will analyze that idea they will abandon it in the frankness that is due to so great discussions as we are now upon. Let me remind them now of some examples in the history of our own legislation where in principle the identical thing has been done by law that this bill proposes.

Take, for instance, this;—and I have hunted up these examples only this morning, taking them at random; thousands of others like them might be selected. The act of February 11, 1807, orders that vessels of war in actual service shall go into a specified service of the Government of the United States, namely, the coast survey. Now, I ask the gentlemen on the other side is that interfering with the prerogative of the President of the United States as Commander-in-Chief of the Navy? Every gentleman says no instantly. Well, why not? The President is the Commander-in-Chief; why is it that he cannot disregard a requirement of Congress that commands him to detail or send forth a portion of the Navy into a particular service?

Take another example. In the act of 1832 relating to the same service, it is expressly provided that such proportion of the land and naval forces of the United States as may be requisite for the execution of that service shall be detailed for that purpose. Now, suppose the President of the United States should say: "I am the Commander-in-Chief of the Navy: you are assuming my powers, and I will not execute that law." I would like to know whether the President would not be liable to impeachment; and whether there is any gentleman on this floor who denies that liability?

Another example. The act of May 14, 1836, provides that the President shall send a sloop-of-war, for purposes of exploration, into the South sea, into the Pacific ocean; what is commonly known as the Wilkes' exploring expedition. Suppose the President had disregarded that requirement of law, would that not have clearly been a violation of his duties as the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy?

I will now refer to another and a more striking example, because it is a case exactly like the one now before the House. It is a case where Congress, by act and operation of law, undertook to detail a portion of the Army of the United States to a particular territory for the purpose of enforcing the laws of Congress. I allude to various acts of Congress, one of which is as old as 1797, May 19, and which have been running through our legislation ever since. In every one of those acts it is provided that within the Indian Territories the President of the United States shall be authorized and required to use the armies of the United States for the purpose of executing the laws of Congress.

Now, I have alluded to these examples for the purpose of bringing to the minds of gentlemen this great fact: that the President of the United States is indeed the commander of the armies and navies of the United States. But in your desire to follow the Constitution of the United States you must not stop there; but you must also remember that the armies and navies of the United States are made the instruments of the Government for the execution of its laws. It is the business of the Government, of the political powers of the country, to make those laws; and then the Constitution has provided armies and navies for their execution. And the President in command of those armies and navies must command them so as to secure the execution of the laws.

But gentlemen say that after you have sent your military officers into those insurrectionary States for the purposes of government and protection, the President, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, may take them all away again and thus defeat your laws. So he might have taken away the naval officers from the exploring expedition; so he may take away any portion of your naval forces which you may order to clean out your harbors and the mouths of your rivers. But suppose he does it; then comes in that other reserved force and power of your Constitution, by which, if it is done wantonly and for the purpose of defeating the provisions of the acts of Congress, your President is impeachable.

Now, it does seem to me that if gentlemen will only bear in mind these leading ideas, then all the fogs which surround this subject will disappear. Let it be remembered all the time that your country has a right to its life, and that the powers of your Government are given for its preservation. Let it be remembered that one portion of your Republic has fallen into a state of rebellion, and is still in a state of war against your Government, and that the powers of the Government are to be exercised for the purposes of the protection and the defense of the loyal and the disloyal too, in that part of the Republic; and that for the purpose of that defense you are authorized to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, and to exercise such extraordinary powers as are necessary to the preservation of the great life of the nation. Let these things be remembered; and then let it also be remembered that the law-making power of the Government not only controls the President but controls the purposes and the ends and the objects of war, and, of course, the movements of the armies that are to be employed in war. Let these things be remembered; and it seems to me that all the difficulties with which it is sought to surround this measure will at once disappear.

Now, the only other suggestion which I desire to make, and it is one which I wish to make, is that this measure taken alone is one which I could not support unaccompanied by provisions for the rapid and immediate establishment of civil governments, based upon the suffrages of the loyal people of the South. I could not support a military measure like this, that was to be regarded at all as permanent in its character.

It is because it is only the initiative, because it is only the employment of the armies of the United States as a mere police force to preserve order until we can establish civil governments. based upon the loyal suffrages of the people there, that I can support this measure at all. If it stood by itself and were designed to be permanent I could not, with my notions of the possibility and the practicability of establishing civil governments in the South based upon loyal suffrages, vote for this bill.

Mr. DAWES. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio, I desire to get his views upon a single point. I agree with the gentleman that the President of the United States is, under the Constitution, the commander of the Army and the Navy, but that the law-making power is here; and I understand this bill to be proposed because this Congress has confidence in the officers of the Army. Without such confidence I suppose we never would contemplate for a moment putting into the hands of the General of the Army the vast powers proposed to be intrusted to him by the bill.

Now, the question which I wish to put to the gentleman from Ohio is an inquiry practical in its application to this bill. The second section of the bill provides—

That it shall be the duty of the General of the Army to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the regular Army, not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

Now, I concur with the framers of this bill in the confidence they repose in the General of the Army that he will appoint to this duty men in whom we shall have confidence. In the hands of one man the powers to be exercised under this bill might be an engine of terrible evil; while under the control of another man the exercise of these powers might be productive of most beneficent results. But, Mr. Speaker, the inquiry I desire to have answered is this: the moment the General of the Army has under this bill assigned a competent and trustworthy officer to the duties prescribed in the bill, what is to hinder the President of the United States, in virtue of his power as Commander-in-Chief, from removing that officer and putting in his place another of an opposite character, thus making the very instrumentality we provide one of terrible evil?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that my friend from Massachusetts has suggested to my mind a difficulty to which I had intended to allude, but which I omitted to notice in my haste to get through and give a portion of my time to my friend from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS.] The gentleman inquires whether the President, in virtue of his constitutional power as Commander-in-Chief, would not be able to remove any officer who might, under this bill, be assigned to a particular district by the General of the Army. Answering that question according to my own convictions now, I say "yes." But then I remind my intelligent friend from Massachusetts that Congress has again and again done the identical thing which we propose to do by this bill. We have assigned officers of the Army to particular duties.

Mr. DAWES. I do not doubt the power, Mr. Speaker; I agree with my friend on that point.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Take the act of August, 1852, to be found in Brightley's Digest, page 151. That law provides that lieutenants in the Army, graduates of West Point, shall be sent to the coast survey. Now, the President could command that those lieutenants should not go there. If he did so in pursuance of duty, to meet the exigencies of the public service in a time of war, he would be justified as well by the Constitution as by the fact. But suppose that in time of peace he should disregard and wantonly refuse to execute that provision of the law, then he would render himself liable to impeachment, just as, according to Mr. Madison, the wanton exercise by the President of the power of removal from office which he believed the President to possess, would be a good ground for an impeachment.

Mr. RAYMOND obtained the floor, and yielded ten minutes to

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible in ten minutes to express my views on this bill. I cannot do myself justice in that time, and I will only say this: that Congress during the present session has taken no step in advance in relation to the protection of the loyal people of the southern States. And I would ask gentlemen on this side of the House whether we are to-day obeying the mandate of the people? What carried our elections overwhelmingly in the last campaign? It was the story of the southern refugees told to the people of the North and the West. They told us they demanded protection. They enlisted the sympathy of northern soldiers by telling that the very guerrillas who hung upon the skirts of our Army during the war were now murdering southern soldiers who fought on the Union side, and murdering peaceful citizens, murdering black men who were our allies. We promised the people if we were indorsed we would come back here and protect them, and yet not a step has been taken. When a proposition is introduced, a man jealous he did not bring it in himself says it is beginning at the wrong end, and when the other end is taken it is declared to be beginning at the wrong end again. And so we are prevented from taking a step in advance.

If we adjourn on the 4th of March next, as we will have to, without taking some such step, all hope is gone. The Fortieth Congress will not do anything until after another election, and gentlemen who were indorsed at the last election will find themselves receiving a different verdict from the people. The people will show their dissatisfaction that the measure which was promised had not been passed. There will be at the beginning of the Fortieth Congress sixteen States unrepresented and very little will be done in the absence of those States.

If I could be indulged, I would like to say something about the features of this bill. Let me say first this bill repudiates those pretended and bogus governments set up at the South; that is, the preamble repudiates them and that is always taken to give construction to the law; and in the second place the plain terms of the bill repudiate them:

And all legislative or judicial proceedings, or processes to prevent or control the proceedings of said military tribunals, and all interference by said pretended State governments with the exercise of military authority under this act, shall be void and of no effect.

Stronger language could not be used to effect the very object proclaimed time and again in this discussion; but it seems all the patriotism there has been exerted is the declaration, for when we come to act there is a shrinking. The loyal men of the South, if this does not pass, are to go on appealing to us in vain.

This bill places these Territories under military control, and there is where they ought to be. Let me ask what is the necessity of this bill placing these Territories under military control when it is alleged that the military now have sufficient authority? I grant it that the law is sufficient to-day were it not for the construction the President places upon it. The President himself recognizes these rebel States as having perfect powers like any loyal State represented here.

With that construction the military law at present is insufficient. We have got to get rid by our legislation of the effect given by the President to the decision of the Supreme Court. If these States have now these full powers and rights as he declares—and they have if the decision of the Supreme Court is applicable to them—it is very evident that we have no law now to reach their case, and the present military authority is insufficient.

Another objection that is made to this is, that we send the military there in advance of the civil governments. In my humble opinion that is an absolute necessity. "Place the Army there, and then when we send our civil governments there the power will be there to protect them. The Army will pave the way. We might as well have sent civil governments there at the outset of the rebellion instead of the Army, as to send them there now. I need not appeal to facts to substantiate what I say. They are patent; every child that reads knows that what I say is true. We want the Army, the military power, there, and then civil authority can go there in safety.

You had a few days ago a bill to establish civil governments there. This House was asked to vote upon it, but a majority said, No, we will not vote for it, but will send it back to the Committee on Reconstruction. We sent it to that committee, and they have reported back a bill establishing military authority there as an absolute necessity under the circumstances of the case. Now, are we going to tell them, "You have not reported back the bill referred to you but another and a different measure, and we will defeat this and keep on defeating any measure you report until the time will arrive when we shall be defeated?"

Mr. Speaker, already the rebel leaders, as of old, are dictating terms to this Government upon which they will submit to the Constitution and the laws, and the President is reported as abandoning his own policy and like former Presidents yielding to their dictation. Mark you, the people will have something done. What the rebels propose is better than nothing, and if we adopt no practical plan we shall have to do as we have always done heretofore until the rebellion commenced and the spirit of the North was aroused, we shall have to accept terms at the hands of the rebel leaders. We have it now in our power to reject their terms and prescribe such as we have the right and the authority to do.

There is another objection made to this bill, that it recognizes the civil courts of these rebellious, bogus governments. That is a mistake; the bill only recognizes as civil tribunals the Federal courts, and it places them in subordination to military power. And let me say that in my opinion all authority in these States should be subordinate to the bayonet and the sword. They are the only effective weapons we can send there. We send our missionaries and teachers there and we allow these rebels to murder them. The best missionaries we can send there now are the sword and the bayonet. Suspend these over their heads and keep them in check until we can send civil authority there. Let us have that protection there first, and then let us discuss the question what kind of civil government we shall establish. Extend to the loyal people of the South such protection as we now have at our command. We can then deliberate without danger to the lives of our southern allies, and perfect measures of reconstruction unembarrassed by threats or fears of rebel insurrection or unrestrained violence.

Mr. RAYMOND. I now yield to my colleague [Mr. GRISWOLD] ten minutes of my time.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, if I should feel constrained to vote against this bill, I feel it my duty to state the reasons that occur to my mind for that action. I shall regret to feel compelled to vote against it, because in doing so I shall be at variance in opinion with those who I believe have at heart the best interest of the whole country. I fully sympathize with the object aimed at by this bill. I recognize fully the condition of things existing in these rebellious States, in which I am constrained to believe the rights and liberties of loyal men, both white and black, are totally ignored, and I am perfectly willing to concede the necessity for the interposition of the national Government toward the protection of that class of citizens there.

But, sir, while I could concede that necessity and appreciate that condition of things, it seems to me that the provisions of this bill will lead us into greater danger than is justifified by the evils we seek to correct. It is, Mr. Speaker, a tremendous stride that we propose to make by this bill to subject to military control ten million people who have once been partners of this common country, and who are to be united with us in its future trials and fortunes. This bill proposes to place all the rights of life, liberty, and happiness exclusively in the control of a mere military captain.

Sir, I regard that as a terrible danger to this country. Nothing but a state of war, absolute and unquestioned, can justify a preponderance of the military over the civil authorities of this country. And with all due deference to the learned gentlemen who have discussed this question, I say that the practical sense of the civilized world will not bear out the idea that we are to-day in a state of absolute war.

If that is not the case, then I submit to those gentlemen that we are making a very dangerous experiment when we subject to mere military authority those ten million people with all their rights and interests. If I understand the character of this bill it does nothing more nor less than to declare martial law over all this territory. If I read it aright, it does not recognize the civil tribunals of that portion of the country. It simply provides that the officer in charge may allow the civil authority to take jurisdiction of certain cases; but the action of that civil authority is to be entirely subject to the discretion of the military officer who chances at the time to be the officer commanding that department. I say, then, that all the civil tribunals of this country are unconditionally and unequivocally ignored and repudiated by this bill. Even the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, acting plainly within the scope of his official authority, has no right to interfere except with the consent and approbation of a lieutenant, perhaps, of the Army.

Now, I appeal to my friends on the other side of the House, as well as to those upon this side, whether we ought not to be cautious before putting such a terrible power into hands that are so irresponsible. There is to be no appeal from the decision of the military authorities. The decision of the officer commanding the department is to be final. No civil tribunal can be appealed to to interfere; but a merely military officer is to have the final and irreversible decision of all cases, whether they grow out of the civil rights, the political rights, the rights of property, or any of the other rights or privileges of these ten million people.

I have another objection to this bill, and that is, that by it we are proceeding in the wrong direction. For more than two years we have been endeavoring to provide civil governments for that portion of our country, and yet by the provisions of this bill we turn our backs upon the policy of the past two years, and at one stride seek to place all that territory under an exclusively military instead of under a civil government. This bill contains no provisions for the establishment in the future of civil governments there. It simply provides that for an indefinite period in the future a purely military power shall have exclusive control and jurisdiction there. That is, therefore, to me another and a very serious objection to this bill.

I am ready to concede the integrity, wisdom, ability, and sense of justice of our officers of the Army. I yield to no one in my admiration of those men who by their valor and their bravery have carried this country through these years of terrible danger and strife. But I do not forget that Army officers are still but human; that they are subject to the same influences that other men are; and that the same appliances and considerations will have influence with officers of the Army that have influence with men in other positions of life. And when such power is to be conferred upon a mere lieutenant of the Army as I have indicated will be conferred by this bill, a power which I maintain should be conferred upon no man or class of men, it cannot be said that it is any disparagement of our Army officers if I say it should not be committed to them; the mere fact of their being Army officers certainly is not sufficient to remove the objection on that point.

For one, I prefer for the present to stand by the overtures which we have made to those people as conditions of their again participating in the government of this country. We have placed before them the conditions which the civilized world has indorsed as liberal, magnanimous, and just. I regret exceedingly that those very liberal terms have not been accepted by them. But, Mr. Speaker, I prefer standing and waiting for the development of events to taking a step which I fear may be regarded as being in the wrong direction. I prefer giving those States further opportunity to exhibit a spirit of obedience and loyalty, hoping that in the event of their continued repudiation of the proffer which has been made to them we may devise some measure less dangerous, less liable to serious objection, than the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the question even from a party point of view I do not forget this one other consideration: so long as the party that now controls the political destinies of this country shall retain its power, so long as the people of this country shall have confidence in the integrity and patriotism of that party, so long, in spite of anything that may be done either at the North or the South, shall we be able to control for the right this question of reconstruction.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss this general subject in any formal manner, but merely to make a few remarks, which I fear will prove rather desultory, upon the necessity which has arisen for some action on our part, and upon the character of the action it is now proposed that we shall take.

There is, I think, no sentiment more deeply rooted in the public mind at the present moment than that of the necessity and the duty of extending full, ample, just protection to those men throughout the southern States who stood by the flag of the Union when it was imperiled, whatever may be their race or color. As my colleague [Mr. HORCKISS] has already stated, the public mind in the northern States was enlightened and excited upon this subject during the recent autumnal canvass. Many of those loyal men from the southern States came among us and related the story of their wrongs and their sufferings; and wherever they spoke they awoke a generous and hearty response to the demands which they made for sympathy and protection.

I fear, sir, it is also true, lamentably true, that there exists a necessity for some interposition on the part of the General Government to secure to those classes of our fellow-citizens the protection to which they have a just and a rightful claim. I cannot shut my eyes to the testimony which has been adduced on every side, the testimony not only of observers who were in the southern States in no official capacity, disinterested and interested observers alike, but the testimony also of those in official position, and therefore qualified to speak with special knowledge and impartiality upon this precise point. This testimony, I think, can leave no doubt in the public mind, as it certainly leaves none in mine, that there is a necessity for some measure of protection to the people of the southern States. I think it is clear that life, liberty, and property are not properly guarded by law, are not safe throughout those southern States. They are not properly protected by the courts and judicial tribunals of those States. They are not properly protected by the civil authorities that are in possession of political power in those States. I think it is also but just to say that much of this default is directly traceable to the prevalence in the South of a temper not friendly to the General Government of the United States which we represent. It is undoubtedly true that there is a lingering rebellious temper in the southern States, and out of that temper arises the necessity for protection, which we are now called upon to consider.

Now, sir, admitting the necessity which thus exists, the next question that comes before us is, how can this protection which we owe to them be best afforded? Is this bill the proper measure for such an emergency? Does this bill provide the necessary means of protecting those classes in the southern States most in harmony with the spirit of our institutions best calculated to attain the objects sought? In a word, is it a measure which, on the whole, it is wise for us to adopt?

The character of the bill may be stated in a very few words. It is a simple abnegation of all attempts for the time to protect the people in the southern States by the ordinary exercise of civil authority. It hands over all authority in those States to officers of the Army of the United States, and clothes them as officers of the Army with complete, absolute, unrestricted power to administer the affairs of those States according to their sovereign will and pleasure. Gentlemen may say that those officers are there to enforce the laws and protect the rights of the people secured to them by law. What laws, what rights, what statutes, define the rights which these officers of the Army are to protect the people in enjoying? Not the laws of those States, for those States are discarded, and their authority to make law at all is expressly repudiated. Not the laws of the United States, for there is no law of the United States to punish larceny, felony, murder, or crime of any sort. There is no law of the United States to enforce contracts or to regulate the relations of individuals as members of the community, as citizens of the States in which they live, and those States are not allowed to make such laws. There are no laws to be enforced, there are no rights defined by law to be protected by the officers of the Army whom we send into those districts. They themselves make the laws, as well as enforce them. They and they alone define the rights they are to protect.

The third section of the bill is explicit and precise on that point. It says:

It shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals—according to their own judgment of rights and of laws. That is not in the bill, but that is the necessary inference, because no other provision is made. There is nothing to specify what is the peace they are to maintain; what are the crimes they are to punish; what are the contracts they are to enforce. We send a brigadier general into each one of the five military departments created by this bill to be absolute sovereign over all its people, to issue his decrees as their law, and to enforce his will as in all cases their rule of action.

Gentlemen will all admit that is an extreme measure, the most extreme measure which can possibly be enacted by this Congress or by any legislative body in the world. No legislative body can do more. Can there be any higher exercise of authority than to clothe a solitary individual with absolute power, authority, and control over millions of men; to give him power at once to prescribe the law and to enforce it?

Now, Mr. Speaker, is there a necessity which calls for this? Is the emergency so absolute that we must enact such a law as this? The able and learned gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] who spoke a few moments ago on this point, insisted that it was made the duty of Congress by the Constitution to suspend the writ of habeas corpus under certain contingencies, and that such action was all this law contemplated. I do not think that is all this bill contemplates. As I have already attempted to show, the law extends far beyond that when it clothes an individual Army officer with power to make laws for the people over whom he is placed in command. Is it the duty in an unqualified sense, is it the absolute duty of Congress to suspend the writ of habeas corpus even in such an emergency? The gentleman referred to the Constitution, reciting it as if it read "Congress shall suspend," the habeas corpus in certain contingencies or in case of war. It would be with the greatest hesitation that I should attempt to correct so able a lawyer as the gentleman from Ohio on a question of constitutional law, but where it is a matter of simple quotation from its terms I may venture to set him right.

The Constitution, sir, nowhere imposes upon Congress the duty of suspending the writ of habeas corpus under any contingency. It provides that the habeas corpus shall not be suspended except in a certain contingency. What is that contingency? The gentleman said it was when war prevailed, and he insisted that war prevails now in the southern States, not "flagrant" war, but war in the legal sense of the word. I suppose he intended to refer to the distinction which publicists and writers on the laws of war recognize in this respect, one of which is actual, raging war, and the state that follows such a war before peace has been legally restored, and which is described in technical phrase as bello non flagrante sed nondum cessante. But neither phrase describes the present condition of the southern States. War is not raging—it is not "flagrant," and it has ceased—ceased in fact and in the contemplation of law. The state of war has been ended and the state of peace has been restored by proclamation of the President, issued by authority of law. In no sense, therefore, does war exist in the South to-day. It is ended in every sense, in legal sense, in every international sense, in the sense of the Constitution, in the sense in which it is used by every writer on the subject that can be found.

It cannot be, therefore, on the ground that war prevails there that we have a right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. The case is made specific by the language of the Constitution:

"The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended except when in cases of invasion or rebellion the public safety may require it."

In that case the Government is clothed with the power to suspend the writ. Now, there is no invasion in the South and there is no rebellion in the South in any such sense as menaces the public safety—by which is meant, of course, the safety of the nation. The gentleman once or twice said in this connection that the life of the nation is at stake. Not certainly in any large or general sense is that true. By remote inference we may say when any single man is deprived of life or property, except by due process of law, that the life of the nation, that is the constitutional legal life of the nation, is to that extent impaired and endangered. But certainly that would not justify us in saying that the life, the existence of the nation is at stake. The public safety is not so endangered as to justify a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. Private rights are undoubtedly jeopardized in the southern States to-day. The lives of individual citizens are not adequately protected; the liberty and property of individuals are insecure; but it can only be by a strange or forced construction that we can say that the public safety is therefore so far in danger as either to constitute a state of war, or to authorize the suspension of the privilege of habeas corpus.

But I do not intend to argue the legal points of the question. It is a large question, and it has already been fully canvassed. In my opinion there has not occurred an emergency which justifies a resort to this extreme remedy.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] says the people have decided that the southern States are to be regulated by their representatives; that the laws are to be enforced; that life and liberty are to be protected on behalf of the people themselves and by their representatives. I admit that; but are Army officers the true representatives of the people in that sense? Is there no other way in which the people of this country, the sovereign people, represented here in these Halls of Congress, can enforce their will except by delegating absolute and unrestricted power to an officer of the Army? Certainly the Army has never been considered the rightful fountain and origin of civil authority in this Republic until quite recently in our history. It has always been considered the arm of the Government, its right hand to execute authority emanating from the civil power. Is there a necessity for reversing that state of things now? My colleague [Mr. HOTCHKISS] thinks it proper that the Army should lead the advance and clear the way for the civil government. An army should lead the advance when there is an obstacle in the way of the establishment of civil government too great to be otherwise overcome.

When the establishment in the South of civil government recognizing the authority of the United States was opposed by armed rebellion then the Army very properly led the way and cleared it thoroughly and effectually. But I know of no obstacle now to the establishment of civil government in the southern States on such basis as Congress may deem wise and just, which shall have all the authority that governments have everywhere, and which will be entitled, in case of resistance, to the aid of the Army in the execution of their decrees.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I wish to ask if it is not the universal testimony of the loyal men of the South that if we should withdraw the armies we now have there their lives would be sacrificed; and if these loyal men are not as good witnesses as northern men who have not been there to observe the state of things for themselves?

Mr. RAYMOND. That question would be more pertinent if I had said one word in favor of withdrawing that portion of the Army that is now there. I am in favor of having the Army in the South to-day in a sufficient force in every southern State to enforce such laws as may be made by civil authority, and as may be necessary for the protection of the lives and property of the loyal citizens of the South. What I object to in this bill is not the presence of the Army; not the protection to be extended by the Army over loyal citizens, black as well as white. But I object to clothing the military officers of that Army with power to make just such laws as they please, to establish their own definitions of the rights of liberty and person and property, which are to be protected by them and the forces under their command.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Will my colleague [Mr. RAYMOND] allow me to ask him one other question?

Mr. RAYMOND. Very well.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I would ask my colleague if the loyal men of the South—those of them who are still permitted to remain there—do not say that the military protection afforded them at the present time is insufficient?

Mr. RAYMOND. That question is no more pertinent than was the other. If the present military protection is not sufficient, then increase it.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. That is what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. RAYMOND. This is not what the bill proposes to do. It proposes much more than this. It proposes not only to increase the military force in those States, but to enlarge the scope of its authority; to make it supreme over the civil power; to make it absolute and sovereign in all that part of this Republic.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] permit me to correct what I conceive to be an error into which the gentleman has fallen in reference to my position?

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I think the gentleman is under some misapprehension of what I meant to say, if I did not say it; and I would not interrupt him but for that reason. I have reference to the condition of things contemplated by the Constitution, when it said that the writ of habeas corpus should be suspended if the public safety required it; and which condition of things I said was now upon us. The gentleman says that I misquoted the Constitution in that respect. Now, I desire to state my view of that subject, and then see if I am misapprehended. The Constitution of the United States, as the gentleman has rightly said, provides that—

"The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it."

According to my apprehension that is equivalent to saying that when the public safety does require a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in cases of rebellion or invasion it is the duty of Congress to suspend it. And I take the converse as following as a matter of course.

Now, let me make one other suggestion to my friend. He says that the military are now in the South; they are therefore there for some purpose, and not for a vain purpose. They are there for the purpose of protecting the people there. Now, I ask him as an intelligent gentleman, if not a lawyer, what can the military do there; what useful purpose can they accomplish in the way of enforcing the safety of the citizens if they have no right to interfere? And if they have a right to interfere, how can it be done except under that provision of the Constitution which recognizes the right to enforce the public safety in cases of war?

Mr. RAYMOND. I need not say to a gentleman so well read both in law and in the history of the country, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] is so well known to be, that the function of the Army has always been considered hitherto to be the execution of the decrees, the enforcement of the laws and statutes of the civil authority of the land. I hold, therefore, that the proper function of the military authority in the southern States is to execute the laws and the will of the civil authorities and of the civil government. And it is their function also to reinforce by their aid, when called upon in conformity with law, the tribunals and agencies created by this Government, such as the Freedmen's Bureau and the other agencies created under the civil rights bill. I believe that under those laws the military may be called upon to protect life, liberty, and property in the southern States.

But my answer to the gentleman will reach further than that. He would reply to me probably that the civil authorities in those States are not reliable; that they do not desire to protect the persons and the property of the loyal men and of the freedmen in those States, and that they will not make or apply laws for their protection. Admit that to be the fact; for as I have already said I am afraid there is too much reason to believe that it is the fact. Then I say that the proper remedy is for Congress to enact such laws, to create such governments as will protect those classes of citizens.

Now, my colleague [Mr. HOTCHKISS] says that the objection is made to any measure that may be proposed—that we are beginning at the wrong end; that if we begin at either end somebody will say that we have begun at the wrong end; and that he is for beginning at this end, with the military instead of the civil authority.

Objections will undoubtedly be made, Mr. Speaker, to any proposition that can be brought forward. But I take it that if this Congress has an intelligent conception of what it wishes to do, if it understands clearly the emergency to be met, and is agreed, or can agree, upon any proper means of meeting that emergency, there will be no further difficulty in taking such action as the case requires. Certainly we on this side of this House ought to be able to agree upon some measure which will establish in those southern States governments which the military may be called upon to aid and support. My theory is that the military force ought to follow the civil authority and not lead it, not take its place, not supersede it. This has always been the theory of our Government. Recollect the case of the Territory of Kansas. I remind gentlemen here, many of whom were at that time more prominently connected with public affairs than myself, that during the disturbances in that Territory, when life, liberty, and property were not worth a pin's purchase, when every thing was in chaos, when anarchy prevailed from one end of the Territory to the other, martial law was never proclaimed, the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus was never suspended. The military were sent there; a government was recognized as entitled to make laws for the Territory, and the Army was called on to support it. Now, sir, I say that the same principle precisely applies in this case.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me—

Mr. RAYMOND. I do not wish to be interrupted. I cannot consent to fritter away my limited time in colloquies. After I get through the gentleman can have an opportunity, if the House consents, to answer anything I may say. I know how eager gentlemen often feel to answer on the spot; but I submit to my colleague that it is not a violation of courtesy if I decline to permit him thus to interrupt me.

Now, I say that the proper course for this Congress to take is to establish in the southern States some government which will meet its ideas of justice and of right, and then send just as many troops as may be necessary to maintain the authority of that government and to enforce the laws it may enact. What form of government that shall be I will not now attempt to decide. I can imagine a great many forms that would be far preferable to the resource now proposed. I would prefer greatly the bill introduced the other day by the honorable member from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] which proposes that the people of each of those States shall organize new governments for themselves. When Congress has decided upon such a course as that, then I say send the Army there if necessary to support that government. I would greatly prefer to this bill the organization of territorial governments for those southern States, because then we would have at least an organized civil authority from which laws and regulations might emanate.

I do not enter upon any of the disputed questions which the institution of such governments might raise. Upon some points I should have doubts as to our power and as to the propriety of the specific measures proposed. But I say that either of those measures is far preferable to the one which we are now called upon to adopt. I would even prefer that this Congress, if it be deemed necessary, should appoint civil commissioners for each State. Name them in the bill if you are not willing to trust the naming of them to the chief Executive. Let those commissioners organize tribunals of some sort, and then let the Army support their decrees. What I insist upon as fundamental, unless we are to abandon all pretense of self-government and republican institutions, is that we shall not clothe subaltern officers of the Army with the unrestricted power of life and death, with absolute authority over the liberties and the property of our fellow-citizens.

It is not in harmony with our institutions. It is not a precedent that we should be willing to establish. It is not such a precedent as will secure respect for this nation and for this Government anywhere on the face of the earth. Will it aid the cause of democratic Government to exhibit this great Republic—this model, as we have sought to make it, of what every republic should be—abandoning all the functions of civil government, abrogating every thing like civil authority over one third of our domain and one third of our people, and for very imbecility and inability to agree upon any measure handing over the control of this section and these people to the absolute and sovereign will of a brigadier general in the regular Army? Will that aid the cause of free republican government anywhere on the face of the earth? It is the last resort of a decayed and dying republic. If we have no better resource than this, we may as well do at once what this would seem to be a preliminary step for doing: invite the regular Army to take control of the whole country, install itself here in the capital as the central, sovereign power, and make such laws and issue such decrees as it may see fit.

Now, sir, these are the leading objections which occur to me to the bill now proposed. I could mention many others if I were to trace in detail what I think will be the operation of such a system as that now attempted to be inaugurated. I could point out many respects in which I think the bill would do far more evil than good. I see in it nothing which tends in the slightest degree to the restoration of peace and harmony in the Union or to strengthen confidence among the people or a hope that we shall ever again have a free republican Government, emanating from the people and protecting the rights of the people upon this continent. The enactment of such a bill as this, the establishment of such a rule as that which is here proposed, will disturb business confidence everywhere. It will hold back men who are now looking forward to engaging in their usual avocations of life. It will keep capital from the southern States; it will check the flow of emigration thither. Men will not seek homes and cast their fortunes where the absolute will of a brigadier general is the only security they have for either.

My colleague [Mr. HOTCHKISS] says a bill was introduced the other day by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which was referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, and he drew the conclusion that it was so referred in order that nothing might be done on the subject. On the contrary, it was so referred that it might be digested and put into shape so as to command greater support than it was likely to do as it stood. It was the intention of the House in sending it to that committee to perfect it and not to suppress it. If that committee cannot agree upon the details of any bill of reconstruction it is time we had a committee that can. We seem to sit down helpless and hopeless under the inability of that committee to do what it was created for the express purpose of doing; and because they can devise nothing of a civil nature adequate to the emergency it is urged we must fly to the most violent measure the ingenuity of man could devise.

Let me remind gentlemen that this has been the history of popular Governments everywhere, the reason of their downfall, their decadence and death. Difficulties occur in carrying out the principles of justice and liberty embodied in their constitution. Factions arise, each of which is more intent upon carrying out its own purposes than it is upon promoting the common good. Instead of trying to agree they try only to thwart and defeat each other, and finally in sheer desperation, and in order that neither may achieve a triumph over the other, by a common impulse they call in the Army and hand over to a commanding general the power they have found themselves unable to wield.

Now, sir, before sitting down I wish to make a single remark in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THAYER,] who charged the President with usurpation in the southern States and with having entered into secret negotiation with the leaders of the rebellion as to a basis of reconstruction. I confess I have seen no evidence of an attempt at such negotiation. I have seen a plan presented in one branch of Congress with the suggestion in the public prints that the southern States might be inclined upon that basis to accede to the amendment to the Constitution adopted at the last session of Congress as a basis of reconstruction. I do not know what connection the President may have had with this programme. I am quite sure he could not have attempted anything in the form of a negotiation or beyond using his personal influence with the men in the southern States with whom he may be supposed to have influence in its support. The programme put before the country proposes in substance that the southern States shall adopt the constitutional amendment striking out the disability clause, but as an offset to that putting in their State constitutions a provision for impartial suffrage.

I am not prepared to say that this plan shall be adopted, but I have no hesitation in saying that it is one worthy of more consideration from those who really desire impartial suffrage than some of them seem inclined to give it. It is too important, too grave in its character, too promising in the prospect it holds out to be dismissed with a sneer at its origin, real or assumed. I see no reason why we may not secure by law, by a law which we may enact, all the real good which the disabling clause of the proposed constitutional amendment contains, and if then we can secure so great a boon as impartial suffrage in the southern States, I have yet to hear of any valid ground on which such a proposition can be opposed.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman before he takes his seat permit a question?

Mr. RAYMOND. I will.

Mr. THAYER. I ask the gentleman whether in his opinion the President has any constitutional authority to interpose the weight of his official influence to prevent the effective operation of the legislation of Congress or to dissuade the southern States from accepting the proposition made by Congress.

Mr. RAYMOND. His official influence; certainly not.

Mr. THAYER. Then he must agree with me that in so doing the President has violated his official duty.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I should wish before I pronounced an assent or dissent upon that judgment to have some satisfactory proof of the fact that he has done so. I do not know that he has, and I certainly see nothing in the paragraphs lately published in the papers—to which I suppose the gentleman alludes—which connects him with such action in any other way than possibly this: that he may have expressed his personal opinion that it would not be just for the southern States to accept the constitutional amendment. Is that an impeachable offense? I take it he is not deprived by the Constitution of his right to express his opinions as an individual citizen on any and all subjects that may come before him. As to the exercise of any power he has by virtue of his office to defeat the action of Congress that is entirely another matter. I am not aware that he has done anything of the kind. But I am looking to the future rather than the past, and if we can now see any prospect of securing, through the President's aid or otherwise, the assent of the southern States to the terms we have laid before them, with the addition of impartial suffrage, our duty to ourselves and our country demands that we shall not lightly throw it away. But I will not pursue the discussion any further as I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] a portion of my time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allowed me I can say but very little. But I want to call the attention of the House to two or three points which, in my judgment, stand out prominently, and which should control our action upon this measure.

And first, I call attention to the fact that from the collapse of the rebellion to the present hour the Congress of the United States has undertaken to restore the States lately in rebellion by coöperation with their people, and that our efforts in that direction have proved a complete and disastrous failure. We commenced, sir, by waiving nine tenths of all the powers we had over these people under the influence of mercy. It was clearly the right of the victorious Government to indict, try, convict, and hang every rebel traitor in the South for their bloody conspiracy against the Republic.

In accordance with a law passed by the First Congress that met under the Constitution, and approved by Washington, we might have punished with death by hanging every rebel of the South. We might have confiscated the last dollar of the last rebel to aid in paying the cost of the war. Or adopting a more merciful policy, we might have declared that no man who voluntarily went into the rebellion should ever again enjoy the rights of a citizen of the United States. They had forfeited every right of citizenship by becoming traitors and public enemies. What the conquering sovereign would do with them was for Congress to declare.

Now, with all these powers in its hands Congress declared that it would do nothing for vengeance, but everything for liberty and safety. The representatives of the nation said to the people of the South, join with us in giving liberty and justice to that race which you have so long outraged, make it safe for free loyal men to live among you, bow to the authority of our common country, and we will forgive the carnage, the desolation, the losses, and the unutterable woes you have brought upon the nation, and you shall come back to your places in the Union with no other personal disability than this: that your leaders shall not again rule us except by the consent of two thirds of both Houses of Congress. That was the proposition which this Congress submitted during its last session; and I am here to affirm to-day that so magnanimous, so merciful a proposition has never been submitted by a sovereignty to rebels since the day when God offered forgiveness to the fallen sons of men.

The constitutional amendment did not come up to the full height of the great occasion; it did not meet all that I desired in the way of guarantees to liberty; but if the rebel States had adopted it as Tennessee did, I should have felt bound to let them in on the same terms prescribed for Tennessee. I have also been in favor of waiting, to give them full time to deliberate and act. They have deliberated; they have acted. The last one of the sinful ten has at last, with contempt and scorn, flung back into our teeth the magnanimous offer of a generous nation. It is now our turn to act. They would not cooperate with us in rebuilding what they destroyed. We must remove the rubbish and rebuild from the bottom. Whether they are willing or not we must compel obedience to the Union, and demand protection for its humblest citizen wherever the flag floats. We must so exert the power of the nation that it shall be deemed both safe and honorable to have been loyal in the midst of treason. We must see to it that the frightful carnival of blood now raging in the South shall continue no longer. We must make it possible for the humblest citizen of the United States—from whatever State he may come—to travel in safety from the Ohio river to the Gulf. In short, we must plant liberty on the ruins of slavery and establish law and peace where anarchy and violence now reign. I believe, sir, the time has come when we must lay the heavy hand of military authority upon these rebel communities, and hold them in its grasp till their madness is past, and until "clothed and in their right minds" they come bowing to the authority of the Union, and taking their places loyally in the family circle of the States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am aware that this is a severe and stringent measure. I do not hesitate to say that I give my assent to its main features with many misgivings. I am not unmindful of the grave suggestions of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] in reference to the history of such legislation in other countries and other ages. I remember, too, that upon the walls of Imperial Rome, a Prætorian guard announced that the world was for sale to the highest bidder, and that the legions knocked down the imperial purple to Nero, the highest bidder. I beg to remind the gentleman that this is not a proposition to commit the liberties of the Republic into the hands of the military. It is a new article of war commanding the Army to return to its work of putting down the rebellion—by maintaining the honor and keeping the peace of the nation. If the officers of our Army should need such a suggestion, let them remember that no people on the face of the earth have shown themselves so able to pull down their idols as the American people. However much honored and beloved a man may be, if the day ever comes when he shows himself untrue to liberty they will pluck him out of their very hearts and trample him indignantly under their feet. We have seen this in the military history of the last five years, and in the political history of the last campaign.

Now, we propose for a short time to assign our Army to this duty for specific and beneficent purposes, namely, to keep the peace until we can exercise the high functions enjoined upon us in the Constitution, of giving to these States republican governments based upon the will of the whole loyal people. The generals of our Army enjoy in a wonderful degree the confidence of the nation, but if for any cause the most honored among them should lay his hands unlawfully upon the liberty of the humblest citizen he would be trampled under the feet of millions of indignant freemen. We are not, as some gentlemen seem to suppose, stretching out helpless hands to the Army for aid, but we are commanding them, as public servants, to do this work in the interest of liberty.

I have spoken only of the general purpose of this bill. I now desire to say that I am not satisfied with the manner in which it is proposed to pass it through this House. I demand that it be opened for amendment as well as discussion. I will not consent that any one man or committee in this House shall frame a bill of this importance and compel me to vote for or against it without an opportunity to suggest amendments to its provisions. However unimportant my own opinions may be, other men shall not do my thinking for me. There are some words which I want stricken out of this bill and some limitations I want added. I at least shall ask that they be considered. I trust the gentleman who has the bill in charge will allow a full trial of proposals for change, and that the bill, properly guarded, may become a law.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] gave notice that he would call the previous question at one o'clock.

MR. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I have allowed the hour which I indicated for the close of this debate to pass because there were several gentlemen who wished to speak. It is now so late that unless the House orders the previous question now it will be impossible to reach a vote to-day. We have but eight days this side of a veto in which to pass this bill. I feel it, therefore, to be my duty to call the previous question now, and then there will be an additional hour for debate.

MR. BINGHAM. I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

MR. BANKS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to make a remark?

MR. STEVENS. Certainly.

MR. BANKS. I would not oppose a vote upon this question now if I did not think that there is an opportunity to do more toward a settlement of the difficulties in which the country is involved at this time. I believe that a day or two devoted to a discussion of this subject of the reconstruction of the Government will bring us to a solution, in which the two Houses of Congress will agree, in which the people of this country will sustain us, and in which the President of the United States will give us his support. And if we should agree to a measure satisfactory to ourselves, and in which we should be sustained by the people, and the President should resist it, then we shall be justified in dropping the subject of reconstruction and considering the condition of the country in a different sense. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to devote a day or two to the discussion of this question of the reconstruction and existence of the Government so as to bring this subject to this issue before the people of the country, whether we can act with the President in the measures necessary for the peace and prosperity of the country, or be compelled to consider the condition of the country in a different sense and in a different way. I hope he will allow that or else that the House will not sustain the previous question.

MR. ELDRIDGE. I desire to make an appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania on another ground than that of the gentleman from Massachusetts. There are several gentlemen upon this side of the House who desire to put themselves upon the record upon this great and important measure. They expect, however, that the decree has gone forth that this bill is to pass the House; and it is for that reason, because this is the only opportunity they can have to place themselves before the country in the attitude in which they desire to be placed, that they ask but little time for the discussion of this measure. They know that it is to be forced upon the country by the immense power of the majority here, and they ask but the poor privilege of entering their protest on the record. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not refuse this small boon, but will give the gentlemen upon this side of the House an opportunity of expressing their opinions.

MR. STEVENS. I have not the advantage of the secret negotiations which the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] has, and from which he seems to expect such perfect harmony between the President and the Congress of the United States within a few days. If I had that advantage I do not know what effect it might have upon me. Not having it, I cannot of course act upon it.

I should be very glad to give more time for discussion to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] and others, but I believe that we have already occupied three or four weeks in discussing this question.

The gentleman says the decree has gone forth that this bill is to pass. I do not know that.

MR. ELDRIDGE. I only supposed so.

MR. STEVENS. I have seen enough in this House, and have heretofore noted its demoralization, to doubt if there is enough of the spirit of the party that sent us here to carry out the will of the people and perfect the legislation they expected from us. I have, therefore, no sanguine hope that this bill is to be forced upon the country or upon the gentleman. There are words and letters in this bill from the first letter of the alphabet to the final one to which some of my friends object and carp at.

I am quite sure, as I was when the last bill upon reconstruction was before this House, that its recommitment to the committee would be to send it to its grave. That was a civil bill, proposing civil governments. It was objectionable, I know not why, for no amendments were proposed, except those of the gentleman from Ohio, which were withdrawn; but the bill itself was objectionable to a very large number of gentlemen, and it was sent to the tomb of the Capulets. We have attempted now to provide something that will give protection to the people of the southern States and prevent the murders, robberies, and slavery there, until we can have time to frame civil government more in conformity with the genius of our institutions.

I know not whether it is the desire of this House to pass any such bill or whether they prefer to disperse and go home and leave the President triumphant. I am quite sure that much of the opposition on both sides of this House comes from a modification of views coinciding with the President, and that his arguments have convinced many gentlemen that his theory is the true one. I have yet to learn to what extent this has prevailed, and after the previous question has been voted upon I shall be more satisfied whether it is worth while to proceed further in this attempt by Congress to resist the power of the President, or whether it is our duty, like humble Christians, to submit to the powers which have conquered us and allow the southern States to remain in their present condition. I trust the previous question will be sustained.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment further?

Mr. STEVENS. I will.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, in the remarks which I made I had no allusion to any negotiations with the President. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows more of his opinions than I know, and will yield to his policy much sooner than I shall.

I spoke in good faith to the House, asking for time to debate this question. My reason for so doing is based upon a simple fact, an idea which every member of this House can comprehend: that the measures which we propose, and one of which is now before the House, depend for their efficacy upon being enacted by two thirds of each House of Congress against the executive branch of the Government.

Now, my opinion is that we cannot long carry on the Government in that way; that we must have laws in which the Executive will cooperate, in order to make those laws effective. And if, after we, the Representatives of the people, have agreed as to what laws are necessary to secure the peace of the country and to maintain the existence of the Government, and after the people have sustained our action in passing such laws, the President then refuses cooperation, it is our duty to the country to lay aside the question of reconstruction for a time and proceed to the consideration of the position and purposes of the President himself.

Now, upon that idea, and stating again my belief that we can before this session closes come to such conclusion as will compel the President of the United States to sustain us in our action, or will justify us in another course if he refuses, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] and if I fail there I ask the members of this House, to allow a day or two at least for the consideration and decision of this question of the existence of the Government.

I have had no negotiations with the President of the United States, nor do I know his opinions, and in the vote which I shall give upon this question neither the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] nor any other man has the right to assume that I accept the policy of the Executive in the smallest particular. I hope for a change of his position; I think that is not impossible. At all events, I think it is something which is worth our while to try for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is entitled to the floor, unless he yields to some member.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman yield to me to make a suggestion for a verbal alteration which I think should be made in this bill?

Mr. STEVENS. I will hear the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. SCHENCK. In the second section of the bill reference is made to officers of "the regular Army." Now, we have but one Army of the United States, and it seems to me to be keeping up an unnecessary and invidious distinction to use the term "regular Army" in this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I agree with the gentleman that that is a mistake, and I hope that by general consent the word "regular" will be stricken out of the clause referred to.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent, the motion to recommit being now pending.

The question was submitted to the House, and the Speaker announced that there was no objection.

Mr. LE BLOND. I object to any amendment being made in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not rise in his place and state his objection.

Mr. LE BLOND. I had not arisen to my feet when the Chair announced that there was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Then the objection of the gentleman was made too late.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I arose in my place the moment I heard unanimous consent was asked for some purpose, in order to ascertain what was the nature of the proposition.

The SPEAKER. That may possibly be. The gentleman can state whether he made objection in time.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I cannot state what the Chair would regard as being in time. But I arose instantly for the purpose of ascertaining what the object was for which unanimous consent was asked.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that the gentleman arose just as the Chair stated there was no objection. The gentleman was therefore too late to make an objection if he desired to make any.

The bill was amended accordingly.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call for the vote upon my call for the previous question.

The question was taken, and upon a division there were—ayes 62, noes 82.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. GRINNELL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GRINNELL and LE BLOND were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 61, noes 98.

So the previous question was not seconded.

The question recurred upon the motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] having spoken against the previous question will be recognized as entitled to the floor.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] allow me a few moments to explain a substitute which I desire to propose for the bill now before the House whenever an opportunity shall be offered me to move it?

Mr. BANKS. I will yield to the gentleman for ten minutes.

Mr. KASSON. While, as I apprehend, there is no difference of opinion on this side of the House touching alike our right and our duty to protect the rights of all those who have been the allies of the United States in the States lately in rebellion, and to protect them if necessary by the establishment of martial laws, still there are, as has been stated, certain misgivings as to the best mode by which we can accomplish that result.

Now, sir, this bill proceeds upon the theory that not only in some of the southern States, but in all of the southern States and in all parts of them, a condition of insurrection still exists. But, sir, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERLABARGER] has stated the true ground, and the only ground upon which this bill or any bill seeking to accomplish the like object can stand. He has stated distinctly that in order to stand at all in the eye of the law or in the presence of the Constitution the bill must rest upon the fact that an insurrectionary condition exists in the South to-day. I accept that position. As I said on a former occasion, when I offered a resolution directing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into our right to establish martial law in the South, and on a subsequent occasion when I was discussing the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution, I believe that in some parts of the South the insurrection still exists.

This bill, however, instead of meeting alike the provisions of the Constitution and the facts of the case, assumes an inherent right in the Congress of the United States to establish a military government over people who have been in insurrection. I deny the existence of such a right. But if those people are now in insurrection the right exists to-day. The question, therefore, presents itself in two lights: first, as a constitutional question; and secondly, as a question of fact.

Now, sir, the Constitution in its enumeration of the powers conferred upon Congress contains this clause:

"To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces."

There is no dispute that the Congress of the United States has the right to prescribe articles of war. Articles of war, when prescribed, bind alike the President, the lowest lieutenant of the Army, and the private soldier in the service of the United States. When, therefore, we proceed to establish any regulation of martial law, we have the constitutional right to do it by making "rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." I entirely concur in the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, that we have the right to govern by the administration of martial law wherever there is a condition of rebellion or insurrection against the United States. Now, sir, all that remains for Congress to do to accomplish the object we have in view on this side, if not on the other side of the House, is to prescribe an article of war that shall apply to an insurrectionary condition within those communities and districts where it shall be found to exist. Instead of erecting this great military power over people in some parts of the South who are in fact at peace and observing law and order, our rule should be so flexible that we may apply martial law wherever peace, law, and order do not prevail, without imposing it upon people whose subordination to the laws renders military rules unnecessary.

The assumption of power involved in this bill is objectionable mainly because it goes too far, and not because it is inherently wrong in its application to the insurrectionists of the South. The bill, if I understand its principles, assumes the right of Congress to take an unorganized territory of the United States, to take any unorganized people of the United States, and because they have neither a territorial government recognized by Congress, nor a State government recognized by Congress, govern them by military power and martial law. I deny the existence of such a right on the part of Congress. I affirm that only to the extent of the existence of actual hostilities or insurrection against the United States have we the right under any circumstances to establish martial law.

Hence, in my view this bill extends too far and is dangerous because of its great breadth. To obviate this to me objectionable feature of the bill I propose to submit to the House a proposition framed, as I conceive, in accordance with the principles I have stated—principles in reference to which I believe the gentleman from Ohio and myself concur, differing only on the question of fact as to the extent of an insurrectionary condition in the South. I ask the Clerk to read the proposition which I design on a suitable opportunity to offer as an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to establish an additional article of war for the more complete suppression of the insurrection against the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the following shall be, and is hereby declared an additional article of war governing all the land forces of the United States:

1. The States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas shall be divided into military districts and made subject to the military authority of the United States as hereinafter prescribed, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district; North Carolina and South Carolina the second district; Georgia, Alabama, and Florida the third district; Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district; and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

2. It shall be the duty of the General of the Army to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the Army, not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

3. It shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid, whenever any outrage to life, liberty, or property is committed in his district, and the officers in fact appointed to administer civil law are either unwilling or unable to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, to declare and establish martial law in and over said districts, or any subdivision thereof, as he shall find necessary for the complete suppression of violence and disorder; and he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, so far as the same are recognized by martial law, anything in the local constitution and laws to the contrary notwithstanding; and may levy fines upon insurrectionary communities to compensate parties injured by their disorders; and all legislative or judicial proceedings or processes to prevent or control the proceedings of said military officers or tribunals, and all interference by other authorities than those of the United States with the exercise of military authority under this article shall be void and of no effect.

4. Courts and judicial officers of the United States, within said districts, shall not issue writs of habeas corpus in behalf of persons in military custody, unless some commissioned officer on duty in the district wherein the person is detained shall indorse upon said petition a statement certifying, upon honor, that he has knowledge or information as to the cause and circumstances of the alleged detention, and that he believes the same to be wrongful; and further, that he believes that the indorsed petition is preferred in good faith, and in furtherance of justice, and not to hinder or delay the punishment of crime. All persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted.

5. No sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district, and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions.

6. Whenever martial law shall have been declared in any of said districts under the third clause of this article the order establishing the same shall not be rescinded or revoked, except upon the order of the General of the Army, approved by the President.

7. This article shall cease to have force and effect as soon as Congress shall declare the insurrection completely suppressed in any State by admitting its representatives in Congress, or otherwise.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, that embraces the proposition I propose to bring before the House. When there is disorder in any district amounting to violence the military officer is to declare martial law over part of the district, or over the whole of the district if necessary, to continue until order is restored.

There is another provision for the payment of damages for losses occasioned by any disorder.

I move that the bill be printed while the debate is going on.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move the following amendment:

And be it enacted, That the commanders of the military departments herein named shall cause all property now in existence belonging to loyal citizens of the United States, which during the rebellion was seized or confiscated, either by confederate or rebel State governments, to be summarily restored to said loyal owners.

And be it further enacted, That whenever the people of any State named in this act shall adopt a constitution of State government which shall secure to all citizens of the United States within said State, irrespective of race or color, the equal protection of the laws, including the right of the elective franchise, and shall ratify the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, then the provisions of this act shall cease to have force and effect in such State.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, all amendments proposed to be offered to the bill will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BANKS. After what I have said in the presence of the House, it will be expected that I should suggest some plan of reconstruction which accords with my own ideas and which would lead to the conclusion I have suggested. Nothing was further from my mind than to enter upon the discussion at this time; but if the debate should go over till tomorrow I should be glad to be accorded such privileges as are allowed to other members in expressing my views upon this question. And I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and to some of my colleagues who have spoken to me, that they cannot name a condition necessary for the protection of the Union men of the South, black or white, to which I should object or which would be excluded from any plan that I might suggest. All I desire in any plan of reconstruction submitted to the House is that it shall embody all the measures necessary for the protection of the loyal people and the preservation of the Government, and exclude all extraneous personal and hostile considerations. In a word, I want the proposition that shall be adopted by the House, and upon which an appeal shall be made to the people, to be a business matter, and not a personal or hostile one.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title: "An act (H. R. No. 1127) to fix the pay of the quartermaster sergeant of the battalion of Engineers;" when the Speaker signed the same.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying documents, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith communicate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 22d ultimo, requesting information relative to the condition, occupancy, and area of the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, February 7, 1867.

RESOLUTIONS OF INDIANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the lieutenant and acting Governor of Indiana, transmitting a copy of the joint resolution of the Legislature of that State ratifying certain amendments to the Constitution proposed by Congress; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL CONTRACTORS IN TENNESSEE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter of the Postmaster General, in answer to a resolution of the House in reference to certain mail contractors in the State of Tennessee; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in compliance with law, a report of the commercial relations of the United States with foreign nations for the year ending September 30, 1866; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. SPALDING. I move a recess be taken to day from half past four till half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. LE BLOND. Barely for discussion?

Mr. SPALDING. That is all I intend.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest whether it is necessary. There is unlimited time for debate, and we had better go on till daylight.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 67, noes 53.

Mr. ANCONA demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. ANCONA and SPALDING.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to know whether the proposition is to devote the evening to debate alone.

The SPEAKER. If the motion is adopted the House will proceed with the regular order, which is the bill now under consideration. To order a session for debate alone requires unanimous consent.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 73.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BANKS resumed the floor, but gave way to

Mr. STEVENS, who moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and thereupon (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rules, and referred to the appropriate committees: By the SPEAKER: The petition of Thomas De Graffenreid, of Chester, South Carolina, asking protection from all acts, jurisdiction, &c., of the so-called State of South Carolina.

By Mr. ECKLEY: The petition of 175 citizens of Columbiana county, Ohio, asking the impeachment of the President of the United States.

By Mr. ELIOT: The petition of Matthew Crosby, and others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying for certain legislation for protection of life at sea.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of citizens of Warren, Ohio, against any further curtailment of the currency.

Also, the petition of citizens of Ravenna, Ohio, against any curtailment of the currency.

By Mr. HAYES: The petition of Wilson Carey, M. Hollingshead, W. G. White, J. P. Sautmyer, and 50 others, clerks in the Cincinnati post office, asking that they may be placed on the same footing in regard to taxation on incomes as other citizens.

By Mr. HUNTER: The memorial of Frederick Bredt, asking that sugar of lead may be exempt from taxation under the internal revenue law.

By Mr. LONGYEAR: The petition of manufacturers, and others, citizens of Lansing, Michigan, praying that all manufactures may be exempted from internal revenue tax.

By Mr. PAINE: A memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying for the establishment of a certain mail route.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The petition of hospital stewards of the Army, for extra duty pay.

Also, the petition of citizens of Dayton, Ohio, against any further curtailment of the currency.

Also, a petition of loyal citizens of Arkansas, calling attention to a law recently passed by the Legislature of that State appropriating money for the support of rebel soldiers and for the purchase of artificial limbs for such as were maimed in the rebellion.

Also, a petition of disabled soldiers in Government employ, praying for the passage of a law to prevent their removal from office except for proper cause.

By Mr. SPALDING: The remonstrance of E. N. Till, and 6 others, citizens of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, against the passage of Messrs. Hooper and Randall's bills.

By Mr. VAN HORN, of New York: The petition of Hopedill Bigelow, of New Market, New Jersey, asking increased pensions for the soldiers of 1812.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 9, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

The reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with, by unanimous consent, on the motion of Mr. CONNESS.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from General Grant, in reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 12th instant, relative to the protection of trains on the overland route; which, on motion of Mr. HENDERSON, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the thirteenth section of the act of July 17, 1862, a statement of the Quartermaster General, showing the contracts made by him during the month of January, 1867, and those not received in time to be included in previous reports; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

CORRECTION OF A MISTAKE.

Mr. DIXON. I ask the consent of the Senate to correct a mistake made by the telegraph in reporting the resolutions which I had the honor to offer to the Senate the other day on the subject of amending the Constitution of the United States. Of the first section of the article of the amendment proposed by me there was given only the first sentence in the telegraphic report, as I see in all the newspapers. The second sentence, "No State shall pass any law or ordinance to secede or withdraw from the Union, and any such law or ordinance shall be null and void," was omitted. I merely desire to correct this error.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLEY. I have a petition of five hundred and fifty-three citizens of Harper's Ferry and vicinity, asking speedy action on the bill for the sale of the Government interests at Harper's Ferry, in West Virginia. At the last session I had the honor to introduce a resolution making inquiry of the War Department whether it was the purpose of that Department to continue the manufacture of arms any longer at Harper's Ferry. The Secretary of War referred the resolution to the ordnance department, who reported that it was not the intention of that department any longer to use the property and water-power there for the purposes of the Government, and recommended that a sale be made of the United States property at that place. A bill was prepared and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and by them reported, providing for the sale of the property at that place. It has not been acted upon, and I desire now to attract, if the chairman of that committee please, his attention to this petition, so numerous signed, asking speedy action on that bill. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of ship-builders, ship-owners, merchants, and others, of New York, praying that the law be so amended as to allow the sale and employment of American vessels to friendly belligerents; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Levi C. Casson, praying to be allowed a pension in consequence of a wound received while protecting the post office in Dexter, Michigan, from being robbed; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. YATES. I present the petition of Mary Loup, whose husband was killed by rebels in the New Orleans riot of July 30, 1866, praying for relief.

Mr. President, as this case in its application is somewhat peculiar I will make a statement of the facts in regard to it for the consideration of the Senate. The husband of the petitioner for three years had been in the United States Army. He was a southern man. He had raised a company under great difficulties without any United States bounty, and served faithfully, as I have stated, for three years, and was present at the convention in New Orleans on the 30th of July, 1866, as a mere spectator, taking no part whatever in the transactions of that convention. While there, and because he had been true and faithful to the Union as a southern man, he was attacked and most brutally and inhumanly murdered. The details of the tragedy in his case are unequalled by any in that horrible massacre which sent a shudder throughout the world. He left at his death a widow and two children in a most deplorable state of destitution and poverty, and yet of the very highest respectability.

Sir, I hope to see the time come when all men shall know, and especially when the rebels in the southern States, where murders are frequent, and where men for the mere expression of opinion are denounced and assassinated, shall understand, when from the highest officer in the Government down to the lowest it shall be understood, that the Government of the United States extends its protection over all the widows and orphans of the Union soldiers and all those who have died in the Union service. I hope when this question comes up, as this is a marked case, and as I believe every Union sufferer during that riot—

Mr. WILSON. Not riot, massacre.

Mr. YATES. Massacre, as the Senator more justly and properly characterizes it, should have the protection of the United States Government. It is therefore that I move to refer this memorial to the Committee on Pensions, and hope that the name of this lady may be placed upon the pension-list.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD presented the petition of Theodore J. Park, praying that the steam-tug T. F. Park may be enrolled and licensed as an American vessel; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Thomas Neill, praying that the schooner Chieftain, a Canadian-built vessel, may be enrolled and licensed as an American vessel; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOWE presented a petition of citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie upon the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Chicago, Illinois, praying that a survey, plan, and estimates of the expense of suitable erections to make a safer harbor at the mouth of the Menomonee river be made by the engineer department; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of mill-owners, shippers, and business men connected with the lumbering and shipping interest, and residents of Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan, praying that a survey, plan, and estimates of the expense of suitable erections to make a safer harbor at the mouth of the Menomonee river may be made by the engineer department; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the passage of any act authorizing the curtailment of the national currency or a return within a limited time to specie payments, and against compelling national banks to redeem their notes in New York, or prohibiting them from paying or receiving interest on bank balances; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an increase of the duty on imported wool; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of a new treaty between the General Government and the Stockbridge Indians of that State, providing for their removal to a more genial climate and fertile soil; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON presented the petition of Elias Beale, praying for compensation for services rendered as captain of company H, eighth Tennessee infantry, from the 25th of July, 1863, to the 30th of June, 1865; and that, in consequence of the loss of health and being crippled while in the service, he may be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. YATES presented the petition of Elizabeth J. Manning, praying that her name may be placed on the pension list; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. POMEROY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of a grant of lands in that State for the use and benefit of the Freedmen's University; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of Mary G. Harris, widow of Colonel John Harris, who died on the 12th of May, 1864, from disease contracted in the service, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CRESWELL presented a memorial of J. Dean Smith and S. M. Shoemaker, stockholders in the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Railroad Company, remonstrating against the passage of the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to pay D. Randolph Martin, assignee, such amounts as may be found due by the United States to that company; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the memorial of John R. Bolles and others, remonstrating against the acceptance of League Island for a naval station; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

PRINTING OF RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. YATES. I move that the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois on the subject of the navy-yard at Mound City in that State be printed. I presented them yesterday, but omitted to make a motion for their printing. I now submit that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Charles N. Weiss, praying for a pension, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 580) granting a pension to Charles N. Weiss. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1058) for the relief of the minor children of Solomon Long, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 556) for the relief of Caroline McGee, of Greene county, Tennessee, widow of Lemuel McGee, deceased, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Olivia W. Cannon, praying for a pension, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 581) granting a pension to Olivia W. Cannon. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of Jacob Shavor and Albert C. Corse, praying for compensation for past and future use of a patent upon post-marking of letters, &c., and for the cancellation of postage stamps, known as the Norton invention, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 582) to provide for the payment of past and future use and purchase of the invention and patent upon "post-marking of letters, packets, &c., and for the cancellation of postage stamps thereon," made by and patented to Marcus P. Norton, of Troy, New York, April 14, 1863, and reissued August 23, 1864. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 489) to provide for giving the right of preemption to settlers on the Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain claims out of the balance of an appropriation for the payment of necessary expenditures in the service of the United States for Indian affairs in the Territory of Utah, reported it without amendment.

DEFICIENCIES IN HOUSE CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1144) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, to report it back to the Senate without amendment. It contains but three items, about which there is no dispute, and the Clerk of the House is very anxious, as he is out of funds, that it should be passed to day. I therefore ask that it may be considered now. It will take but a moment, and it is a matter about which there is no dispute. By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to appropriate for miscellaneous items, $40,000; for folding documents, $27,500; for fuel and lights, including pay of engineers, firemen, and laborers, repairs, and materials, $7,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF MR. HICKNY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution relative to the payment of the funeral expenses of the late William Hickey, Chief Clerk in the Senate, have instructed me to report it back and recommend its passage; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, and it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the amount directed to be paid to the legal representatives of the late William Hickey, for funeral expenses, &c., by Senate resolution of July 9, 1866, be paid by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

INTER-OCEANIC ROUTES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for the printing of one thousand copies of the report of Admiral Davis in regard to inter-oceanic routes, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment reducing the number to five hundred. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That five hundred additional copies of the report of Admiral Davis, of the Naval Observatory, on inter-oceanic canals and railroads, be printed for the use of the Observatory.

DEBATES OF CONGRESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be considered now:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Printing be authorized to invite proposals for printing the debates of Congress, and report whether the same should be published as heretofore or by the Public Printer, or by letting the contract to the lowest bidder, or by accepting any one of the proposals made.

Mr. CRESWELL. I think that had better lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the present consideration of the resolution, it will lie over.

ROCK ISLAND IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. TRUMBULL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish the Senate a copy of the report of the commission of which Major General John M. Schofield was president, in relation to the improvements at Rock Island.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNORS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report to the Senate whether Andrew Johnson, Vice President of the United States and acting President, had any authority of law or under the Constitution to appoint provisional governors for the States lately in rebellion against the Government.

Mr. BUCKALEW, Mr. JOHNSON, and others objecting to the present consideration of the resolution, it was laid over under the rules.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 583) to restore the jurisdiction of Indian affairs to the Department of War; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 584) for the relief of Elias Beale, late captain of company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 585) to amend and simplify the acts relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

COURTS IN RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to take up

House bill No. 643, to change the place of holding the courts in Rhode Island. The district attorney has written me and desires to have it passed; the Senators from that State are in favor of it. It will take but a minute, and I am sure there can be no objection to it.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 643) to alter the places of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that from and after the 1st day of July, 1866, the circuit courts of the United States for the district of Rhode Island shall commence and be held at the United States court-room in the city of Providence on the 15th day of November and on the 15th day of June, annually, instead of the places heretofore established by law. But when either of the days named shall fall on Sunday the session of the court then next to be held is to commence on the Monday next following. All indictments, informations, suits, or actions, and proceedings of every kind, whether of a civil or criminal nature, pending in the circuit court on the 1st day of July, 1866, are hereafter to be proceeded in, heard, tried, and determined on the days and at the place herein appointed for holding the court in the same manner and with the same effect as if the court had been holden on the days and at the places heretofore directed by law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill was passed by the House at the last session, and if I heard it read correctly it speaks of suits pending on the 1st day of July, 1866. That will have to be altered. I move to strike out "1866" and insert "1867."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made.

Mr. TRUMBULL. A similar change will have to be made in the first section as to the time when the change shall be made.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the bill will have to go back to the House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We cannot help that. The time named has passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These changes will be made in the bill, if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TOWN SITES.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 582) for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands.

The bill as introduced provided that whenever any portion of the surveyed public lands has been or shall be settled upon and occupied as a town site, and therefore not subject to entry under the agricultural preemption laws, it shall be lawful, in case such town shall be incorporated, for the corporate authorities thereof, and if not incorporated for the judge of the county court for the county in which the town may be situated, to enter at the proper land office, and at the minimum price, the land so settled and occupied in trust, for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof, according to their respective interests; the execution of which trust, as to the disposal of the lots in such town, and the proceeds of the sales thereof, to be conducted under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the legislative authority of the State or Territory in which it may be situated. But the entry of the land is to be made prior to the commencement of the public sale of the body of land in which it is included, and the entry is to include only such land as is actually occupied by the town, and to be made in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public lands authorized by the act of 24th of April, 1820; and where the inhabitants are in number one hundred and less than two hundred is to embrace not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres; and in cases where the inhabitants are more than two hundred and less than one thousand, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres; and where the number of inhabitants is one thousand and over one thousand, not exceeding twelve hundred and eighty acres.

Amendments were proposed to the bill by the Committee on Public Lands; the first of which was in line thirty, section one, to strike out the word "surveyed," and after "lands" to insert "of the States of California and Nevada;" so as to read:

That whenever any portion of the public lands of the States of California and Nevada has been or shall be settled upon and occupied town sites, &c.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why confine it to those States?

Mr. STEWART. This is a substantial revival of the law of 1841, allowing the town authorities to enter a certain quantity of land. In the western States some speculation arose in those town sites, which caused a law to be passed professedly to stop that, but it was really at the instance of the registers and receivers so that they would get a special fee for each lot. That was applied to the whole country, but in California and Nevada the people have gone on under the old law. Their towns were located with a view of complying with the provisions of the old law; and an attempt to enforce the new law there interferes with the entire property of the country. They cannot comply with it. The petitions from California and Nevada for a change of the law are very numerous. The Committee on Public Lands think it would be wise to limit the change to that part of the country from which the demand for it comes, and leave the question of changing the whole system generally for future consideration. From California and Nevada we have petitions and letters from almost every town asking that this change be made. For instance, in the town where I live, Virginia City, the sizes of the lots do not correspond with those fixed in the new law; the Gould & Curry mill there cost $1,200,000; several parties have attempted to enter portions of the lot upon which it is located arbitrarily, whereas the town authorities, if they were allowed to go on under the old law, would give the company title to what they have in actual possession.

The bill is confined to those States from which this demand specially comes. Several Territories have applied to have the provision extend to them. Judge Goodwin, of Arizona, wishes it extended to that Territory, but until there is further investigation the committee think it safer to apply this bill only to the States from the inhabitants of which we had petitions on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it not necessary in Oregon also?

Mr. STEWART. It may be equally necessary in Oregon, in Montana, in Idaho, and in Arizona. My opinion is that they will need it there, but my impression is that this bill had better go through now in this way, and at the next session we can attend to those other cases if on investigation it is deemed desirable to extend it to them. I think the new law was a very great mistake. The old law, as it stood, worked well. Certainly it places people in States which had been long settled in an awkward position, where they had not perfected their titles under the old law, to have the change made.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This is not the enactment of a law unknown to our system. For a great number of years this law as proposed now substantially applied to all the States and Territories. Under it it was found in the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and perhaps Minnesota and some other localities, that very gross and disgusting frauds were perpetrated. Men would secure proof of the establishment of a town, and plat it out in very magnificent style, and come to eastern States and cities and sell corner-lots and perpetrate very gross frauds upon the unwary. I suppose it was in view of that fact that Congress changed the law so that each settler upon a particular lot should enter it for himself. That is the existing law now.

But we are informed by the Senators from the Pacific coast that their interests are peculiar and need the reenactment of this law, and therefore I did not object to it. I was unwilling, unless we should have the opinion of the General Land Office on the subject, to extend it to all the States and Territories. I can very well see why there could not be such frauds perpetrated on the Pacific coast as on this side. At any rate, if they are perpetrated they will be upon their own citizens. If a town is built up in California that is a mere sham and a fraud the people of California are likely to know it. There cannot likely be frauds under this law, and it is a matter of convenience to the people out there, and I therefore support the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment. It may not be necessary, but it is a precaution to avoid the difficulty that arose under the old law.

Mr. CONNESS. There are amendments pending from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are amendments reported by the committee still undisposed of.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate again, I desire now to except from the operations of this bill all military or other reservations made by the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. Certainly, there is no objection to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the old law they attempted to cover the military reservation at Leavenworth, worth $1,000,000, and they also endeavored to cover the Spring reservation in Arkansas, which was worth an immense amount.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But that effort was not a success. They cannot do that under the existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know the effort failed, but it was made, and I think we should adopt this precaution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The existing law is against it, and the uniform decisions of the office.

Mr. SHERMAN. There will be no harm in it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My attention has not been directed to this bill. It is a bill that is called up this morning for the first time; but I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee, or some other member of it, the specific advantages that this law has over the old law. If the States of California and Nevada derive any particular benefit from this enactment I do not see why Oregon and the Territories on the Pacific coast should not be included, for they are very similar in many respects, particularly so far as their public lands are concerned. I should like to know from that statement as to whether or not it would be desirable to include Oregon in the bill, because I want the State of Oregon to enjoy all the advantages that the other States on the Pacific do.

Mr. STEWART. I have no doubt it would be an advantage to Oregon and to Idaho and Arizona to be included in this bill; but the committee felt disposed to confine it to those States where we had information from almost every town that could be built, and where there are now towns building for speculative purposes. This is intended to cover the cases of those actually and bona fide occupying the land at present. Probably the same condition of things exists in Oregon, in Arizona, and in Idaho. If the Senator will move an amendment to include Oregon I shall not oppose it.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the amendments of the committee will be acted upon first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as the debate closes the Chair will put the question on the pending motion, which is the amendment of the committee just read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to have an explanation, if it is agreeable to the members of the committee, as to the particular advantages of this bill over the old bill.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator will allow the vote to be taken on these amendments we will give that explanation in its proper order.

Mr. HOWARD. Why not give it before we vote?

Mr. CONNESS. These are amendments verbal in their character and should be made first.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no particular desire to have any explanation made at this time, unless by the adoption of the amendment here, confining the bill to the States of California and Nevada, we are concluded from including other States.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that is not the case I do not care as to the time when I hear the explanation.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator wants Oregon included it can be done. I have no objection to that, and I presume no member of the committee would have any. The inconvenience under the existing law is that for many purposes a sufficient quantity of land cannot be entered. The law as it now stands limits the entry to a very small lot. It is inconvenient in carrying on manufacturing and mineral enterprises in that distant country.

Mr. CONNESS. I will make a brief statement for the information of the Senator from Oregon and of the Senate. I have in my hand a petition from the citizens of one of the towns in California. They have undertaken to enter the land of their town under the existing so-called town-lot law. The result is, that under that law, after two years of time, not more than half the people of the town have been able to get a title to their lots. Others own lots jointly, and the laws make no provision for joint entries. In addition to that they find that they cannot enter the streets nor the public squares in the town. The title to those is in the United States. The law, as it exists, is totally inapplicable to those towns. What we want is to enable the authorities of each town to enter at the minimum price of the public lands a given number of acres, graded according to the population of the town or locality, so that it may be entered in trust and then deeded according to the possessions to the people. If the Senator from Oregon desires the benefit of the law for his State—and I have no doubt it would be beneficial to his State—of course he will move to insert it. But there is nothing so necessary as the provisions of this act for our towns.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the Senator from California mean to be understood that this bill provides that the corporate authorities of the town may become the purchasers? Is that the scheme here?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. I so understood him.

Mr. CONNESS. They simply enter the land as agents in trust for the occupants, those in possession.

Mr. HOWARD. Do they get a title?

Mr. CONNESS. A title for the occupants from the United States.

Mr. HOWARD. Then they become the owners in trust.

Mr. CONNESS. In trust. That is it exactly.

Mr. HOWARD. How much can they enter?

Mr. CONNESS. I will answer that in a moment. Where there is no corporate body for organization the judge of the county enters the land in trust. That is the old law. This is simply a revival of the old law, which is very much the better law. In the case of a town with a population of between one hundred and two hundred they are to enter three hundred and twenty acres. The amount to be entered is graduated according to the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the proposed amendment?

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the amendment will be reported.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in line three to strike out the word "surveyed" before "public," and after the word "lands" to insert "of the States of California and Nevada."

Mr. STEWART. It is proposed to include Oregon. Shall I put in Oregon?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; I think it would be better.

Mr. STEWART. I move to insert "Oregon" before "California."

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to inquire of some member of the Committee on Public Lands the reason they have for striking out the word "surveyed" before "public lands" in line three. Is it their purpose to allow any lands that have never been surveyed at all to be entered upon by the corporate authorities of the township and appropriated in the manner prescribed in the bill? Does not the law as it now stands confine such entries to lands which have been surveyed?

Mr. STEWART. The bill requires the entry to be made in conformity to the surveys. Of course we shall have to extend the surveying system; but it is not necessary that the town shall have been sectionized and surveyed. The latter portion of the bill, however, requires it in its exterior limits to conform to the general surveys, so that there will be no confusion about that. It is intended that they shall acquire title to the property before the ground is all surveyed. Otherwise, I am afraid there are a great many towns where they never will acquire a title. In the mining region it is not expected that all those deserts will ever be surveyed. You find there a town located probably fifty miles from any arable land, for mining purposes exclusively, and if you waited until the surveys were extended to that land they never could acquire title to the property at all, because it would cost so much to survey it. It is not the policy of the Government to survey all those deserts. In surveying under the mining law it is provided that they shall connect with the general system by running standing lines to make the general system conform; so that if the land is ever surveyed there shall be uniformity; but there are large portions of the public lands in the great desert there that will never be sectionized.

Mr. HOWARD. It comes to this, then, I suppose: that under this bill any person may enter upon public land, although it may be unsurveyed, and acquire it as a town plot in the future, and may hold it.

Mr. CONNESS. Oh, no.

Mr. HOWARD. That is the effect of the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Only where they have settled and made a town.

Mr. HOWARD. The bill is prospective I suppose.

Mr. STEWART. There must be a certain number of inhabitants there.

Mr. HOWARD. I confess I have a little hesitation about granting this privilege to enter upon unsurveyed public land and convert it into town plots. It will open the door to great speculations, to great frauds, and great injustice to the public to grant this privilege with reference to unsurveyed land. There may be some reasons for it in Pacific States which are not applicable to other States.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not made applicable to any other States.

Mr. HOWARD. I say there may be reasons why this should be applied to the Pacific States and not applied to the other States, but I have not seen them very clearly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am satisfied that this amendment proposed by the committee is absolutely necessary to give this bill any practical value. Now, in the State where I live I doubt very much whether any town has ever been commenced upon the surveyed lands of the State; but wherever the advantages of a location seem to indicate that a town is desirable people congregate there and proceed at once to make a town, and some of these localities are removed at a great distance from the surveyed portions of the country. Now, if the people of the State, before they can enter a town site under this law, are compelled to wait until the lands are surveyed, there will be no town sites as a general rule to which this law will apply, because generally the surveyed lands are taken as soon as they are surveyed and in many cases before they are surveyed by private individuals.

As has been suggested by the Senator from Nevada, there is no regular system of surveys in the State of Oregon, but the lands are surveyed in different localities according to the topography of the country. Some portions of the State are agricultural, and they are surveyed. Then there are other large portions of the State that are not surveyed because they are not agricultural lands but abound in mineral resources; and wherever a discovery is made of a mine in any particular locality hundreds of people will settle there at once and make a town, and that town may be a great distance from any of the regular surveys of the State. The object of this bill is to enable the citizens of that town to enter their land whenever the surveys are extended to that locality. When a town of that kind is made, when people settle upon unsurveyed public land in order to make a town, this bill provides that it shall be understood that the land upon which the town is located is not subject to private entry, but whenever the surveys are extended to that locality then it shall be entered for the advantage of private individuals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, to insert "Oregon."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was in line eighteen, after the word "entry" to strike out the words "of the land intended by this act be made prior to the commencement of the public sale of the body of land in which it is included, and that the entry;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That the entry shall include only such lands as are actually occupied by the town, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-two, after the word "and" to insert the word "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirty-two, after the word "provided" to strike out the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

And provided further, That this act shall be construed subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands, and for other purposes," approved July 28, 1866; and nothing in this act shall be construed to grant any right in conflict with the rights of miners upon the public lands which they hold under any law of Congress or by virtue of the rules or customs of miners.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In line twenty-two, after the word "town," I move to insert the words "the title to which is in the United States;" so that it will read:

That the entry shall include only such lands as are actually occupied by the town, the title to which is in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. After the word "shall," in the same line, I move to insert the words "in its exterior limits."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Now, I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The following amendment is moved by the Senator from Ohio, to come in at the end of the bill:

And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to military or other reservations heretofore made by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is right, lest I might be misunderstood in what I said a few minutes ago, to say that this bill changes the act of 1841 in regard to the quantity of land that shall be entered. The act of 1841 was arbitrary, allowing a section of land to be entered in all cases, or a half section, I forget which. This bill regulates the amount that is to be entered according to the population of the town. It is right that I should also add, perhaps, that the existing law requires the occupant of a town lot, a small lot, to pay to the Government ten dollars for the entry. This bill will allow the land covered by the town to be entered at the Government price, whatever it may be, either $1 25 or $2 50 an acre. I think that feature of the bill is right, because if the town lots are worth ten dollars apiece that value is given them, not by the Government, but by the people in making their improvements.

Mr. CONNESS. In that connection I desire simply to say that the recommendation as to the quantity came from the Land Office, because it was found that special acts had to be passed for particular towns extending the quantity.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

LEAGUE ISLAND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No. 452, being the League Island bill.

Mr. GRIMES. When I made the motion yesterday to call up that bill, I had forgotten that on a former day the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, had had to-day assigned for District of Columbia business. I consider it very important that this bill should be considered at an early day by the Senate, but I have no disposition to allow it to interfere with the business which at a previous day was assigned for consideration to-day. I therefore move that it be postponed to and made the special order of the day for Tuesday next at one o'clock. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Finance has some business that he desires to transact on Monday.

Mr. HOWARD. Let us vote on it now and dispose of it.

Mr. GRIMES. We cannot do that, because the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] has had to-day assigned for the consideration of District of Columbia business.

Mr. CONNESS. Do you want to have the morning hour for it?

Mr. GRIMES. No; I move that it be made the special order for Tuesday next at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. WILSON. With the consent of the Senator from Maine I desire to have a vote taken on the motion that I entered some days since, to reconsider the vote rejecting the bankrupt bill, and then after the reconsideration it can lie over for future consideration.

Mr. MORRILL. If it takes no time and leads to no discussion I shall not object.

Mr. WILSON. I do not wish to take up any time upon it except to have a vote taken on the motion to reconsider, and then if the bill is reconsidered it can lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the bankrupt bill, which was acted upon by the Senate a few days ago.

The motion to take up the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POLAND. I think it is very apparent that a majority of this body are in favor of the bankrupt law; but the friends of the measure were so unfortunate as not to agree in some of its details. I hope without any question that this motion to reconsider will be allowed to prevail, and then the matter can be brought under consideration again, to see if the views of the friends of the measure may not be harmonized. I hope that it will be reconsidered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called) said: I am paired off on this question with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COWAN,] who is not in his seat; otherwise I would vote in the affirmative, and if he were here he would vote in the negative.

Mr. SHERMAN (after having voted in the negative) said: I inadvertently voted. I am paired off on this question with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who has been called away by illness in his family. I therefore ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn, no objection being made.

The result was then announced—yeas 22, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wilson, and Yates—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cragin, Davis, Fogg, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Lane, Morrill, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Wade, and Williams—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Cowan, Edmunds, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Howe, McDougall, Nye, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, and Willey—16.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed to another day.

Mr. JOHNSON. When? Generally?

Mr. WILSON. Until to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Until Monday?

Several SENATORS. Say to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to-morrow. I mean to-morrow legislatively. That means that we can take it up when we choose.

The motion was agreed to.

MILITARY BILLS.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill for a temporary increase of the Army and some other Army bills. There were referred to us from the House of Representatives eighteen bills yesterday; we have nearly thirty military bills from that House unacted upon, and I desire a few hours to dispose of them one way or the other. I merely wish to say that at one o'clock on Wednesday I shall call them up.

JAIL IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL. I propose now to proceed with the District business. I move first to take up Senate bill No. 550.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 550) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1866, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to repeal so much of the sixth section of the act approved June 25, 1866, as specifies the amounts to be raised and paid into the Treasury of the United States by the cities of Washington and Georgetown respectively, before the completion of the jail, and to make it the duty of the proper authorities of the city of Washington to raise, by tax or otherwise, and pay into the Treasury of the United States, at or before the time of the completion of the jail, $78,000, and the duty of the proper authorities of the city of Georgetown to raise, by tax or otherwise, and pay into the Treasury of the United States, at or before the time of the completion of the jail, $12,000.

Mr. MORRILL. Perhaps I ought to make a word of explanation as to the bill. On the 25th July, 1866, an act was approved entitled

"An act to authorize the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," and it was provided in this act that a portion of the expense of the construction of the jail should be devolved upon the cities of Washington, Georgetown, and the county of Washington, and in these proportions: $70,000 upon Washington city, $10,000 upon Georgetown, and $10,000 upon the country quarter of the District. A memorial was sent to the Senate at this session from the authorities of Georgetown saying that there was an inequality in this proportion, and they satisfied the committee that it was so. I understand that upon the basis of population, if it were allowable to base the proportion upon population, the proportion of Georgetown would be something less than eleven thousand dollars, about ten thousand dollars; but if based upon population and property combined, it would be eleven thousand nine hundred and some odd dollars. That is, comparing the population and property of Georgetown with those of the city of Washington and the country quarter; so that this bill proposes to change the act referred to and devolve $78,000 upon the city of Washington, $12,000 upon Georgetown, and $10,000 upon the country quarter of the District.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the aggregate the same?

Mr. MORRILL. The aggregate is the same; the only real change in the law is that it now devolves $78,000 upon the city of Washington instead of $70,000, and $12,000 instead of $20,000 upon Georgetown, which the committee find to be in accordance with the fair proportions estimating both population and property. There is no new obligation.

Mr. JOHNSON. I inquire of the honorable chairman what is the estimated cost of the jail?

Mr. MORRILL. Two hundred thousand dollars was appropriated. The Secretary of the Interior was authorized to incur an expense not exceeding that, and half of that amount was to be supplied by the District.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 529.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 529) to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported an amendment to the bill, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That there be established, and is hereby established in the District of Columbia, a university for the education of youth in the liberal arts and sciences, under the name, style, and title of the Howard University.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That Samuel C. Pomeroy, Charles B. Boynton, Oliver O. Howard, Burton C. Cook, Charles H. Howard, James B. Hutchinson, Henry A. Brewster, Benjamin F. Morris, Danforth B. Nichols, William G. Finney, Roswell H. Stevens, E. M. Cushman, Hiram Barbour, E. W. Robinson, W. F. Bascom, J. B. Johnson, and Silas L. Loomis, be, and they are hereby, declared to be a body politic and corporate, with perpetual succession in deed or in law to all intents and purposes whatsoever, by the name, style, and title of "the Howard University," by which name and title they and their successors shall be competent, at law and in equity, to take to themselves and their successors, for the use of said university, any estate whatsoever in any messuage, lands, tenements, hereditaments, goods, chattels, moneys, and other effects, by gift, devise, grant, donation, bargain, sale, conveyance, assurance, or will; and the same to grant, bargain, sell, transfer, assign, convey, assure, demise, declare to use and farm lot, and to place out on interest, for the use of said university, in such manner as to them, or a majority of them, shall be deemed most beneficial to said institution; and to receive the same, their rents, issues, and profits, income and interest, and to apply the same for the proper use and benefit of said university; and by the same name to sue and be sued, to plead and be pleaded, in any courts of law and equity, in all manner of suits, actions, and proceedings whatsoever, and generally by and in the same name to do and transact all and every the business touching or concerning the premises: Provided, That the same do not exceed the value of $50,000 net annual income, over and above and exclusive of the receipts for the education and support of the students of said university.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the first meeting of said corporators shall be held at the time and place at which a majority of the persons herein above named shall assemble for that purpose; and six days' notice shall be given each of said corporators, at which meeting said corporators may enact by-laws regulating the government of the corporation.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the government of the university shall be vested in a board of trustees, of not less than thirteen members, who shall be elected by the corporators at their first meeting. Said board of trustees shall have perpetual succession in deed or in law, and in them shall be vested the power heretofore granted to the corporation. They shall adopt a common seal, which they may alter at pleasure, under and by which all deeds, diplomas, and acts of the university shall pass and be authenticated. They shall elect a president, a secretary, and a treasurer. The treasurer shall give such bonds as the board of trustees may direct. The said board shall also appoint the professors and tutors, prescribing the number, and determining the amount of their respective salaries. They shall also appoint such other officers, agents, or employees, as the wants of the university may from time to time demand, in all cases fixing their compensation. All meetings of said board may be called in such manner as the trustees shall prescribe, and nine of them so assembled shall constitute a quorum to do business, and a less number may adjourn from time to time.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the university shall consist of the following departments, and such others as the board of trustees may establish: first, normal; second, collegiate; third, theological; fourth, law; fifth, medicine; sixth, agriculture.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the immediate government of the several departments, subject to the control of the trustees, shall be intrusted to their respective faculties; but the trustees shall regulate the course of instruction, prescribe, with the advice of the professors, the necessary text-books, confer such degrees, and grant such diplomas as are usually conferred and granted in other universities.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the board of trustees shall have power to remove any professor or tutor or other officers connected with the institution whom, in their judgment, the interest of the university shall require it.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the board of trustees shall publish an annual report, making an exhibit of the affairs of the university.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That no misnomer of the said corporation shall defeat or annul any donation, gift, grant, devise, or bequest to or from the said corporation.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the said corporation shall not employ its funds or income, or any part thereof, in banking operations, or for any purpose or object other than those expressed in the first section of this act; and that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to prevent Congress from altering, amending, or repealing the same.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend section three of the amendment by inserting after "by-laws," in line six, the words "not inconsistent with the laws of the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

FOUNDRY METHODIST CHURCH.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 506) to authorize the trustees of the Foundry (Methodist Episcopal) Church to sell and convey square No. 235, in the city of Washington.

It proposes to authorize Presley Simpson, James W. Barker, Edward Owen, David A. Gardner, Nathaniel Mullikin, William J. Sibley, Daniel D. T. Leech, Edward F. Simpson, and Richard T. Morsell, trustees of the Foundry (Methodist Episcopal) Church, in the city of Washington, and their successors in office, to sell and convey a certain square of ground in that city known and distinguished on the ground plan thereof as square numbered two hundred and thirty-five, now held by the trustees in trust for that church, and lately used, in part, as a burial ground, free and discharged of and from any trust, express or implied, now existing, or which may hereafter, before the execution of a conveyance of the square, exist, in the trustees or their successors, whether by virtue of the deed originally conveying the same to the trustees of the church, or by virtue of any deed or deeds, certificate or certificates, or any writing or writings whatever, by the trustees or their predecessors, conveying any lot or lots, site or sites, in the part of the square used as a burial ground, and free and discharged of and from any and every right, title, and interest, legal and equitable, now existing in any lot-holder in the burial ground, under any contract with the trustees or their predecessors; but the trustees or their successors are out of the proceeds of the sale to remove or cause to be removed the dead that are now interred in the ground, and to give them decent sepulture in some public cemetery outside the corporate limits of the city of Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not sure that I understand the bill from the reading of it: the honorable chairman will oblige me personally by stating where is the necessity, or whether we have the power to pass such a bill.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill is to relieve the trustees of a trust which was confided to them, and which is substantially recited in the bill itself. A portion of the property which was conveyed to the trustees for church purposes, in trust for the church named, they have used for a burial ground, and parties have been permitted by the church to bury there. It has gone into disuse now for that purpose; the fences are down about it; it is undesirable for that purpose; and not only is it undesirable, but undoubtedly the time has arrived when the city authorities might properly enough invoke the power of Congress to prevent burials there. It being no longer useful for that purpose, the trustees desire to convert it to other purposes, and they propose to dispose of it for other purposes, taking upon themselves by the provisions of this act the obligation and the expense of removing the dead that are now buried there, and give them decent sepulture elsewhere.

I did not know but that there might be some legal question about it, as the honorable Senator suggests at the first start. The Senator from West Virginia presented the bill and examined the question somewhat, and he saw no difficulty in it; but I sent for the deed of trust and for some of the parties whose interests were adverse, if there were any, to wit, those who had burial licenses there, and I came to the conclusion from the best examination I could make of it that there was no legal proposition involved in it; that these parties might be empowered to do what they propose to do without violating the individual rights of any other parties. That is about all there is in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. It suggested itself to me from hearing the bill read that we were about by act of Congress to change the contract made between the original donors or grantors and the person for whose benefit the trust was created. The deed is not before us. The honorable member from West Virginia perhaps can tell what the trust is. I suppose that under the trust as it exists by the deed the trustees would have no authority to dispose at all of the title which is in them legally, and purchase property elsewhere. It also suggested itself to me that if there was a power, notwithstanding the trust, in Congress to legislate as proposed, there might be some objection to legislating for the particular object that is in view. I am exceedingly unwilling, as we all are, to disturb the dead. It is rather revolting to the feelings of all humane men to have the bones of the dead dug up and transferred elsewhere, unless there be some commanding necessity looking to the health or the actual interest of the locality in which the burials may have taken place. I should like to know from my friend from West Virginia what is the trust which prevents the trustees themselves accomplishing the same end that is proposed to be accomplished by means of this legislation.

Mr. WILLEY. It is true that I introduced this bill originally and had it referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I did so upon no particular personal examination of my own, but from representations made to me by certain parties, who desired the action of Congress asked for in this bill. They made to me certain representations which satisfied me that if their representations were true it was a case proper for the interference of Congress, and for the passage of a bill of the character which they asked. It was represented to me that a long time ago a certain square or lot, at that time far outside of the city, was conveyed to the Methodist Episcopal Church for the general purposes of that church; and that since that time they gave authority for certain persons to bury their dead within the limits of that square. Many years ago certain persons did bury their dead there and the square was improved for a while; but in consequence of the approach of population and the city toward this square, indeed surrounding it and beyond it, as the lot itself being a small one, it became in their opinion a place improper for burial purposes, and many of the parties who had buried their dead there, seeing that the improvements on the lot were going into dilapidation, moved by respect for the dead, of their own free will took up the remains and transferred them to cemeteries outside of the city. Both on account of its being encroached upon by the population and from the abandonment of it for burial purposes by many of those who had the remains of their dead there, it seemed to me highly improper that it should be any longer retained for that purpose.

I made inquiry as to the character of the conveyance that had been made to the trustees of this church originally. I was assured that there was no special trust contained in the deed limiting the use of that lot to any definite or particular purpose; but I advised the parties to place in the possession of the chairman of the committee the original deed, or a copy of it, so that he might be advised upon that subject. Upon inquiry of him just now I learned that the deed was placed in his possession and that it did not contain any limitations of the character that I have referred to, making it obligatory to appropriate the lot to any specific purpose; but the deed has been withdrawn by the parties and is not now here. I understand from the chairman, however, that such is the character of the deed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am satisfied.

Mr. WILLEY. I am certain the city will have to interfere before long, and as a police regulation take these remains away. The bill, I understand, makes ample provision for the removal of the remains and their decent sepulture elsewhere. It is a matter of necessity to the church to have this lot sold. The city will be benefited by it; the friends of the dead will be benefited by it, and the church will be benefited by it, in my estimation. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say a word in response to the remark of the Senator from Maryland, that the dead ought not to be disturbed. That question arose whether suitable provision ought to be made and whether this was an adversary proceeding. A letter was addressed to me by the parties interested saying that if provision should be made for the removal of the dead and their decent sepulture elsewhere all concerned were satisfied there would be no objection to the measure. I did not, therefore, regard the bill as in any sense an adversary proceeding.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHARMACEUTICAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. YATES. I move to take up Senate bill No. 175.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 175) to incorporate the Pharmaceutical Association of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to constitute Valentine Harbaugh, John L. Kidwell, Joseph W. Nairn, Francis S. Walsh, John A. Milburn, Joseph B. Moore, James N. Callan, Samuel E. Tyson, and such other persons as are now members of the association in the District of Columbia known as the Pharmaceutical Association of the District of Columbia, or shall hereafter become members of the same, a corporation and body-politic, for the purpose of cultivating, improving, and making known a knowledge of pharmacy, its collateral branches of science, and the best modes of preparing medicines and of giving instruction in the same.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not sure that I understand the extent of the limitation as to the value of the property which this corporation is to hold. I think the bill says that the amount of real and personal property which they may hold is not to exceed $20,000 in value. That limitation is too small to carry out the purposes of the corporation if that be the meaning of the limitation. They are to buy a lot and build a house, and I suppose the house and lot would cost at least $20,000. Then they are to buy all the personal property absolutely necessary to the objects of the corporation. I suggest to my friend from Illinois that he had better look at the limitation to be found in the first section and see whether it is not too small a limitation, provided it applies to all the property they may hold.

Mr. YATES. This is an enterprise inaugurated by the young men in the apothecary stores, more particularly to have some means provided to secure the correct preparation of medicines according to physicians' prescriptions, and to promote medical sciences generally. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland is very correct, and I move to amend the bill by striking out in the nineteenth line of the first section the word "twenty" and inserting "forty," so as to make $40,000 the limit.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it would be better to say $50,000.

Mr. YATES. Very well; I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the phraseology of the bill in the twelfth line of the first section, where these words are used, "and as such to have continuance forever." I do not see any very great objection to this clause, as it is qualified by the succeeding words, "or until Congress shall direct this charter to cease and determine," but I think the language is a little unusual, and if there be no objection I move to strike out "to have continuance forever or until" and insert "shall have perpetual succession unless."

Mr. JOHNSON. That is better.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

VAGRANT CHILDREN.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the bill (S. No. 573) supplementary to the act incorporating the Newsboys' Home and providing for the relief of certain minor children in the District of Columbia, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to change the name of the "Newsboys' Home of Washington city" to that of the "Newsboys' Home and Children's Aid Society of the District of Columbia," and to enlarge the powers and duties of its president and board of managers as to embrace minor children committed to their care by the parents of such children, or by the persons charged with their maintenance, and also other minor children, being vagrant, destitute, or deserted by their parents or by the persons charged with their maintenance, and proceeds to make provision for the mode of committing such children.

Mr. JOHNSON. The purpose of the bill is evidently a proper one, and all I propose to do by way of amendment is to secure to the parents of vagrant children who are too poor to do anything for them, and who are members of a church, the privilege of having their children turned over to a society which may belong to that church and which may be capable of taking care of them in the way suggested by the bill. I understand that there was at one time in New York a bill pretty much like the one upon the table, and the operation of it was found to be very injurious in the estimation of the Catholic church, particularly in what they supposed was the interest of that church. Children were taken up found wandering about the streets and sent to some Protestant association, and the parents never found out where their children were, and had no means of finding out. A society was afterward incorporated in New York authorized to take charge of children of that description, and it was made obligatory on the persons whose duty it was to take charge of vagrant children and children without parents to turn them over to the particular church of the parents if it had an association of the kind. We have in the city of Baltimore an institution of that sort, which operates, as I have reason to believe, very beneficially, and it is approved of, not only by members of the Catholic church, but by the members of the other religious societies. I propose, therefore, to amend this bill by inserting as a new section, after the third section, the following:

And be it further enacted, That when the said courts or magistrates shall discover from competent testimony that the children brought before them belong to parents who are members of some particular religious denomination or society, these children shall be handed over by the action of the courts or magistrates or the agent or committee of their respective religious denomination: Provided, It be well ascertained that the latter have made sufficient provision for the care and protection of such children: And provided also, That the parents or guardians of the children be immediately notified of such proceedings.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think that ought to be allowed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why not?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think we ought to legislate for a sectarian affair. I do not think the courts of law ought to be charged with the duty of settling whether this child or that child belongs to a particular theology or a particular sect or a particular denomination. I should regret exceedingly to see the day when it should become the duty of the judicial tribunals of this country to settle whether the custody of a particular child should be given over to a particular sect or denomination. If the charity herein provided for is not broad enough, and if it is not safe to trust this authority in the hands of these persons, irrespective of the religious creeds of the parents, and we are to remand a child to custody according to the religious opinions of the parents, I think we had better abandon the whole thing.

That is the way it strikes me. It would be inevitable in the nature of the case, according to the provisions of this amendment, that if a child were brought before a magistrate the magistrate must inquire into the facts, the religious character of the parents; and further, whether the society of the church or denomination or sect to which such parent or child belonged, the parent particularly, is in a condition to make suitable provision for the child. I do not see but what you would have arrayed before that magistrate a war of sects inevitably, which, it strikes me, is very much to be deprecated.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not see how there can be any war of sects if the amendment should be adopted and carried out in its true spirit according to its true meaning. We are about to incorporate now certain persons; I do not know to what religious sect they belong, either in whole or in part; but the practical operation, I understand, of a measure of this description, in the absence of some such amendment as I have suggested, is that all children who are taken up are sent to the particular religious society and brought up in the particular religion to which the corporators belong, and the result has been, as I am told, that hundreds and hundreds of children never find out who their parents are and the parents are never able to find out where their children are. The effect of an amendment of this description would be to enable the parent to find out, because he would go to the church to which he belonged, and if there was an association attached to that church competent to carry out the object of the bill he would find in all probability that his child was there.

So far from its attempting to interfere with the religious notions people may entertain it would seem to me to be clearly right that a Methodist parent, who would naturally desire to have his child educated by some Methodist association, should be secured in bringing that result about, and so in relation to the other sects.

There is, for example, in Baltimore an institution established by the Catholic church which takes charge of the children belonging to that church who are not able to take care of themselves or whose parents are not able to take care of them, and who have no means left to them by others with which to educate themselves; and it has operated, as I am told by those in whom I place every reliance, most beneficially. There is also in the State of New York an institution like the one established now in Baltimore, and the operation of that institution has been very beneficial.

Now, although it is wrong for us to interfere in any religious controversy, yet I suppose it is perfectly right that we should not by legislation interfere antagonistically to what each religious persuasion may suppose to be the true interest of its flock. There is no difficulty in ascertaining to what religious society a parent belongs; and unless that is ascertained the child is to be taken entirely under the control of the corporation to whom we are about now to give this franchise. I say to my friend from Maine that I am perfectly satisfied that if the bill passes in its present shape it will cause very great dissatisfaction and will serve to annoy the ladies who are to manage this institution. They will be involved in all sorts of disputes if they take for example a Catholic child and insist upon educating that child against the wishes of the parents. All that this amendment provides is that when they find that a child is, for example, the child of Catholic parents, and that there is a Catholic institution capable of taking care of that child, he shall be sent to that institution, nothing more.

Mr. GRIMES. I beg leave to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia whether there is an appeal from the decision of the magistrate, so that we can get the benefit of the construction of the supreme court of the District or the Supreme Court of the United States upon the theological questions that will be sure to arise under this proposition.

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; there is no appeal provided for here.

Mr. GRIMES. I am afraid there will be a great diversity of construction put upon the theological dogmas of various religious societies by the several magistrates who may have the power to commit these waifs to the care of this corporation. I do not see how under the amendment it can be otherwise than that they must enter into the question as to what are the particular theological beliefs of the parents. I think, therefore, if the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is adopted there should be an allowance of an appeal, so that we can have the question finally and authoritatively settled what are the tenets of the various religious denominations.

Mr. JOHNSON. Without some such amendment as this the result will be that this corporation will have the right to take care of the children, irrespective entirely of what may be the religious faith of the parents. You cannot give an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; but when you authorize a magistrate to take up a child it would seem to be no great stretch of power to say that he is to send the child to the church to which its parents belong if he can find it out. If he cannot find it out, it goes to the institution that these corporators may establish.

Mr. MORRILL. The practical effect of this amendment, if I understand it, is this: the bill provides that destitute, vagrant, abandoned children may be taken before a magistrate with a view to examining into such vagrancy, destitution, or abandonment. If that fact is found to exist, then the judicial authorities are authorized to transfer the care and custody of such children to this public charity. That is the object of the bill. Now, the amendment provides that if upon such proceedings in the case of a destitute, vagrant, or abandoned child before the court, any party shall appear and suggest for sectarian considerations, or religious considerations if you please, that there is some other body that desires the custody of the child, and then satisfy the court that the party so interposing will take care of this child and provide for it, then the object of this law is to be thwarted, the whole proceedings are to be suspended, and the judge, instead of conferring the custody and care of the child on this charity or to these persons, is to confer it upon the parties who interpose. In this way the objects of this bill are frustrated. Clearly it is so when you put it in the power of anybody to interpose.

There is no propriety in this bill except upon the ground that vagrancy, destitution, or abandonment does exist; and if it does exist, and it is proper for the civil authorities to interpose and confide the care of such children to such an institution as this, then I submit that it is not proper that parties should have the right in this way to interpose to prevent it. This is a reason, in addition to those I suggested when I was up before, why I think this provision is not only incompatible with the objects of the bill, but highly inexpedient, and will render this whole bill, I should say, worse than useless.

Mr. SUMNER. When the Senator from Maryland made his proposition, it did not seem to me as much open to objection as it does now. I have listened to my friend, the chairman of the committee, and I feel that his argument cannot be answered. The proposition of the Senator from Maryland will call upon our courts to enter into an inquiry with regard to the religious belief or denomination of the parents of a child. I do not think it expedient to call upon our courts to do any such thing; I hope therefore that the Senator from Maryland will not press his amendment. I feel that if he does press it it may interfere with the bill. He knows very well that the object of the bill is a thoroughly correct one, and that this charity is in the hands of competent and benevolent persons.

There is another remark I will make. It seems to me that the children the Senator has in view and that would be provided for by his amendment would hardly be brought before the court for commitment to the custody of this society. If there are children of a denomination that has such a society as this, having such purposes, such objects, and competent to take care of the children, there will be no occasion then for the interference of this society. The children would not be brought before the court; they would already be provided for, because the object of this society is not to go forward and find children, to pick them up even, it is not to volunteer charity where charity is dispensed from other quarters or where there are parents who can take care of the children. It is to meet a positive want, where the parents are unable to provide for the children or where there are no other natural guardians to the children. It strikes me that a religious denomination, having such a society as is contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, would be to a certain extent a guardian of these children, so that those children would be in a measure provided for. They would not be candidates for the charity of this society. I hope, therefore, the Senator will not press his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am sorry that I cannot yield to the request of the honorable member from Massachusetts, because I think there is a very clear and paramount principle involved. If the bill passes, and the corporators of this institution get possession of the child first, before an institution belonging to the religious sect to which the parents of the child belongs can get possession of him, then they are to take him away from the instruction which that sect would give him. I cannot imagine what possible inconvenience it can be to this society, what possible injurious effect it can have upon the object for which we are asked to incorporate them, if it be made their duty, when they ascertain in such way as the amendment provides that the parents of the child belong to any particular sect, and that sect has an institution capable of taking care of the child, to refer the child to that institution. We shall have a controversy beyond all doubt, I think, if a different rule prevail. Suppose the parent is away or the child is wandering away from his home and he is taken possession of, as it is made the duty of these corporators to do; and the parent returns, or the parent finds out where his child is, where he has wandered, and he insists upon having possession of the child upon the ground that he has been taken from him without his knowledge or consent, and is being educated in a religious faith which he does not hold, and an application be made to the court, that will produce a religious contest which it will be impossible to avoid. In other words, without being intended, of course, (because I know the corporators mean to do what they think to be right,) it is really forcing out of the possession of the parent, who is not upon the spot to look over the interest of the child, his child, and to assume on the part of Congress the authority to educate the child as they think proper.

Let me illustrate it by referring to my friend from Maine. It may happen to him, as it happens to parents equally respectable, that his child wanders away and gets into the city of Washington without his knowledge; he does not know where he is, and there is a Catholic institution here endowed with the powers you are about to confer on this institution, and they take possession of the child in the city of Washington and place the child within their own control and insist upon educating him in their religious faith; what would he say if he found it out? He would insist on having possession of the child and having the child educated according to the faith which he holds. I think he would complain very much. I think I should complain if the case was mine.

Looking to the decision which we hold in relation to religious faith, what right have we to step in between the parent and the child and claim the power to educate the child in a religion according to our own notions, and not in accordance to the notions of him or of her who is more particularly interested in the welfare of the child?

I know, Mr. President, that this is a matter in which the Catholic church particularly take a deep interest. Nearly all the immigrants that come from Europe, especially from Ireland, belong to that faith. Although they are very industrious, a great many of them are comparatively careless; but they believe in the doctrine of their church, and in no other. It happens that sometimes their children are taken up and placed in charge of an institution of this description and brought up in a different belief, and often they are unable even to find out that they are in existence.

If I thought it would interfere with the humane purposes of the franchise I would not offer the amendment, but believing, as I do, that it will promote the object and at the same time secure the rights of all citizens I must ask for a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. The fallacy of the argument of the honorable Senator is that he assumes that we propose to take children who are not destitute.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I do not.
Mr. MORRILL. The argument assumes that that thing may occur. Now, there can be no such case as the honorable Senator supposes possibly happening. No jurisdiction at all attaches unless the child is destitute or vagrant or abandoned by the parent. If he has Catholic parents who have the custody and care of him, the law does not attach; no jurisdiction whatever attaches. When a case of destitution or vagrancy or abandonment does occur, and the law has the child in custody, my objection is to the interposition of any person on a sectarian ground interfering with the charity which the law has established for such a child. And I maintain that the condition of the child, its health, its education, its physical comforts are a thousandfold above the consideration which may be attached to any sectarian view whatever, and I resist at the threshold any attempt to interpose a sectarian claim against the general supervision of the State over the health and the condition of the child. Nothing could be more pernicious than such an interference.

This is not a new question exactly. Here, upon a measure of general legislation that is independent of sect, which proposes to distribute the public charity for the general comfort and health of the entire community, without regard to sect, we have an attempt of a sect, I will not say for sectarian purposes—I do not pretend to say that these people are not sincere and sincerely desirous of doing everything, perhaps, for their own people that this bill proposes; but I should like to know whether it is a well-settled principle of this country that any sect has a right to interpose its sectarianism against the general policy of the law. If it is a general policy of the law to provide for destitute and abandoned children in this way, I object to the interposition of any church or any sect upon any such ground.

This is not a new question. It entered our schools in one section of the country. I think we had better keep it out of the schools. I thought so then, when that controversy went on, and I should regret to see it renewed here. It is a renewal of the old question: No sect in this country is privileged to interpose its authority for sectarian purposes against that policy which the law lays down to be sound for the public weal; and we are legislating now for the public weal. I do not wish to use any language which I should be sorry for afterward; but I was about to say that I think it particularly offensive that any sect should feel authorized to object against the establishment of such general policy on the ground that it would not be favorable to that particular sect. Sir, I deny that any sect or denomination in this country has the care especially of any portion of our population.

I would be liberal, and the legislation of this District, I think, so far as I have had any connection with it, will show that I have totally disregarded any sectarian considerations. I would as soon confer this upon one sect as another; still I hope I shall never fail to resist any attempt on the part of any particular sect to interpose its authority against general policy. And now I take occasion to remind my honorable friend from Maryland that those for whom he speaks here have not always been quite as disinterested I am afraid. I remember at their solicitation to have granted a charter which is absolutely exclusive in its character, which authorizes them to take within their jurisdiction children into an institution over which we have no power of visitation even, and there is no limitation in that authority to any particular sect; they may go anywhere, take any child that is destitute and without care. There was no suggestion then that they should be confined exclusively to those of their own particular religious faith; but the honorable Senator will find that by the provisions of that charter they are at liberty to go where they please, without regard to sect or denomination or the particular religious faith of the child, wherever they find destitution and want to relieve it; and we did not authorize any individual or sect to interpose against that authority. That is the principle which lies at the bottom of this public policy—relieve suffering, relieve destitution and want wherever you find it to exist really; but you must find it to exist; you must either get the consent of the parent, or if you cannot get that, you must find destitution or want actually existing. In such a case relieve it, and allow nobody for any purpose to interfere. That is the principle upon which this bill proceeds.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member from Maine rests his opposition to this amendment on grounds altogether fallacious. This is not an attempt suggested by me or by any persons from whom I got the suggestion to interpose any religious controversy in the administration of this charity. It is not designed to interfere with the charity at all. The charity is to provide for destitute children a means of maintenance and an education. Now, what says the amendment? That if these corporations find a destitute child and find that the parents of that child belong to any religious sect, not the Roman church, but any particular religious sect, and that sect has an institution of its own for the maintenance and education of its own children, they are to hand the child over to that institution. That is all. What possible interference is that which can be denominated a controversy such as the honorable member denounces as unjust?

He says that no religious sect has any right to interfere with the general jurisprudence of the country in taking care of the wants of the people. That is true; and this is not intended at all to interfere with it. We leave the duty precisely as we find it, but only say to these corporations, "If you are satisfied—not without—that the parents of the child belong to a particular religious association, and that association has a charity like this, competent to do all that the bill expects or wishes to be done, you are to hand the child over to that particular institution instead of taking charge of the child and educating it in a different religious faith." I am convinced, Mr. President, that so far from its impairing or weakening the object of the association it will very much strengthen it and increase the numbers who are to be benefited by the contemplated charity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the proposed amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON. I must ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. That will break us up by disclosing the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the Senator from Maryland asks that the vote be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, and move to postpone the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. With the Senator's permission, I will ask that the bill may be informally laid aside, so that we may proceed to the consideration of some other bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be done by common consent, no objection being made.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is laid aside by common consent.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 492.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 492) to protect the rights of married women, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the District of Columbia reported this bill with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute, and the substitute only will be read unless some Senator asks for the reading of the original bill.

The Secretary read the matter proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That any married woman, of any age, may own in her own right real and personal estate acquired by descent, gift, or purchase, and may manage, sell, convey, and devise the same by will as if sole, and without the joinder or assent of her husband; nor shall such property so held in her own right be liable for any debt, contract, or obligation of her husband contracted either before or after marriage; but real estate directly or indirectly conveyed to her by her husband, or paid for by him, or devised to her by his relatives, cannot be conveyed by her without the joinder of her husband in such conveyance. When payment was made for property conveyed to her from the property of her husband, or was conveyed by him to her without a valuable consideration paid therefor, it may be taken as the property of her husband to pay his debts contracted before such conveyance.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That any married woman may release to her husband the right to control her property, or any part of it, and to dispose of the income thereof for their mutual benefit, and may in writing revoke the same.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That any married woman may prosecute and defend suits at law or in equity for the preservation and protection of her property as if unmarried, or may do so jointly with her husband, but neither of them shall be arrested on such writ or execution, nor shall he alone be able to maintain an action respecting his wife's property. She may receive the wages of her own labor not performed for her own family, maintain an action therefor in her own name, and hold the said wages in her own right against her husband or any other person.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That hereafter, when any man shall marry, his property shall be exempt from any and all liability for debts or contracts of his wife made or contracted before marriage; but an action to recover the same may be maintained against the said husband and wife, and the property of said wife held in her own right, if any, shall alone be subject to attachment, levy, or sale on execution, to satisfy all liabilities for such debts and contracts in the same manner as if she were unmarried.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That when any married woman shall die intestate, seized or possessed of any property, real or personal, in her own right, the same shall descend to her heirs in like manner as if she were unmarried.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the husband and wife by a marriage settlement executed in the presence of two witnesses before marriage may determine what rights each shall have in the other's estate during the marriage and after its dissolution by death, and may bar each other of all rights in their respective estates not so secured to them.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That when a husband abandons his wife and leaves the District of Columbia without making sufficient provision for her maintenance, or is confined in the penitentiary in execution of a sentence, the orphans' court of said District, on her application, may authorize his wife, during such absence or confinement, to make contracts, under seal or otherwise, and any person holding personal property to which her said husband is entitled, in her right may pay and deliver the same to her for her disposal, and her discharge therefor shall be valid. Such application shall be presented and notice given thereof in the same manner as is now provided by law in case of libel for divorce before such powers shall be granted.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That all contracts lawfully made by virtue of such power shall be binding upon her and her husband, and during such absence or confinement she may sue or be sued thereon; and for all acts done by her an execution may be enforced against her as if unmarried; and no suit shall be abated by the return or release of her husband, but he may, on application, be admitted to prosecute or defend jointly with her.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That when any married woman shall come into the District of Columbia from any State or county without her husband, he having never lived with her in said District, she may make contracts and commence and defend suits and dispose of property in her own name as if she were unmarried, and shall be liable to be sued on her contracts made before his arrival in said District; but if the husband of such woman shall afterward come into this District and claim his marital rights his arrival shall have the same effect as to contracts made by her, or suits pending in which she is a party, as if they had been first married at the time of his arrival in the District, and shall have no other.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That whenever administration shall hereafter be granted on the estate of any married woman whose husband survives her, the judge of the orphans' court shall be authorized to allow to the husband, in the account of the administrator, all reasonable expenses paid by him on account of the last sickness of the deceased.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not prepared to say that the provisions of this bill are not right. They strike me as such as the Senate ought very carefully to deliberate upon before we adopt them. The bill changes the whole law which now controls the rights of married women and their husbands. One of the sections, if I understand it aright, says that upon the death of the wife the husband shall inherit no property at all, and have no interest of any kind in the property which may have belonged to the wife. The law makes him, if there are children, a tenant by courtesy. This bill abolishes that title in the District. It seems to me, looking to that provision, and to several of the other provisions of the bill, it almost destroys the relation of husband and wife as it now exists. I will ask my friend from Maine if this has been taken from any law to be found in any of the States or in England, either now existing or that ever did exist? I think it would be in accordance with the spirit of the bill to add another section, if the bill is right, to say that they might separate whenever they thought proper.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They do now. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. No; they do not destroy the relation. What I mean is, that they may divorce themselves, a statutory divorce, so as to enable them to marry again. The principle of the common law, which has recommended itself to adoption almost universally, is to avoid, if possible, all causes of dispute between husband and wife, to make them in point of fact one. So they are regarded in point of law; and, generally speaking, I do not think the wife has suffered at all by force of the doctrine that they are to be considered as one. For generally she is that one [laughter] and controls everything, as she ought. But to deny the husband any right to the property at any time, and to make her a femme sole for all purposes during life and at the moment of death, so as to be able to dispose of her property, seems to me to be legislation of very doubtful expediency.

Mr. MORRILL. I was about to explain to the Senate the character of this bill when the honorable Senator from Maryland rose, and I am always so much edified and instructed by him that I was glad to see him take the floor before I was quite ready to explain it. But I am quite surprised that the Senator should think that the features of this bill are novel in the legislation of the country. They are novel in this District, it is true. If I supposed the honorable Senator meant to convey the idea that this legislation has escaped his attention for the last twenty-five years in the country at large it would be surprising to me.

That the bill is not in harmony, however, with the principles of the common law, I concede. The object of the bill is to relieve the wife from some of the principles of the common law. Now, in our portion of the country we have got over those principles a long time ago. The husband has no right to flog the wife in my country. It would be considered an indecorum and a public outrage, but the common law justifies it; and it may be done here in this District I suppose. We have established that right.

Mr. SHERMAN. "Reasonable correction."

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; such as may be inflicted by a broomstick or the like. Now, we have legislated against that principle of the common law as a barbarity, and a married woman has a right to be exempt in my country from such flagellations, from that authority of the lord of creation. We have established a right, a civil right, and she is independent of him. I know it is in contravention of the principle of the common law.

Following in that line somewhat we have just such provisions as these in our State and in most of the States of New England, and I believe in New York, which contravene some of the principles of the common law; that is, we have come to the conclusion in our region of the country that there is no reason in the world why the property of a woman should not be secured to her and her heirs against the profligacy or arbitrary control of her husband. That is just what the first section of this bill provides, that a woman who has property in her own right shall hold it in her own right and may convey it in her own right. If the husband has her confidence, and is a worthy man, and the property is secured, she may give him authority to convey it, to deal with it, occupy it, possess it, manage it. That is provided for in the second section of this bill. That is what the first two sections of this bill mean, and nothing more.

The third section provides that in case she holds her property separate, as provided in the first section of the bill, she may defend it; she may bring a suit at law in her own name or jointly with her husband.

The fourth section provides that hereafter when any man shall marry his property shall be exempt from any and all liability for debts or contracts of his wife made or contracted before marriage. Thus you see that while we protect the rights of the wife, we do not really oppress the husband. The husband has his rights. He is not to be chargeable with the debts of his wife contracted before marriage. The principle of the common law saddles him, I believe, with all the debts of the wife. If he married her, he married her obligations, her liabilities, her debts, and all her incumbrances. This bill, therefore, is just to him. While it is just to the wife, it is just to the husband. That is all there is in the fourth section.

The next section is the one to which I understand the honorable Senator most to object, that the husband cannot inherit her property. Is that really a grievance? Why, sir, it is secured to her and her heirs.

Mr. JOHNSON. He is a tenant by courtesy, then.

Mr. MORRILL. The only difference there is in the world between this bill and the principles of the common law in this respect is, that by the principles of the common law he was a tenant by courtesy, and here there is no courtesy about it. The wife has the right, if she chooses, to confer upon him the management or the possession of the property; otherwise not. In our country the result has been just this: here are the rights of the wife—they are never resorted to except in an extreme case, except in the case of a profligate husband or something of that sort—but here is the right secured; and it has operated beneficially. I submit that although this section violates the principles of the common law, it is not in violation of right.

The sixth section provides that the husband and wife by a marriage settlement executed in the presence of two witnesses before marriage may determine what rights each shall have in the other's estate. My honorable friend will know better than I; but I believe that is in harmony with the principles of the common law. I believe, on certain terms, conditions, and limitations, and for certain considerations, a marriage settlement may be made which secures rights in property. This section is rather in affirmation, perhaps, than in derogation of the principles of the common law.

The seventh section provides that when the husband abandons his wife and leaves the District of Columbia, without making sufficient provision for her maintenance, or is confined in the penitentiary, then she may act as his legal agent and administrator upon property. In case of his disability by absence, or in case of disability, which more often occurs, by forfeiture of his civil rights for the time being for crime, the wife is to be his legal representative, and may administer the property till his return. That is not exactly in derogation of the principles of the common law; but I suggest that it does not occur to me that any injury can result from such a provision.

The eighth section provides that all contracts lawfully made by the wife in such cases shall be binding upon her and her husband. This is simply in continuation of the power given in the seventh section by which she is constituted his legal agent.

Now, Mr. President, those are the general features of the bill. To repeat, they provide, in the first place, that the rights of property which the married woman possesses in her own right, independent of her husband, shall remain to her. If she chooses to confer the possession of these rights or the management of them upon her husband, or convey them to him absolutely outright, she may do it. Further, the bill provides that she may enter the courts for the defense and protection of her property; and then as regards limitation as to the descent of the property, I do not understand that it changes the principles of the common law on that subject. The property goes to her heirs by this bill; and so it would, I believe, by the principles of the common law. The only change in this respect is that under this bill the husband is not a tenant by courtesy.

These are the essential features of the bill. They are common to very many of the States; I cannot say how many. The bill as it was introduced originally I thought a little crude, and I presented it to the Senate in a new draft. I will say to the honorable Senator that the provisions of this bill I found in the statutes of my own State and those of Massachusetts.

Mr. DAVIS. I think this bill ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and be carefully considered by that committee. If I understand the bill, the old rule that the husband is bound to support his wife is not interfered with by it, and yet against the consent of the husband, and in defiance of it, the bill, if I understand it, authorizes the wife to sell any or all property that she may own at the time, or during the coverture. Now, Mr. President, this feature of the bill, it strikes me, might lead to a great deal of domestic strife, and it might operate unjustly and oppressively upon the husband. If the wife has property, the avails of which may be appropriated to her support, and the husband is left with the legal obligation upon him to support his wife, it seems to me it would be very unjust and very impolitic to give her the absolute power to dispose of her own estate.

There is a great disposition, I think, in this Committee on the District of Columbia, and especially in the chairman, to transfer New England to the District of Columbia, and to adopt the institutions, laws, and customs of New England for the government of the people of this District, both white and black. Now, sir, that might in some respects be very well; but I think the honorable Senator, in this and in other bills, is bringing rather too much of New England to the District of Columbia. I think that in a thin Senate, when not more than one third or one fourth of the members are present, a bill of this importance, and which may have such results as the one under consideration ought not to be allowed to pass.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know but I ought to say a word in reference to the remark of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, though I do not understand whether the honorable Senator intended it as a compliment or as a censure. He thinks there is a strong purpose on the part of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to incorporate New England into the District of Columbia. I hope the honorable Senator will do me the credit to believe that I would not wish to transfer New England here in any other sense than that in which I have so often heard the honorable Senator from Kentucky speak of it. Whatever is good in New England, in New England ideas or institutions, I should be extremely glad to see incorporated in the laws of the District of Columbia, and I know that the honorable Senator from Kentucky would second me in that effort as cheerfully as any other member of the Senate.

I am not conscious that I have any other purpose or have legislated with any other view than to what I believed to be the best interest of the District of Columbia. I certainly am not conscious of having exercised the position which has been confided to me by the Senate with any other view than to advance the general interests of the District, whether they were notions peculiar to New England or any other section of the country. But, sir, I see that I shall hardly get on with the opposition that is made to this bill at the present moment, and if it is the purpose of the honorable Senator from Kentucky to divide the Senate on this question I shall be obliged to ask the indulgence of the Senate to lay it aside for a moment and proceed to the consideration of some other bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I will thank the honorable Senator to take that course.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope, then, the Senate will indulge me by laying this bill aside for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS.) It will be laid aside if there be no objection.

NATHAN SARGENT DUSTIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I will ask the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 470.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 470) to authorize the change of a name. It authorizes Nathan Sargent Dustin to change his name by dropping therefrom the name of Dustin, and to bear that of Nathan Sargent, to take effect from the 1st of January, 1867.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The following message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives having proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the bill entitled "An act for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union," returned to the Senate by the President of the United States with his objections, and sent by the Senate to the House of Representatives with the message of the President returning the said bill, have passed said bill, two thirds of the House having voted therefor.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1127) to fix the salary of the quartermaster sergeant of the battalion of Engineers; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by W. G. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that he had approved and signed on the 8th instant the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 433) for the relief of E. J. Curley; and a joint resolution (S. R. No. 94) providing for the payment of certain Kentucky militia forces.

MARYLAND DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Senate bill No. 295 repealing thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland so far as the same has been recognized or adopted in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Legislation on the subject-matter of this bill was had at the last session of Congress which renders this bill unimportant, and I therefore move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL JURIES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 449.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 449) authorizing special juries in the District of Columbia.

It provides that in any suit or action pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and in any criminal prosecution pending in that court, either party to such suit, and the district attorney of such District, or the respondent in any criminal prosecution, may apply to any of the judges of the court for an order for a special jury for the trial of such suit or prosecution; and if it be made to appear to the satisfaction of such judges that an impartial trial of such suit or prosecution cannot be had by a jury selected within the District, the judges are to make an order that a special jury be drawn for the trial of the suit or prosecution, to be selected from such county without the District as the judges shall direct. The order is to direct the number of jurors to be drawn, and name two persons to select the jurors, and upon the return of a certificate by the persons appointed of the jurors selected the court is to issue a venire to the marshal of the District to summon the jurors so selected to attend upon a day named in such venire, and the court may specially assign a day for the trial of such suit or prosecution. From the persons so drawn and summoned a jury is to be selected by lot, and the same right of challenge may be exercised as by law is given in other cases. The marshal, for summoning such jurors, is to be entitled to the fees now provided by law, and such jurors are to be bound to obey such summons, and the court may compel their attendance as if they resided within the District. The jurors are to receive — dollars for each day's attendance, and — cents per mile for travel. The costs occasioned by the special jury may by the court be ordered to be paid in whole or in part by the party applying therefor, and may be taxed and recovered, as costs, in whole or part, as the court may direct.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with an amendment, in line fourteen after the word "District" to insert the words "in an adjoining State;" so that the clause will read:

Such judges shall make an order that a special jury shall be drawn for the trial of such suit or prosecution, to be selected from such county without the District, in an adjoining State, as such judges shall direct.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope my friend from Maine will not insist on a vote on this bill now. I have not considered the constitutional question, or the question of power rather, which I think is involved. If I understand the bill, it authorizes the court here to summon a jury from Maryland and Virginia to try cases, civil or criminal, in this District.

Mr. MORRILL. That is what it does.

Mr. JOHNSON. The power conferred upon Congress over the District is to legislate in all cases whatever for the District; and how they can under that power go out of the District and compel the people of Maryland to come in to aid them in the administration of justice in the District I am unable to perceive. Indeed, my present impression is very strong that Congress has no such authority. In the case of Cohen vs. the State of Virginia, which involved the right to sell lottery tickets, I think in a lottery authorized by Congress in this District, it was conceded by the Supreme Court that under the authority to legislate for the District there was no authority to make any tickets which might be authorized to be sold in a local lottery here salable outside of the District in any other State. This is worse than that.

We owe no allegiance at all to Congress except the allegiance which the Constitution creates. The power which Congress has over the District is neither more nor less than the power each State has over its own territory, its own legitimate concerns; and it seems to me it would be just as much in the power of Maryland to pass a law authorizing the summoning for the trial of cases in Maryland of citizens from the District as it is in the power of Congress to summon persons from Maryland to try cases arising in the District. The whole effect of the constitutional clause in relation to the District is that the United States are made the State for the District, just as Maryland is a State for its own district of territory. Unless my friend, therefore, can satisfy me that the power exists, I hope he will permit the bill to lie upon the table for the present at any rate, more especially as there are not more than fifteen Senators present.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose I shall have to ask that the bill be laid aside with the consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The bill will be laid aside if there be no objection.

NATIONAL CAPITAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 234.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company. It proposes to create Green Adams, Erastus Poulson, Joseph J. Coombs, Robert Leech, John B. Clark, jr., J. P. Reznor, Fergus M. Blair, Robert L. Owen, and Joseph W. Parish, and others who may become members, a body politic and corporate, by the name and style of the "National Capital Insurance Company," for the purpose of carrying on the business of insurance at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and elsewhere, with the usual powers of a corporation, authorizing them to effect all kinds of fire or life insurance, either on the cash or stock plan, with a capital of not less than $20,000 nor more than $1,000,000.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with various amendments, the first of which was to strike out the ninth section of the bill after the enacting clause in the following words:

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That this company may effect all kinds of fire or life insurance, either on the cash or stock plan, without premium notes, or may require premium notes and a cash amount in addition, as hereinbefore provided for; but any person insuring on the premium-note plan shall be bound to pay his or her share of all losses and expenses incurred by the company, whether the same arise out of losses or expenses growing out of a cash, stock, or a premium-note insurance.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That said company shall be conducted on the plan of mutual assurance, may open books to receive propositions and enter into arrangements for insurance, but shall not commence business until agreements have been entered into for assurance with at least one hundred applicants.

Mr. MORRILL. Perhaps I ought to explain this amendment in a word. It will be seen that by this section as it stood as passed by the House of Representatives all sorts of insurance were provided for. There was the ordinary insurance against fire, and marine, and life, and health. There is no instance that I know of where a company has been chartered with such large powers. I believe the principle of insurance is, that these should always be separate, and the law usually imposes very much larger obligations and greater securities on those companies that propose to insure upon life or health than upon ordinary companies. We propose to amend the bill so as to confine the corporation simply to fire and marine insurance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section thirteen the following:

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the president or vice-president and secretary of said company annually, on or before the 1st day of January, to prepare under oath, and deposit in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall also cause to be published, in some newspaper published in the District of Columbia, a statement exhibiting the total amount of premiums received and the total amount of losses paid and ascertained, including expenses during the year; also the amount of debts owing by said company at the date of the statement, and the amount of claims against the company for losses; also a statement of the funds of the company and the gross amount of outstanding risks thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the bill in the first section, line ten, by striking out the words "and elsewhere." As the bill now stands it would authorize them to insure in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

Mr. JOHNSON. The power of Congress to authorize them, as against the States, to contract insurances out of the limits of the District is one question; but whether we should take from them the authority altogether, if the States do not deny it, is quite another question. There is no State in the Union that has any authority to charter a company to do business out of its own limits; but there is hardly an insurance company in any State that is not in the habit of insuring in other States than in the State where it is incorporated. If this amendment should be adopted, this company can insure only in this District, and it will be comparatively of little or no importance to the corporations or to anybody else. I think the companies now chartered here are authorized to perfect policies outside of the District. They can only do it with the consent of the States where they may undertake to do it. Some of the States require licenses to be taken out by foreign corporations.

I am not aware that there is any State which prohibits a corporation chartered by a sister State, or an English corporation, from effecting insurances outside of its limits. There are now in active operation numbers of such companies with a long line of risks taken by them. A corporation chartered by Parliament has its agency here, with the consent of Congress, and nobody doubts that whatever contracts they enter into will be binding upon the corporation at home, if there should be any contest on the subject. So in relation to State corporations of this description. If they are not prohibited by the law chartering them from effecting policies outside of the State and they effect such policies with the consent of the State where the risk is taken they are bound. I do not see any want of power involved in our not excluding from the authority to effect policies outside of the District.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not understand that the amendment proposes to prohibit them, but simply that we will not expressly authorize them.

Mr. JOHNSON. It does prohibit them.

Mr. MORRILL. My understanding was the same as that of the Senator from Indiana. The bill proposes to authorize them to go elsewhere.

Mr. JOHNSON. We cannot authorize them to do so. I will ask for the reading of the amendment again.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. My notion about that was that if they were incorporated a body-politic, &c., with these powers to transact business in the city of Washington, they would have the same power to transact business anywhere else that a company chartered by one of the States would. What is that power? Simply by the consent of the authorities of the several States. They must take their chances. We make them a body-politic and corporate. We make them a person in law, and they must take their chances about establishing business anywhere else. We authorize them to establish business here. I think that the use of the words "and elsewhere" in the first section would seem to imply that we authorized them to set up business elsewhere. It does not occur to me that the amendment is open to the criticism of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. JOHNSON. It may be very right to strike out the words "and elsewhere;" but then striking out those words and authorizing them to effect insurances here will place them in the situation that if they insure upon a risk that will occur elsewhere it will not bind the party to the risk he assumes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought the argument of the Senator from Maryland a little while ago was very conclusive that we could not go outside of the District of Columbia to select a jury for this District, because the right to make laws is only for this District. So I think in regard to the organization of a corporation. We can simply, to make a corporation, give it life and existence in this District, and if it is the pleasure of the States to allow that corporation thus created to exercise their privileges in those States, I presume it will be all right.

Mr. JOHNSON. If that is the understanding I have no objection to it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the way I think it ought to be.

Mr. DAVIS. The principle suggested by the honorable Senator from Indiana is certainly correct. By the comity of States the corporation of one State is allowed to do business in another State unless in the latter State it be expressly prohibited. Certainly one State, the State of Indiana for instance, could not by legislation authorize these corporations to do business in any other State; and as the power of Congress over the District of Columbia is restricted territorially to the District, Congress cannot have any more power in relation to the matter than one State would have in relation to legislating for a corporation to transact business in another State. I think that is a very plain proposition, and I hope the honorable chairman of the committee will make his bill conform to what I think is the plain power of Congress.

Mr. MORRILL. I propose that amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend the bill on page 2, line fourteen, by striking out the words "or elsewhere," so as to make it conform to the amendment just adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to strike out the tenth section of the bill. It is rendered unnecessary by the amendments that have been made.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is it about?

Mr. MORRILL. It is providing for the capital stock of the company. As it is now changed to the character of a mutual insurance company the section is unnecessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section proposed to be stricken out will be read. The Secretary read it, as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the capital stock of the company shall not be less than $20,000 nor more than $1,000,000, which first-named amount of $20,000 shall be paid in previous to effecting insurances; and the residue may consist of cash premiums and premium notes received upon risks taken by the company, or such other capital, in shares of fifty dollars each, as may by the by-laws be added.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am sorry that the bill is changed so as to make this a mutual insurance company instead of an ordinary company. I do not think in their very nature the mutual companies are very safe companies. To meet losses calls have to be made upon the stockholders, or rather the persons who are insured. It is a very unreliable fund, and the most unsatisfactory sort of insurance company. While I do not oppose the bill seriously I do not want by my silence to acquiesce in that principle.

Mr. MORRILL. I am very much of the honorable Senator's opinion myself; but I saw no option. The bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, provided in the ninth section that this company might effect all kinds of fire or life insurance, either on the cash or stock plan. That certainly was a novel feature. We have endeavored to guard against abuse or fraud by inserting a provision directing the officers of the company annually to make a return of the exact condition of the affairs of the company, which is to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be published in a newspaper in this city.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Some companies, I know, that are based on this mutual principle have been great evils to the country. Perhaps some have been successful; but they can only be successful by requiring a reasonable amount of money to be kept on hand to meet losses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read a third time, and passed.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA—VETO.

Mr. WADE. I will ask the Senator from Maine to permit me to offer a resolution that is necessary to complete some legislation, and which will take but a moment:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to present to the Secretary of State the bill entitled "An act for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union," together with the certificates of the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, showing that the said act was passed by a vote of two thirds of both Houses of Congress after the same had been returned to the Senate by the President with his objections, and after the reconsideration of said act by both Houses of Congress in accordance with the Constitution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REPEAL OF DISTRICT LAWS.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 15.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 15) to repeal certain laws and ordinances in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported adversely by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think it is necessary to read that bill, as I observe that the committee report it adversely. I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 183.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 183) concerning the fire department of Washington city. It proposes to grant the right to have, use, and occupy all the several buildings, with their appurtenances, known as the Union, Franklin, Columbia, and Anacostia engine-houses to the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, the possession and occupation to continue so long as used for the purposes of the fire department and the pleasure of the Congress of the United States; but the use and occupancy of the Columbia engine-house is not in any way to interfere with the possession and occupancy by the Columbia fire company of the rooms now used as library rooms in that building.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I think we are not in a condition to proceed to-day with the legislation of the District in matters that are controverted. I therefore send to the Secretary's table the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That Tuesday evening next, at half past seven o'clock, be assigned for the consideration of legislation for the District of Columbia.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS RECOMMITTED.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to recommit two or three bills, if the Senator from Maine will allow me to do so.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly; I am pretty much wound up.

Mr. WILSON. There are some bills here which I think can be put together and thus save time, and therefore I desire to have them recommitted. They are the bill for the national cemeteries, the bill in relation to the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home, and the bill temporarily to increase the pay of the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the bill (H. R. No. 848) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home" was passed on the 30th of January, and the next day a motion to reconsider was entered by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] and that motion must first be disposed of by the Senate before it can be re-committed.

Mr. WILSON. Then I should like to have the motion to reconsider acted upon now. The motion was made with a view to amend the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair then will put the question on the reconsideration, if there be no objection.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. Now, I hope the other two bills I have mentioned will be taken up and re-committed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. The committee meet on Monday, and as I desire to have these bills before them, I hope the Senator will allow these motions to be made.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We cannot consider any bill of importance to-night.

Mr. WILSON. My motion simply is to recommit the bills to the committee, which meets on Monday morning, with a view to their amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the bill (S. No. 568) to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of the officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, be re-committed to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move that the bill (H. R. No. 788) to establish and protect national cemeteries be re-committed to the same committee.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the question of adjournment is put I desire to have a short executive session. ["Oh, no."] It will take but a moment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well; I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to take up Senate bill No. 527.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 527) to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes.

It proposes to modify the schedule of charges or fees for issuing postal money-orders established by the third section of the act approved June 12, 1866, so that the charge or fee for an order not exceeding ten dollars is to be ten cents; for an order of more than ten, but not exceeding thirty dollars, the charge is to be fifteen cents, and for an order exceeding thirty dollars a fee of twenty-five cents is to be charged; and the compensation of deputy postmasters for the payment of money-orders is to be increased from one eighth to one fourth of one per cent. on the gross amount of orders paid at their respective offices. In case of the loss of a money-order a duplicate is to be issued by the superintendent of the money-order office, without charge, on the application of the remitter or payee of the original, provided the applicant furnish a certificate from the postmaster on whom it was drawn that it had not been and would not thereafter be paid, and a similar certificate from the postmaster by whom it was issued that it had not been and would not be repaid to the purchaser; and a second fee is not to be charged for a duplicate money-order issued to replace an order that has been rendered invalid because of non-presentation for payment within one year after its date or because of illegal indorsements.

If any person shall falsely forge or counterfeit, or willingly aid, assist, or abet in falsely forging or counterfeiting, or shall procure, directly or indirectly, to be falsely forged or counterfeited any postal money-order, or any material signature or indorsement to any postal money-order issued by the Post Office Department or any of its agents, for the purpose and with the intent of obtaining or receiving, directly or indirectly, or of procuring or enabling others to obtain or receive, directly or indirectly, any sum or sums of money, and thereby to defraud either the United States or any person of such sum or sums of money, or any part thereof, or shall pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any such forged or counterfeited postal money-order, with intent to defraud either the United States or any person of any sum or sums of money, knowing such postal money-order or any signature or indorsement thereon to be so falsely forged or counterfeited, every such person is to be deemed guilty of felony, and being duly convicted is to be sentenced to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for a period of not less than two years nor more than five years, and to be fined in a sum not exceeding $5,000.

The Postmaster General is authorized to appoint in his Department a superintendent of foreign mails at an annual salary of $3,000, and one additional clerk of class four for that branch of the postal service.

The Postmaster General is also authorized to appoint in the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General a superintendent of dead letters, at an annual salary of $2,000.

The Postmaster General is also authorized to appoint in the bureau of the Second Assistant Postmaster General a superintendent of domestic mails and a superintendent of inspection, who, with the chief clerks of the three bureaus and the topographer of the Post Office Department, are each to receive a salary of $2,500 per annum; also, to appoint an additional clerk, to be in charge of mail bags, locks, and keys, at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and an assistant topographer at a salary of $1,800 per annum.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The purpose of that bill seems to be to create offices.

Mr. RAMSEY. No, sir; it diminishes them rather.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I cannot understand tolerably plain reading. I think there are two or three additional officers created by it.

Mr. RAMSEY. It merely elevates the character of some of the clerks, putting them in the position of heads of bureaus.

Mr. HENDRICKS. How much does it increase their pay?

Mr. RAMSEY. It does increase their pay some, but not very much.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does it not create two officers unknown before, one to have the superintendency of dead letters?

Mr. RAMSEY. No, sir; the officer was there before, but not by that name. There has always been some one clerk in the dead-letter office assigned to the superintendency. It has grown to be a very important branch of the Post Office Department. There are some eighty clerks employed in that particular branch, and it is thought well to appoint some one of sufficient capacity to manage that branch of the business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I was right in saying the office was created.

Mr. RAMSEY. No; the person who now superintends it will probably be appointed superintendent unless some one better be found.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose the place will probably be filled by the same man. I thought the Senator said the object was to get somebody of considerable capacity. I want to ask the Senator if it will probably improve the capacity of the gentleman who has charge of this business if we give him more money and call him by another name? I think this bill increases offices and salaries, and that we had better not pass it now. I move to postpone the consideration of it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senator will allow the Senate to pass at any rate upon the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have objection to that.

Mr. CONNESS. I will say that this is a bill which is very much desired by the Postmaster General, and has been very fully considered by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and unanimously recommended by them. There is no doubt in the world as to the necessity of passing it. Besides, the Senator well knows that it is very difficult to get the floor here in the Senate for the passage of these measures, and this bill may as well be acted upon now as at any other time.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senate will act on the amendments at least before we adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads will be read.

The first amendment was in section three, line twenty, to strike out the words "a period of not less than two years nor," and to insert the word "not;" so as to read:

Shall be sentenced to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for not more than five years, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, lines two and three, to strike out the words "his department" and to insert "the bureau of the First Assistant Postmaster General," and at the end of the section to add "and that the superintendent of the money-order system shall receive an annual salary of $3,000;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint in the bureau of the First Assistant Postmaster General a superintendent of foreign mails, at an annual salary of $3,000, and one additional clerk of class four for that branch of the postal service, and that the superintendent of the money-order system shall receive an annual salary of $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, line three, to strike out the word "office" and to insert the word "bureau."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section six, line seven, to strike out the word "a" and to insert "an annual;" in line eight to strike out the words "per annum;" in line nine to strike out the word "a" and insert "an annual," and in line ten to strike out the words "per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I offer this amendment under instructions of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to be called section seven:

And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized, whenever he may deem it necessary or expedient, to consolidate the three blank agencies of the Post Office Department into one blank agency, to be located in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and to appoint one superintendent, at an annual salary of $1,800, and one third class clerk, and one second class clerk, and two porters or laborers, at an annual salary of $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I offer another amendment to come in as section eight:

And be it further enacted, That letter-carriers employed under the direction of the Postmaster General shall severally receive a salary to be prescribed by him not exceeding $1,200 per year: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal the joint resolution approved June 6, 1866.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I am authorized by the committee to offer the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust and settle the accounts of postmasters accruing prior to the establishment of the system of salaries for deputy postmasters upon the basis of equity and justice: Provided, That such settlements shall not include any case of official delinquency by any deputy postmaster.

I will simply say that the Postmaster General desires this authority, and it is very essential that it should be extended to him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have one further amendment to offer. At present the law requires that a letter on which the postage is not prepaid shall be passed through the dead-letter office, which seems to be unnecessary. This amendment prescribes that a letter shall be returned to the writer when he can be ascertained by the name upon the back of the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. MORGAN. I really think the Senate is too thin to act on so important a bill as this making so many changes. There are not a dozen Senators present.

Mr. RAMSEY. The changes are not very numerous.

Mr. MORGAN. There are not a dozen Senators present; and I know that Senators left the Chamber because it was understood that the business of the District of Columbia alone was to be transacted to-day.

Mr. RAMSEY. I think the Senator is mistaken in his conception of the bill. The changes are not very numerous. No new office is created by the bill. It simply makes new divisions for officers who already perform duties in the Departments.

Mr. MORGAN. Salaries are changed in several instances.

Mr. RAMSEY. Some salaries are raised, but not very much.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to say to the Senator from New York, as this question is raised again, that every point and proposition in this bill have been thoroughly considered as between the whole Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and the Postmaster General, and is recommended by the unanimous report of the committee.

The change in salaries is a very slight one. The changes made by this bill will bring about reforms that will save vast sums. In paper and twine and all that goes to the stores of the Post Office Department the changes proposed will make very great reforms and great savings. The investigation of this subject has been very thorough and complete. The Senator will also understand that it has been exceedingly difficult to get this bill for the last two weeks before the Senate by reason of a press of business, and the same thing will occur again on Monday. There was no division of opinion in regard to the necessity of this bill in the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to insert as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That when any letter held for postage shall bear upon the face of the envelope the name and address of the writer or sender of the same, it shall be the duty of the postmaster at the office wherein such letter shall have been dropped to return said letter immediately to said writer or sender, charging thereupon ordinary postage; but if any such letter so inscribed shall for any cause come to the dead letter office, it shall be returned unopened to the name and address of the writer or sender under envelope, charging thereupon ordinary postage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 344, to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

Mr. CRESWELL. I hope that bill will not be taken up now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. For the same reason that I objected to the passage of the Post Office bill, which I think was entirely wrong, with only a dozen Senators present, I shall object to taking up so important a bill as this, appropriating $6,000,000 from the Treasury to a private corporation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senate to take it up for consideration, not to consider it this evening.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. We are expecting an announcement from the House of Representatives in a few moments of the death of a colleague of mine.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly; I withdraw it if that is the case.

GREATHOUSE AND KELLY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 338.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 338) for the relief of Henry Greathouse and Samuel Kelly.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. This bill was fully considered by the Senate at the last session, and I believe the Senate were satisfied on the subject, except that it was thought there ought to be some limitation on the amount which the Postmaster General could disburse in this way; and while we were preparing an amendment which, I believe, would have brought it within the views of the Senate, the morning hour expired, and the bill never got another chance. I am now instructed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to move to amend the bill by adding to it the following:

Provided, That the amount to be so allowed shall not exceed $12,000.

That amount is just about one half of what the ordinary compensation would have been for this service if there had been a contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

CODIFICATION OF CUSTOMS LAWS.

Mr. CRESWELL. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 251) further to extend the time for codifying the laws relative to the customs, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment, and to recommend its passage. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the joint resolution on the day it is reported.

Mr. POMEROY. Let it be read for the information of the Senate so that we may know what it is.

Mr. CRESWELL. I will state that it is a joint resolution to extend the time for the action of a commission appointed during this Congress with a view to the codification of the revenue laws.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection to it. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

DEATH OF HON. HENRY GRIDER.

Mr. McPHERSON, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed to communicate to the Senate the proceedings of the House of Representatives on the announcement of the death of Hon. HENRY GRIDER, of Kentucky.

The proceedings of the House were read.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, my late colleague of the House of Representatives, HENRY

GRIDER, died in the recess of Congress, and in concurrence with the action of the body of which he was a member, and in conformity to the usage of the Senate, I rise to move an appropriate recognition of the solemn and admonitory fact that death has struck with his shaft another member of the National Legislature.

The father of Colonel GRIDER was a revolutionary soldier, and in an early day of the settlement of Kentucky removed from North Carolina, his native State, and settled in Garrard county, where his son was born July 16, 1796; and from thence the family removed in 1801 to the neighborhood of Bowling Green, Warren county. He was there taught the rudiments of the common branches of education that were then the whole course of our frontier settlements; but even this was suspended when he was but seventeen years of age by his exchanging the log-cabin school-house for the armed but tentless field in the war of 1812. His father and an older brother, John, were in the same service, and they all shared in the dangers and glory of the battle of the Thames. Thus in his boyhood the fires of his patriotism were lighted from the altar of 1776, and a soldier father from those sacred fields again followed its glorious light, as it led his two youthful sons to strike for their country in her second war of Independence. At the end of his term of service he resumed his school studies, and prosecuted them with such assiduity and success that before he had reached man's estate his neighbors required him to become a teacher, in which vocation he continued for several years. His leisure hours he diligently employed in the study of the Latin language and the lower branches of mathematics, in which by his own efforts he attained to a respectable proficiency.

He relaxed not after those acquisitions, but while yet teaching read very carefully some of the elementary books of the law, and in 1821 obtained his license to practice from the office and under the instruction of Frank Johnson, one of the eminent lawyers of Kentucky. Crittenden, Sharp, Breathel, and Underwood had been for several years practitioners at the Warren bar, and even then their ability and fame had begun to assume the grand proportions to which they afterward grew; and the late brilliant Senator Moorhead and the clear and accurate Judge Graham commenced their professional career with him. Those were the men whom he encountered in the same lists in honorable competition for business, eminence, and fame.

Colonel GRIDER was not a great man, nor did he ever claim to rival those forensic champions of the Green river region of Kentucky. But he strove diligently and manfully to mate himself to their might; and by this hard discipline he slowly but steadily evolved a growing strength, continued to approximate their stature, and in their contests sturdy blows were reciprocally dealt—his with the added force of the highest character for honesty and sincerity.

In Kentucky every lawyer of any ability is also a politician, and Colonel GRIDER was drawn into that vortex. He was first elected a member of her Legislature, to the House, in 1827, and was annually reelected for a period of several years, when he declined to stand further for the place. In 1833 he was elected to the Senate of the General Assembly of Kentucky for a full term of four years. I was then first chosen a member of the House, and at the ensuing session made his acquaintance and gained his friendship and confidence, which it was my happiness steadily to hold throughout the residue of his life. At the end of his term he again voluntarily retired from office and diligently resumed the practice of his profession.

In 1843 he was elected to the House of Congress, and was reelected in 1845, and for both terms it was my fortune to be his colleague. He then voluntarily sought the third time the quiet of private life, the society of professional companions, and the moderate emoluments of the practice of the law in rural districts; and this mode of life, so congenial to his tastes, he continued until the breaking out of the great insurrection. He then at once publicly and decidedly pronounced for "the Union, the Constitution, and the enforcement of the laws," gave his whole influence and effort to uphold the proper and constitutional authority of the Government, and urged and aided a gallant son to raise one of the noblest regiments that served in the Union Army. In 1861 his countrymen once more summoned him to the civil service by electing him for the third term to the House of Congress; and they reelected him in 1863, and again in 1865. He served through the most of the last session, but near its close, admonished by the grasp of mortal disease, he quitted this city and the discharge of his public duties forever, and hurried home to die.

He was even then apparently possessed of an uncommon amount of physical strength for one of his age, and his colleagues were deluded into and expressed confidently to him their belief that he would soon be well; but he spoke his dissent in a few solemn words that showed his unerring conviction that his time had come. He reached his home; his disease continued to march quietly but steadily upon him until the 7th of September, when with undisturbed reason and a serene spirit, surrounded by his friends, he sunk beneath its force to his eternal rest. He was a ripe sheaf, and was fully ready for the Great Harvest. Religious sentiment was the most prominent feature in the character of Colonel GRIDER. In his early youth he became a professing Christian and attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal church, in which connection he continued until his death. In his religious life he combined the simplicity, truth, purity, and steadiness of the primitive Christians with the spirit of charity, forgiveness, and peace which its sinless author preached, and which could emanate only from Divinity. For more than fifty years his walk of life was serenely lit up by the brightness of his faith and works, mellowed by true Christian humility.

He possessed great physical strength and dauntless courage, and a warm and impetuous spirit; and though his strong sense of justice ever restrained him from being an aggressor, every assailant of his rights found him prompt and effective in their defense. But distance never failed to appease him, and any manifestation of regret or purpose to make atonement always won his prompt and full forgiveness; and when convinced of having done wrong to any one he never rested until he had made the amplest reparation. Envy, malice, cruelty, or revenge found no resting-place with him. The genius, endowments, honor, fame, and fortune of others were appropriated by his unselfish and noble heart as the sources of his own personal happiness; and he rejoiced in their existence everywhere as the common riches of his countrymen and of mankind.

In all the relations of life he was without reproach. His system of ethics taught him that the essential nature of public and private villainy, of public and private virtue, were the same; and he equally revered and supported the one and abhorred and contested the other. In politics he was too pure, too enlightened and patriotic to be a partisan; in religion too charitable and humble, too deeply imbued with the spirit of his Divine Master to be a bigot. Even rivalry and enmity always pronounced upon him the most concise, most comprehensive, and the noblest of all eulogies, "HENRY GRIDER is an honest man and a Christian." To his congressional associates he gave from day to day an unobtrusive but noble pattern of virtue and patriotism. His death filled with general sorrow the community in which he lived, and his name will live there among the most cherished.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. HENRY GRIDER, late a member of the House of Representatives, from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That the members of the Senate, as a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, will go into mourning by wearing crape on the left arm for the residue of the session.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 9, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM PATON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, notifying the House that that body had passed, without amendment, House bill No. 1127, to fix the pay of the quartermaster sergeant of the battalion of Engineers.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the President having returned to the Senate, in which it originated, the bill (S. No. 456) to admit the State of Nebraska into the Union, with his objections thereto, the Senate had proceeded to reconsider the same, had resolved that the said bill do pass, (two thirds of the Senate agreeing thereto,) and had directed the message of the President and the bill, with the proceedings of the Senate thereon, to be communicated to the House of Representatives.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A YACHT.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for the purpose of reference Senate joint resolution No. 159, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owner of the yacht Mayflower to change the name to Sylvie.

No objection being made, the joint resolution was taken up, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BOSTON CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. HULBURD. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Expenditures a part of the investigation in regard to the officers of the Boston custom-house.

Mr. PLANTS. As a member of the committee I ask to have the report deferred a day or two.

Mr. HULBURD. The report has been submitted to the sub-committee, and all of them concur in desiring the chairman to report it at this time.

Mr. PLANTS. I was not aware of that fact, but I still object.

CALIFORNIA LAND-GRANT.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table bill of the Senate No. 461, an act for a grant of lands to the State of California to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, for the purpose of reference to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. COBB. I object.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON. I ask to report back from the Committee on Appropriations the Indian appropriation bill; and as I do not propose to go into any debate upon it myself, I will ask its consideration in the House in order that it may go to the Senate.

Mr. THAYER. I object and insist on the regular order.

Mr. KASSON. I will say that under the circumstances, as general debate on the special order is going on, it is really important that this bill should be disposed of. The bill can be disposed of in ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. THAYER. I would not object if the committee could give me any guarantee that this bill would not occupy more than half an hour.

Mr. KASSON. I do not propose to debate it.

Mr. THAYER. I must insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give notice to the House, that at half past three o'clock the Kentucky delegation will announce the death of the late Mr. GRIDER.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks leave of absence for one week for Mr. BERGEN.

No objection was made, and the leave of absence was granted.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The House then resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1143, to provide for the more effectual government of the insurrectionary States, upon which Mr. BANKS was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BANKS addressed the House. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

At the conclusion of his remarks,

Mr. BANKS gave notice of a substitute that, at the proper time, he would submit for the bill under consideration.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, the proposed substitute was ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. MOORE, one of his Secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bill No. 1144, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867; also, House bill No. 643, to alter the place of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, without amendment, House bill No. 506, to authorize the trustees of the Foundry (Methodist Episcopal) church to sell and convey square No. 235 of the city of Washington;

Also, Senate bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 550) entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1866; and

An act (S. No. 532) for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move that the House now take up from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 456, for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union, for the purpose of putting it on its passage.

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged question, and the bill is now before the House. The Clerk will read the message from the Senate.

The message from the Senate was read, as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate the bill for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union, with the message of the President returning the same with his objections, and the proceedings of the Senate thereon, to the House of Representatives.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas, on the 21st day of March, A. D. 1864, Congress passed an act to enable the people of Nebraska to form a constitution and State government, and offered to admit said State, when so formed, into the Union upon compliance with certain conditions therein specified; and whereas it appears that the said people have adopted a constitution which, upon due examination, is found to conform to the provisions and comply with the conditions of said act, and to be republican in its form of government, and that they now ask for admission into the Union: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the constitution and State government

N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Neill, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stillwell, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward and Winfield—43.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Arnett, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Boyer, Bundy, Conkling, Cooper, Culver, Deftrees, Hale, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Jones, Latham, Lynch, Phelps, John L. Thomas, Elihu B. Washburne, and Wright—28.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. My colleagues, Mr. AMES and Mr. ALLEY, have been called away from the city on business. If they had been present they would have voted for the bill.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. My colleague, Mr. ANCONA, is absent on account of indisposition. Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I desire to state that Mr. HUBBARD, of New York, has been called home on account of the death of his father.

Mr. GRINNELL. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. HUBBARD, is still detained from his seat by illness. If he were present he would vote for the bill.

When the call of the roll had been concluded, The SPEAKER said: The Clerk will call my name as a member of the House.

The clerk called the name of SCHUYLER COLFAX, and Mr. COLFAX voted "ay."

The SPEAKER. On the question: "Shall this bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President?" the yeas are 120 and the nays 44. Two-thirds of the House having upon this reconsideration agreed to the passage of the bill, and it being certified officially that a similar majority of the Senate, in which the bill originated, have also agreed to its passage, I do therefore, by the authority of the Constitution of the United States, declare that this bill, entitled "An act for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union," has become a law.

[The announcement of the result of the vote was received with applause both on the floor and in the galleries.]

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same, namely: An act (H. R. No. 1144) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

No objection was made and leave was granted.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The House then resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1143, to provide for the more effectual government of the insurrectionary States; upon which Mr. NIBLACK was entitled to the floor.

Mr. NIBLACK. I will yield for five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND.]

Mr. RAYMOND. I have asked the gentleman from Indiana to yield to me for a few minutes, not for the purpose of making any further remarks on the subject now before the House, but for the purpose of making a suggestion to the House, and especially to the gentleman most directly concerned in the passage of the bill now before it.

I think it is very clear to every one here that there is not that unanimity of sentiment in support of this bill which is desirable with a view to its ultimate effectiveness as a law, if it should become a law. I think it very doubtful whether any of the propositions now before the House are in such form as to command such unanimity. I think, moreover, that all will agree that the time has arrived when we should devote ourselves carefully and conscientiously to the presentation of some measure which will meet the unanimous, or nearly unanimous, support of those who have the responsibility of public action here, and which, if possible, shall also command the support of the other departments of the Government.

Now, sir, I have a suggestion to make and I will put it in the form of a proposition. It is this: that for the purpose of reaching this result this whole subject, the bill with the amendments now before the House, be referred to a select committee of five or seven members, of which committee I should think it extremely desirable; and should, indeed, insist, that the venerable and distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SREVEENS] should be chairman; that this committee should have leave to sit during the sessions of the House; and that it should be instructed to report as early as Wednesday morning next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, a bill which should provide temporarily for the protection of rights and the preservation of the peace in the States lately in rebellion, and also for the speedy admission of those States to their relations in the Union upon the basis of the constitutional amendment adopted at the last session of Congress, with such additional provisions as that committee might deem expedient.

I believe, sir, that with a discreet and judicious committee, whose paramount object and motive should be to unite upon some practical measure for the attainment of these ends, we could reach a result which would command the support of Congress and of the country, and the approval or at least the assent of the Executive. I do not pretend to have any other grounds for such a belief than those which are accessible to every member of the House equally with myself; but I have such grounds for that belief as render it, in my judgment, incumbent upon me at least to submit to the House the proposition I have indicated. I have put it in the form of a resolution which, at the proper time, I shall ask consent to offer.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he has any reason to believe that the President of the United States will approve of and cooperate with any plan embracing the constitutional amendment?

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is pressing me perhaps a little further than I care to be pressed on such a point as that. [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. I do not wish to press the gentleman if he cannot answer.

Mr. RAYMOND. I do not know whether the gentleman insists upon my setting before him and the House all the reasons which lead me to such a belief as I have expressed; but I have no hesitation in saying to him and to the House that, in my judgment, a bill embracing the provisions I have indicated, if it should be passed by this House and the Senate in a proper spirit and with a sufficient approach to unanimity, would obtain the assent of the President. That is my personal belief.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York whether he has become thoroughly satisfied that the pending bill cannot pass.

Mr. RAYMOND. I have become satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the pending bill, even if it should pass, will not pass with such a degree of unanimity as will make it acceptable to the country and effective as a law.

Mr. SPALDING. I mean by a constitutional vote of two thirds.

Mr. RAYMOND. I have my doubts whether it could; but even if it did that would not alter the case.

Mr. SPALDING. I would suggest that it might be well to hear some other gentlemen on that subject.

Mr. RAYMOND. I merely throw out my suggestion with the notification that if allowed the opportunity I shall offer the motion I have indicated.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me a moment?

Mr. RAYMOND. I would do so with pleasure, but I have been trespassing upon the courtesy of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK,] who yielded me a few moments to state the proposition I desire to submit.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the gentleman from New York as holding the floor in his own right, and the gentleman from Indiana will be entitled to his hour without deduction.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYMOND. I yield, then, with pleasure to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, only a few days since a bill of a different sort from that now pending was before this House, and a majority of the House—I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] was of that majority—desired to refer the whole subject to the Committee on Reconstruction. The various propositions were so referred. They have been considered by that committee, and I believe I am guilty of no breach of confidence when I say that never has any report been made from that committee which was so unanimously supported by its different members as the one now under consideration by the House; nor has any bill submitted by that committee ever been so carefully considered as this.

We have now spent two days and more in the discussion of the present measure. We have but eight or ten days in which, as a legislative body, we can act. I hold that it would be the greatest of public calamities if this Congress should adjourn without an expression, both on the part of the House and of the Senate, of the opinions entertained by the representatives of the country in reference to this measure. It is now to be seen plainly that if this measure be recommitted there can be no new consideration of this great subject by a new committee, no conclusion reached, no report made, much less any action had even by this branch of the Government within the period to which we are limited by the Constitution of the country for the consideration of this subject.

To-day there are eight millions and more of people, occupying six hundred and thirty thousand square miles of the territory of this country, who are writhing under cruelties nameless in their character—injustice such as has not been permitted to exist in any other country in modern times; and all this because in this capital there sits enthroned a man who, so far as the executive department is concerned, guides the destinies of the Republic in the interest of rebels; and because, also, in those ten former States rebellion itself, inspired by the executive department of this Government, wields all authority, and is the embodiment of law and power everywhere. Until in the South this obstacle to reconstruction is removed there can be no effectual step taken toward the reorganization of the Government; and argue as gentlemen may, no way can be devised for the removal of this obstacle in the South except to convoke the work to Grant and Sherman and Sheridan—the men who overthrew the rebellion when it was flagrant in the field and not organized in the Government. They will crush out these despotisms which have been set over the people and prepare a way for the inauguration of civil government. You might as well expect to build a fire in the depths of the ocean as expect to reconstruct loyal civil governments in the South until you have broken down the rebel despotism which everywhere holds sway in that vast region of country.

Therefore, sir, after all this debate, considering the magnitude of this question, the peril in which the country is involved, I for my part feel it my duty to insist that we shall hold this business in our hands as the Representatives of the people and take the judgment of this House upon the question whether all power shall be surrendered to the rebels of the South or whether we shall exert the constitutional authority we possess over the Army (which is our servant to-day and will be our servant through all this contest) in the interest of loyalty, and thus break down the governments in the South, lay a basis on which we may be able to build civil institutions, and, as soon as we have the opportunity, prepare a way for their establishment. But it is the vainest delusion, the wildest of hopes, the most dangerous of aspirations to contemplate or even to hope for the reconstruction of civil government until the rebel despotisms enthroned in power in those ten States shall be broken up.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to concede for the sake of the present argument the correctness of everything the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWWELL] has said; and my reply to it is that not one solitary thing which he has proposed can be done under the state of things now existing or under any state of things which the proposition now before the House will bring about.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Permit me to ask the gentleman—

Mr. RAYMOND. I cannot yield now; the gentleman must excuse me.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I was merely going to ask why nothing which the gentleman from Massachusetts has proposed can be done.

Mr. RAYMOND. I am going to tell the gentleman why. There was no need for him to ask me the question.

Sir, there is not a single suggestion which the gentleman from Massachusetts has made, there is not a single proposition he has put forward as necessary to be adopted by this Government that does not involve the exercise of doubtful powers. He has said that it is absolutely necessary to remove the rebel despotism at the South; and he intimated it was equally necessary to remove the obstacles to our action which exists elsewhere.

Mr. BOWWELL. The gentleman has misunderstood me. I made no such intimation.

Mr. RAYMOND. Very well. Then I did misunderstand the gentleman, but the same objection applies to the other point. If we are obliged to remove these "despotisms" at the South it must be done by some act, by some law which the country will accept as legitimate, as constitutional, as appropriate to the occasion. Now, sir, I do not say positively that the bill now before the House will not be accepted in that sense and for that purpose; but I do say, if I may judge from the expressions of opinion which I hear all round me on this floor, expressions of individual opinion of members themselves, it will not command that hearty approval which will lead to those great results, against the action of the other departments of the Government, which are expected from it.

I do not wish to make any argument now against the present bill. I have already said all I desire to say on that point. But I do say that if we pass it by a two-thirds majority it will not have, and cannot be expected to have, that support from other quarters it ought to have to accomplish the objects it is designed to reach.

Gentlemen may say if the President declines or refuses to enforce it he will subject himself to impeachment. Very possibly. That depends entirely on the manner in which he may do it. There are many ways of making a law inoperative without subjecting himself to such construction and such punishment as that. But I agree entirely with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] that it is for our interest, it is for the interest of the country, for the welfare of the whole Union, and especially for the welfare of the loyal part of the Union, that in what we propose to do, looking to the reconstruction of the rebel States, looking to the destruction of rebel despotism there, it is important to the last degree that we should have the cooperation of all the branches of the Government.

I think gentlemen on this floor will not dispute the desirableness of that, however they may doubt its feasibility. Now, sir, unless this proposition can command that cooperation it will be of little value. Standing by itself simply as a law upon the statute-book it will amount to nothing. Unless gentlemen upon this floor are satisfied that this bill is a proper remedy for the evils which exist in the southern States; unless they are satisfied that it is so certain to be operative and effective, and to obtain the result desired as to make all other propositions needless, I think they would do well to consider the possibility of presenting something that will cover the ground more completely than this bill does, and thus secure a more general assent from the country at large.

I acknowledge the necessity of doing something, and the necessity of something effective. I would be glad to see something done which the President would approve, or in default of that something which he could not oppose without rendering himself liable to impeachment. It is doubtful whether the country would sustain the impeachment of the President upon anything now before it. I believe it would not. When we propose the impeachment of the President we must consider that we have to deal with facts, and not vague declaration. We cannot assert that because the country is disturbed and because the country holds the President responsible for that disturbance therefore the country demands his impeachment and removal.

What has he done? You say he has violated his oath and refused to execute the law. But you must point to the instances where he has refused to enforce the law. What specific instance can you put your finger upon in which he has been called upon to protect the rights of citizens in the southern States and has refused to do so? It is not enough to deal in vague accusation; you have to frame a bill of specific and definite charges, embracing details of his refusal to perform specific functions imposed upon him by law. We may frame a bill, possibly we may devise a law, which if he refuses to execute it may enable us to hold him to his proper responsibility; but this bill will not do it, because it imposes upon him no duty whatever.

I desire, moreover, to see some bill introduced which, while providing for the proper exercise of military authority for the preservation of peace, shall also contain some provision for the organization of civil governments in these southern States. This bill does nothing of the sort. It does not even shadow any such provision.

The gentleman from Ohio said the other day that he would not support this bill if he did not regard it as merely preliminary to others which would provide civil authority for those States. Where are those other bills, and what are they? How do we know what civil rights will be provided by those bills, which this bill is to protect, unless we have the whole programme before us?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The gentleman has inquired where that bill is. I take pleasure in answering that so far as one of the States is concerned one committee of the House has had charge of that subject-matter, and if permitted by the House will report on Monday a bill that will provide for that other civil organization of a government based on loyal suffrage.

Mr. RAYMOND. I am delighted to hear it. It is the first streak of light I have seen, the first intimation that we have had of anything in the form of civil government to go with this bill which devolves such extraordinary powers upon subaltern officers of the Army. I shall wait for that bill with great interest, and shall be glad to see what provisions it contains. But I suggest that we should not adopt this bill until we know what the provisions of that will be.

Mr. NIBLACK addressed the House for an hour. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. HAWKINS. I ask to have read for the information of the House and ordered to be printed an amendment which, if an opportunity be afforded me, I propose to offer as a substitute for the pending preamble and bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a large number of the people of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas did declare their independence of the United States, and did form a pretended government under the title of the confederate States of America; and whereas their Senators and Representatives did withdraw from their places in the Congress of the United States and gave their allegiance to the so-called government of the confederate States of America; and whereas said pretended government did wage a cruel and destructive war on the Government and people of the United States, seized the public property, and destroyed the commerce of the United States; and whereas the said rebellion has been suppressed at a great loss of blood and treasure of the United States, it becomes the duty of the Congress of the United States to provide for the restoration of said States to their former relations to the Federal Government, and to secure to all the citizens of the same complete protection in the full enjoyment of all their rights and privileges under the Constitution; and whereas the Congress of the United States does declare that said States shall not resume their relations to the Federal Government until a number of the people of said States sufficient to control the same, shall maintain true faith and allegiance to the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c. That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate shall appoint three commissioners for each State, citizens of the State for which they shall be appointed, who shall have been throughout the rebellion Union men, and who never aided or sympathized with the rebellion, whose duty it shall be to call a convention of the people of said States, for the purpose of reforming their constitutions to suit the changed condition of the times. Said convention shall consist of as many delegates as the most numerous branch of the Legislature on the 1st of January, 1860. No person who voluntarily bore arms against the United States or gave voluntary aid to the rebellion shall ever be eligible to a seat in said convention.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That said commissioners shall on or by the 1st day of May, 1867, or as soon thereafter as practicable, appoint two commissioners of registration for each county, parish, or district in each of said States, whose duty it shall be to register in an appropriate book for that purpose all of the legal voters of said county, parish, or district. In order to ascertain whether any citizen who may apply for registration is entitled to vote, said registers shall have power to administer oaths and compel the attendance of witnesses.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That every male person of the age of twenty-one years, who is a citizen of the United States, who has resided one year in the State, and who has been a resident of the county six months next preceding the election, who has never borne arms against the United States or given voluntary aid or comfort to the enemy in the late rebellion, shall be entitled to registration as a voter.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the commissioners of registration to appoint three judges of election and one clerk, registered voters, to hold elections on the day ordered by the State commissioners in the several precincts or places for holding elections in said counties, districts, or parishes, or at any other convenient place: Provided, however, That in case any other than the usual place for holding elections shall be selected, proper notice shall be given by advertising the same in at least three public places. The polls shall be kept open from ten o'clock a. m. until four o'clock p. m. of said day. After the polls have been closed, the judges shall proceed to count the same, and shall make a fair list of the votes cast and for whom cast, and shall at once transmit by the hands of the clerk said list, signed by the judges and certified by the clerk, to the commissioners of registration, who shall transmit the same to the State commissioners. After the State commissioners shall have ascertained the successful candidates, they shall transmit to each a certificate of his election, which certificate shall entitle him to his seat in the convention.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the election for members of the convention shall take place on the first Monday in July, 1867, and the convention shall assemble on the first Monday in August, 1867, at the capitals of the respective States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That when said convention shall have formed a constitution and shall have submitted the same to the people for ratification, and which shall have been declared republican in form by the Congress of the United States, then said State shall be entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the three commissioners appointed as provided for by this act, as soon as they shall have been qualified, shall proceed to appoint judges, justices of the peace, sheriffs, and constables for said State, conformable to the respective districts as organized in said State the year 1860; and such officers shall have the same jurisdiction and perform the same duties as required of them by the laws of said State on the 1st day of January, 1860, except where said laws have become contrary to the laws of the United States and in conflict with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the State commissioners shall be duly qualified before any judge of a Federal court by taking and subscribing to the following oath:

That I, A. B., have never borne arms against the United States, or counseled or given voluntary aid to the rebellion, or been engaged in any plot or conspiracy to overthrow the authority of the United States in any State or Territory thereof; that I will faithfully and honestly discharge all the duties imposed on me by this act without favor or partiality: So help me God.

All officers that shall be appointed to perform any duties under this act shall take and subscribe the above oath before entering upon the duties of their respective offices. And any person who shall swear falsely to anything required to be sworn to under this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction shall be confined to hard labor in the penitentiary of the State for a period of not less than two nor more than three years.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the State commissioners are hereby authorized to call upon the President or any officer in command of the United States forces in said State for troops to enable them to execute the provisions of this act or the laws of the State; and upon such requisition it shall be the duty of the President, or any of the officers so called upon, to furnish the troops demanded.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be competent to sit as a juror in the district or circuit courts of the United States, or the courts organized by the commissioners, who is not a legal voter according to the provisions of this act.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That State commissioners shall hold their said position until the respective States shall elect a Governor and provide for filling all the official positions in the State; and they shall receive as a compensation for their services the sum of $3,000 per annum, which shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, and the same shall be refunded to the Treasurer of the United States by the respective States. The commissioners of registration for the counties, parishes, and districts shall receive as a compensation for their services the sum of — dollars, which said sum shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, upon the certificate of the commissioners for the State, certifying that they have well and truly performed their duty, which sums shall be refunded to the Treasury by the said State where the services were performed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this proposed amendment will be printed.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY obtained the floor, and said: I understand the delegation from Kentucky desire to announce the death of their late colleague, Mr. GRIDER, and as I am not desirous of proceeding to-day I will yield the floor for that purpose.

DEATH OF HON. HENRY GRIDER.

Mr. HISE. Mr. Speaker, I have the sad duty to perform of announcing the death of another member of this House, and the melancholy satisfaction which the occasion presents of paying a just tribute to the memory of the departed, Hon. HENRY GRIDER, representing at the time the third congressional district of Kentucky in this House, who departed this life on the 7th day of September last. He died at his home, in Bowling Green, Kentucky, after a somewhat lingering illness, in the midst of his family and friends, at the age of seventy years. I learn that during his service in the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, toward its close, he appeared to be depressed in spirits and enfeebled in body and mind, occasioned apparently not so much by impaired health or any distinctive physical illness as by sad and despondent feelings, arising perhaps from disheartening presentiments of the fearful consequences to the country foreshadowed by the gloomy present and the ominous future. He loved his country; he was an unswerving advocate and friend of our free institutions of government, of the Union of the States, of the liberty of the people, civil and religious, as regulated by law and insured by the maintenance of governments free in substance and republican in form; and from his earliest youth until his death he was an active, zealous, and efficient co-worker with others of his own political faith to maintain his principles and secure the ascendancy of his party in the councils of the Federal and State governments, and exercised a very considerable, if not a commanding influence in his county, district, and State in creating public opinion and in giving solidity and strength to the party to which he was attached. When quite a youth he entered in the military service of his country during the war of 1812, and performed his duty faithfully and gallantly as a soldier in the field.

After the war terminated, and his scholastic education had been completed, he very rapidly qualified himself for the legal profession, soon entered upon the practice of the law, and continued it reputably and successfully for a period of near forty years. During this time I have often had occasion to witness and encounter his great power as an advocate and his profound learning as a jurist. And during his whole professional career, protracted as it was and unusually brilliant, I do not believe that any complaint was ever heard from any client of his of any deficiency in learning, skill, or fidelity in the management of his cause. He was a learned, skillful, and able lawyer, an eloquent and powerful advocate, and always true and faithful to his client. I have practiced law with him in the same courts for many years, and I, speaking from personal knowledge, can say so much with truth.

He was engaged in the civil service of the country in various public stations. He was a leading and useful member of the Kentucky Legislature, both in the Senate and lower House, and those high moral and intellectual qualities by which he was so eminently distinguished as a jurist and advocate gave him prominence, character, and influence as a law-giver and statesman. He has served his district in the Twenty-Eighth, Twenty-Ninth, Thirty-Seventh, and Thirty-Eighth, and first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress; and that he possessed the qualities and attributes which I have ascribed to him was doubtless made manifest to many of the members of this House with whom he served by his course pursued here under their own observation. He was a man of mental endowments far above mediocrity, endowments highly improved and cultivated, a sound lawyer, able and eloquent speaker, discreet statesman, and of unsullied reputation for integrity of conduct and purity of motive. He was always in his private, professional, and political action and conduct actuated by honest and patriotic motives, and he was especially remarkable for the zeal, earnestness, and sincerity with which he supported a cause which he believed to be just, and labored to attain an object or purpose which commended itself to his judgment as right in itself and as useful to the public. A lofty integrity marked and distinguished his whole course of life, both public and private. In his private life he pursued the even tenor of his way without reproach, having at all times the esteem and confidence of the community in which he lived and of the society in which he moved. He was exemplary, upright, and true in all the relations of human life. He was a good citizen, just and honest in all his dealings and transactions, a devoted and exemplary professor of the Christian religion, a humane master, an affectionate husband, a tender and provident parent, a kind relation, and a true and generous friend. His death to his family and the community is an irreparable loss, and will be regretted and lamented by all who knew him well. Mr. Speaker, it seems that deaths of members of the two Houses of Congress, when we consider the limited number of the representatives in both, are of very frequent occurrence. Perhaps they exceed the usual average. We, the survivors, are thus warned of our own impending and inevitable doom, and admonished most impressively of the dread and solemn responsibility incurred and to be met by us all before an eternal and infallible tribunal for all our intentions and deeds, both private and official—a tribunal where the record is fully made up, the proofs complete, and the judgment unerring, which takes cognizance of corrupt, unexecuted intentions as well as of criminal acts committed and visits commensurate punishment upon both. How deep the obligation and important the duty, then, that we diligently examine ourselves and so discipline and regulate our minds as that we may be always actuated by motives that are pure and by purposes benevolent and patriotic, so that what we shall do and the measures we may devise shall be just, wise, lawful, and effectual for the promotion of the welfare and happiness of the whole country and for the maintenance of the rights and liberties of the inhabitants of all sections thereof. The deceased member, whose whole life furnished a bright example of a devotion ardent and disinterested to the best interests of his country, and whose whole country, has by his death spoken to us from his sepulcher, and conjures us to imitate his virtues and to be impelled in our public conduct by the same elevated motives by which his was ever inspired, so that our end and our reward may be like his: unsullied fame on earth, and eternal rest in heaven.

I now offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That by the death of HENRY GRIDER, late Representative in Congress from the third district, in the State of Kentucky, this House has lost a worthy and useful member, the country a most estimable citizen, and his family, relations, and intimate associates, a steadfast and valued friend.

Resolved, That to give expression to their due appreciation of the talents, attainments, and patriotism of the deceased, and to indicate their regret and sorrow for his lamented death, the members of this House will assume and wear the usual badge of mourning for the period of thirty days.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the Journal of the House of Representatives, and that a copy thereof be sent by its Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That in respect to the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to second the resolutions which have been offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. My first acquaintance with HENRY GRIDER commenced with the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and as that acquaintance progressed I came to respect and love him. He was a pure and honest man and a faithful public servant. He belonged to that generation of statesmen who are fast passing away, a generation which closely links our history with the names of Jackson and Webster and Clay and Calhoun. He was the devoted friend and admirer of Henry Clay, and embraced the principles advocated by him, and like that great statesman, had a heart large enough and patriotic enough to cherish every section of the Republic. HENRY GRIDER was simple and unostentatious in his habits and manners, most affable and genial in social life, always treating with deference the opinions of others, yet with becoming firmness and ability maintaining his own convictions of duty.

He seldom, during the period I served with him in this House, engaged in its exciting debates. I remember, however, that he spoke on two or three occasions with much force and ability, and his speeches were always marked with great sincerity and earnestness.

Mr. Speaker, I am not sufficiently familiar with the early history and the many public services in the career of our departed friend to enter upon his eulogy. This has been done ably and most affectionately by the gentleman who succeeds him in this House. But I have felt it a melancholy pleasure to second the resolutions, and have deemed it appropriate that the great State which I in part represent on this floor, and which is linked to Kentucky by so many cherished memories in the past and by so many hopes in the future, should mingle her voice with the sorrowing voice of a sister State in the loss of one of her most devoted sons, and unite with her in paying this last tribute of respect to the memory of one of the purest and most patriotic of our departed public men.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire very briefly, and in few words, to present my heart-felt tribute of respect to the memory of my late friend and colleague, Hon. HENRY GRIDER. I became acquainted with him many years ago; but during a later period, beginning with the extra session of Congress, in July, 1861, I served with him as a member of this House, on down to the close of the last session, when in consequence of declining health, he returned to his home. During this last period of five years my relations with Mr. GRIDER were of the most intimate and friendly character—daily associating with him, boarding most of the time at the same house, I knew him well; and from my knowledge of his character, I entertained for him the highest respect, and had the utmost confidence in him as a high-minded, honorable gentleman, as a conscientious, honest, and just man, and as a sincere and devoted Christian. I remember no event in the past year that oppressed me so sadly and painfully as the news of his death.

He was born in Kentucky, on the 16th day of July, 1796, and was a little past seventy years of age at the time of his death. Mr. GRIDER was in the war of 1812, and though then quite a youth, he served as a private soldier in what was known as Shelby's campaign. He afterward studied law, and when not engaged in the public service of his country devoted himself industriously and successfully to the practice of his profession. He was elected in 1827, and served as a member of the House of Representatives in the Kentucky Legislature. He was again elected to the same position in 1831. He was afterward elected in 1833, and served four years in the Senate of Kentucky. Mr. GRIDER was elected a member of Congress first in 1843. He was reelected in 1845, and after serving two consecutive terms in Congress he retired for a few years to private life. But in 1861 the people who knew him so well, with whom he had so long lived, and whom he had so faithfully served, called him from his retirement, and elected him a member of the Thirty-Seventh Congress. He was re-elected to the Thirty-Eighth Congress; and again elected a member of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. GRIDER was thus, while living in the same community and among the same people, twice elected to the House of Representatives of the State Legislature, once elected to the State Senate, and five times elected to Congress—ample proof that he enjoyed to a high degree the respect and confidence of the people who knew him best. And never did Representative more richly deserve the respect and confidence of constituents. He never misled or deceived them; no promise or pledge made by him to his constituents was ever violated; he always served them honestly and faithfully. His acts as a Representative were governed by one uniform rule—an earnest and conscientious conviction that he was doing right. His whole history as a public man was marked by a high order of patriotism, always zealously laboring and striving to advance what he believed to be the highest and best interest of his constituents and of the whole country. In all the relations of life, whether public or private, his integrity was above suspicion, and he passed through a long, active, and useful life without leaving a solitary stain or shade upon the purity of his character.

Mr. GRIDER was a man of noble generosity and large benevolence; the voice of necessity never appealed to him in vain. Benevolence was a marked and prominent trait in his character; to him it was a luxury to minister to the wants of others; he felt that it was "more blessed to give than to receive," and his generous heart always responded to every charitable appeal.

Mr. GRIDER made a public profession of religion in early life; he soon afterward became an active and zealous member of the Methodist church, and continued through life one of its brightest ornaments. His walk was moral and upright, his life was rich in deeds of charity, and abounded in good works; yet he trusted in none of these things. He felt and knew that all his best performances were mixed with sin and imperfection; and turning away from all his own works he fixed his hope and rested with strong faith and confidence on the atoning merits and perfect righteousness of Him who came "to seek and to save the lost." And when this venerable man drew near to the close of his long, eventful life, that religion which had cheered him in health and borne him up in every dark hour of sorrow and affliction was doubtless more precious to him than ever before. In his last days he often spoke of death, always calmly and hopefully, and sometimes joyfully; and thus it was, on the 7th day of September, 1866, at his own home, in the bosom of his tender and affectionate family, surrounded by kind neighbors and friends, and sustained by the Christian's faith and hope, that he calmly and quietly breathed his last. His course is finished, his warfare is ended, and he is gone—but gone, there is good reason to hope, to that land where the weary find rest, and where the frail child of mortality forgets to weep and lives forever.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I venture to seek the floor in order to add a few words attesting my appreciation of the deceased. My acquaintance with him was comparatively recent. I met him for the first time at the first regular session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress. The circumstances that brought us together were such that our intercourse soon became intimate. It was in the early part of the war. His district was within the theater of active hostilities. Many of my own constituents had taken refuge in Kentucky, and were engaged in the service of the country on that field. He had a soldier son, under whose command were many men of Tennessee as well as of his own State. I also had a son who served in the same field with him. The incidents which interested him also interested me. The subjects brought before Congress for action were interesting alike to us both, for our constituents were affected very much alike by the measures here adopted. I learned to appreciate his native good sense, his mental endowments, and his judgment of public questions. He seemed to me to belong to a class of men from which the people of that district so long as I have known them have selected their Representatives in this House—a class of men especially distinguished for their general excellence of character—sober, discreet, considerate, decided.

As a member of this body he seldom spoke, rarely obtruding himself upon the attention of the House. I saw him, however, upon more occasions. I think than one, one certainly, when he exhibited powers of oratory which satisfied me that in his younger and more enthusiastic days he had not neglected that magnificent art in which Kentucky, if not excelling all other States, certainly has not been inferior to any. I have not forgotten, I suppose none of us have forgotten, the few words pronounced by him at the last session on the death of Senator Collamer, and the touching allusion he made to the fact that years before in their service in this House they had attended the worship of God together in the congressional prayer meetings; words that to a Christian heart give full assurance of all that has just been so well said by his colleague of his piety and religious faith.

Unostentatious in his manners, unobtrusive, patient, benignant, kind, gentle, he has left a record during his service here showing that in times which tried so many of our citizens he never swerved in his patriotism or in his devotion to his country. However we might differ in regard to particular public measures, however much we might regret the consequences of some particular policy which others of us deemed wise as well as necessary and just, no man would question for a single moment he felt an abiding interest in the prosperity and perpetuity of this Government. Though in the afternoon of life, he was not stricken in years. Few could have anticipated his demise. When we parted last summer none of us, I am sure, deemed him so near the edge of the silent river, nor thought that so soon he would join the beckoning hosts who had already crossed and awaited his coming upon the other shore. In such an hour as we think not the summons comes. This much I desired to say. More I would be glad to have said, but more I do not feel at liberty to say on the present occasion.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I was unaware until a moment ago these resolutions were to be brought before the House, but I cannot forbear offering a passing tribute to the memory of one of the purest and best men it was ever my good fortune to know. His uniform courtesy, his gentlemanly deportment, his genial manner, and his warm expressions of sympathy for all persons and classes in want and trouble come back upon my memory with vivid distinctness and impel me to add a few words to what has been so well said by others on this occasion. I do this, sir, not in any studied or formal manner, but simply and alone from the sense of duty which I feel to speak kindly and sadly of the clear intellect, the warm heart, and the open hand now cold and forever closed in the embrace of death. Let us all who knew him in life imitate his purity and his goodness, so that like him we may at any moment be prepared for the great change which must so soon come to us all with the assurance that we shall enter into a better life.

When I commenced my service in the Thirty-Seventh Congress I was upon a committee with him, and there I came to know him well; I might say intimately. I conversed with him freely on all the great subjects that were then agitated and dividing the country. No man ever felt more keenly than he the distraction and trouble that were upon the country or labored with a purer purpose to avert them.

In the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and again in this, it was my privilege to be associated with him on a committee, and there our intimacy and friendship were continued and confirmed. And during all that time I never heard him utter an unkind word of any man. He was a man of the utmost purity of character. He was a Christian gentleman and an honest man. Although I differed with him politically still I desire to say, and I say it with the full consciousness of what I utter, that no man ever occupied a seat in this House who had a more true or loyal heart than HENRY GRIDER. His whole soul, all his sympathies were enlisted for the good of his country. His prayer, I have no doubt, night and morning, was for the deliverance of his country from the trouble that weighed down upon her, and that the Union which he loved so well might be preserved.

Coming as I do from a State far distant from the one which he so well in part represented, it is with great pleasure that I recall the acquaintance I formed with him thus early and the continued friendship that so strongly knit us together. I think he was the first gentleman from the State of Kentucky whose acquaintance I had then formed, and entertaining some of the prejudices which have so unfortunately divided the people of sections remote from each other I was most happy to have them dissipated by the genial kindness and the gentle, Christian character of our deceased associate. I never knew him or met him save in these Halls and in this city, but from what I learned of his character here I know full well that what has been said of him by his colleagues to-day in the walks of private life and in the retirement of home must all be true. He could not be otherwise than a kind husband, father, and friend. I can give them my sympathy in their great bereavement even without personal acquaintance. In the examination of all questions pending in committee or before the House he calmly and dispassionately considered and weighed all the facts and arguments pertinent to the issue, and analyzed them with remarkable clearness and precision. In argument he was always considerate and courteous, but firm and decided. He always stated his opinions and conclusions with clearness, elegance, and force, and always submitted to defeat with gentlemanly resignation and dignity.

It is a sad duty and privilege here to-day to add these few words, inadequate as they are, as my last tribute to the memory of a deceased friend.

The question was taken on the resolutions, and they were unanimously adopted.

Thereupon (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. DARLING: The petition of members of the bar, practicing in the United States courts in southern and eastern districts of New York, asking for increased compensation for stipends and criers of said courts.

By Mr. DAVIS: The memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, against the passage of the bill to provide increased revenues from imports.

By Mr. FARQUHAR: The petition of J. F. Welder, and others, of Greensburg, Indiana, against the passage of either the Hooper or Randall bills, now pending in the House of Representatives, and in favor of carrying out in good faith the obligations of the Government with the present national banks.

Also, the petition of Messrs. Scooby & Donnell, and others, of Greensburg, Indiana, against the further contraction of the currency, the redemption of national currency at New York, and the prohibition of national banks from paying or receiving interest on bank balances.

By Mr. HUNTER: The memorial of J. North, and others, praying that bonnets and millinery may be placed upon the free list.

By Mr. JULIAN: The petition of Edward M. Davis, praying Congress for certain relief.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio: The petition of J. M. Reed, and others, of Dawn, Darke county, Ohio, for a law authorizing the sale of stamps by additional officers, so that every locality may be more conveniently supplied.

Also, the petition of Samuel Silver, for pay as a wagon-master.

By Mr. MILLER: The memorial of citizens of the United States, for impeachment of the President.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of the Library Company of Philadelphia, asking that books and maps imported for public libraries and colleges be placed on the free list.

By Mr. F. THOMAS: The petition of citizens of Carroll county, Maryland, remonstrating against the tax on cigars.

By Mr. UPSON: The petition of O. R. Johnson, F. B. Wallin, and 28 others, citizens of Allegan county, Michigan, praying Congress for the survey and improvement of the harbor at the mouth of the Kalamazoo river, Michigan.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 11, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order the calling of the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions, to be referred to the appropriate committees, and not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider, commencing with the State of Maine.

AMERICAN COMMERCE.

Mr. BLAINE introduced a bill to promote the interest of American commerce and ship-building; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ROBERT ISHERWOOD.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, introduced a bill authorizing the purchase by the United States of the farm of the late Robert Isherwood; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

BREAK-WATER ON BLOCK ISLAND.

Mr. DIXON submitted joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, relative to a break-water on Block Island; which were ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WARD, of New York, presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York, in favor of granting Government aid to the Northern Pacific railroad; which were referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY E. PECK.

Mr. WELKER introduced a joint resolution for the relief of Henry E. Peck, minister-resident and consul general in Hayti; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MRS. RACHEL M'CLELLAND.

Mr. WELKER also introduced a bill for the relief of Mrs. Rachel McClelland; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FOURTEENTH ARTICLE OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. ECKLEY presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, ratifying the fourteenth article of the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DELANO introduced a bill declaring the ratification of the fourteenth article of the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DELANO. I ask that the committee have leave to report at any time.

Messrs. FINCK and ANCONA objected.

Mr. DELANO. Then I give notice that I shall move to suspend the rules for that purpose as soon as it is in order for me to do so.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. EGGLESTON introduced a bill making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MISS SUE MURPHY.

Mr. MAYNARD. A bill from the Senate, for the relief of Miss Sue Murphy, of Decatur, Alabama, was indefinitely postponed on the 14th of December last by a vote of this House. I ask consent of the House to take up the bill and have it referred to the Committee of the Whole and placed upon the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the Chair cannot ask unanimous consent during the morning hour on Monday.

Mr. MAYNARD. Then I give notice that at the proper time I shall move a suspension of the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

LAWS OF UTAH.

Mr. JULIAN introduced a joint resolution requiring the Legislature of the Territory of Utah to transmit a copy of their laws to Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

RATIONS FOR SOLDIERS DYING IN PRISON.

Mr. GRINNELL introduced a joint resolution giving rations to the legal representatives of Union soldiers dying in prison, amendatory of a joint resolution approved July 25, 1866; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRINNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the committee have leave to report on this subject at any time.

No objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted.

DUTY ON WOOL.

Mr. PAINE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, in favor of an increased duty on wool; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

FOX RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SAWYER presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, asking further appropriations to improve the entrance into Fox river from Green bay; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF INDIANS FROM WISCONSIN.

Mr. PAINE presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, asking for the removal of certain Indian tribes now in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CALIFORNIA RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. BIDWELL introduced a bill for a grant of land to the State of California to aid in the construction of certain railroads in such State; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to amend that motion so that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BIDWELL. I would inquire of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] if that committee will be able to report upon this subject should it be referred to them?

Mr. JULIAN. I suppose we can.

Mr. BIDWELL. Then I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that in his opinion it is very doubtful whether either committee will again be reached in the regular call of committees.

Mr. BIDWELL. If the committee will act upon it I am willing it should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JULIAN. It is our duty to act upon it. The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

TOWNS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BIDWELL introduced a bill for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

POST ROUTE IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. WHALEY introduced a bill to establish a mail route in the State of West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. CHAVES introduced a bill for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. GOODWIN introduced a bill for the relief of inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions being concluded, the next business during the remainder of the morning hour is the call of States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Iowa, where the call was arrested on the expiration of the morning hour last Monday.

PURCHASE OF A PICTURE.

Mr. HIGBY submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the picture of Francis B. Carpenter, of New York, representing the first reading of the emancipation proclamation, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

CLAIMS FROM INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent to submit another resolution, which I have been requested to present by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

There being no objection, leave was granted; and

Mr. HIGBY submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas it is alleged that a claims commission of the War Department is now in session in Washington which has allowed to citizens of States lately in rebellion claims growing out of the destruction or appropriation of or damages to property by the Army of the United States while engaged in suppressing the rebellion, some of which claims have been paid—all of which, according to the uniform understanding previously in this Congress, is without authority of law: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be, and are, instructed to ascertain whether such claims commission exists, the authority therefor; whether said commission has allowed any claim or claims without authority of law; whether, if so, they have been paid, and by what authority; whether any appropriation has been made therefor, and what law, if any, may be necessary or proper, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I desire to submit to the House a statement—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] has called the previous question.

Mr. McKEE. The proper place to go to ascertain the facts on this subject is the quartermaster's department. The Quartermaster General can furnish the House all the information that may be desired.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I have a statement which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read. It is from a responsible source, and will show the necessity—

The SPEAKER. If the resolution gives rise to debate, it must go over under the rule.

Mr. McKEE. I rise to debate the question.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Let the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the statement being read?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

"One Dr. William P. Jones, of Nashville, presented a claim before a 'claims' commission of the War Department for use of and damages to property taken by our Army in 1862, for fortifications, &c. A fort or forts were erected, and it was occupied, as claimed, until November 27, 1866. This claims commission allowed him a percentage for use of the property, estimated upon its supposed value of $45,000 at the time of its appropriation..... $5,921 51 And estimating the depreciation of the property at $35,000, they allowed him two thirds as damages..... 23,333 33

Total..... $29,254 84

"They also found that he should be reimbursed all United States, State, and municipal taxes, but the amount is not fixed. This was approved and confirmed by L. H. Pelouze, assistant adjutant general, and referred to the engineer department and paid by James Everleth, one of its agents.

The question whether the payment could be credited by the accounting officers to Mr. Everleth was sent by the Third Auditor to the Second Comptroller's office of the Treasury Department. A report was made that it was the established public policy of Government not to recognize and settle this class of cases, at least for the present, and that the only tribunal, the Court of Claims, had been deprived of jurisdiction, and no appropriations had been made, &c., and that the whole question being with Congress, &c., and that Everleth could not be credited, &c. This has been adopted by the Second Comptroller, but this does not remedy the evil. The money has been paid, and possibly can never be restored. And how much more has been and will be paid in the same way there is no telling. Precisely similar claims, and one even from Nashville, have been presented to the accounting officers, and payment invariably refused."

Before the Clerk had concluded the reading of the foregoing statement,

Mr. McKEE said: I rise to a point of order. I submit that the reading of this document is in the nature of debate on the resolution and is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The House, by unanimous consent, granted leave that the statement might be read. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKEE] probably had his attention drawn away at the moment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the statement.

On seconding the call for the previous question there were—ayes 26, noes 31; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and Mr. SPALDING.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I ask my colleague [Mr. LAWRENCE] to yield to me that I may offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing, no quorum having voted.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes seventy-three, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DEMING asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in relation to the claim of Mrs. Almira Thompson, provided copies be left.

PRINTING REPORT MAIL CONTRACTS, ETC.

Mr. BOUTWELL submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to report the propriety and probable cost of printing the annual report of contracts and mail service of the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1866; also the same to December 31, 1866.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BIDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STATIONERY, ETC., FOR MEMBERS.

Mr. BIDWELL also submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Clerk be authorized to pay the members of this House from the State of Tennessee the usual newspaper and stationery allowance for the first session of the present Congress.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BIDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS AGAINST GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. McRUER submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the Government of the United States should be guided in the prosecution of the claims of its citizens against the Government of Great Britain for depredations of the Alabama and other Anglo-rebel cruisers by the same dispatch and emphasis that characterized the Government of Great Britain in the settlement of their demand upon this Government arising from the capture of Mason and Slidell from the Trent.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. McRUER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANT STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the assistant stenographer appointed under resolution of the House of July 16, 1866, be continued in office during the next Congress and until otherwise ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 20; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. WINDOM and SCOTFIELD.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Have we the right to select officers for the next Congress? If we can do this, why not select a Speaker and a Clerk for the next House?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is this the stenographer for committees?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported no votes in the affirmative.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. ANCONA rose to debate the resolution, and it went over under the rules.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted the following resolutions, on which he demanded the previous question.

1. Resolved, That when the people of any State or States of this Union renounce the authority of the Constitution and laws thereof, and make war upon the same, they thereby forfeit all rights and privileges they enjoyed under such Constitution and laws.

2. Resolved, That all authority to govern and control men and things within the boundaries of such State or States thereafter rightfully and properly reverts to the Government of the United States.

3. Resolved, The Union primarily consists in the existence of one paramount Government over all States and Territories within the boundaries of the United States.

4. Resolved, That the war lately waged against traitors was not to uphold and sustain State authority in State organizations, but to uphold and maintain national authority in all its territory.

5. Resolved, That the Union has not been divided, and that it is not divisible.

Mr. LE BLOND. I make the point of order that these resolutions under the rules go to the joint Committee on Reconstruction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, as the first resolution declares "they thereby forfeit all rights and privileges they enjoyed under such Constitution and laws," one of which rights was representation, and subjects relating to the representation of the so-called confederate States are to be referred without debate. The resolutions therefore are referred to the joint select Committee on Reconstruction.

REMOVALS FROM OFFICE.

The next business in order was the consideration of the following resolutions offered by Mr. DRIGGS, and which laid over under the rules:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House the following information, namely:

1. The number and names in each of the States and Territories of all registers and receivers of land offices, Indian agents, commissioners, and other persons employed in his Department who have been removed since the adjournment of the last session of Congress, together with the names of their successors, and the causes and reasons in each case for such removals and appointments.

2. Whether the salaries or emoluments of persons so appointed have been increased from those of their predecessors; and if so, to what extent in each case and in the aggregate.

The resolutions were adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 527) to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 338) for the relief of Henry Greathouse and Samuel Kelley;

An act (S. No. 470) to authorize the change of a name;

An act (S. No. 529) to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia; and

An act (S. No. 175) to incorporate the Pharmaceutical Association of the District.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed an act (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, without amendment, an act (H. R. No. 183) concerning the fire department of Washington city.

EQUALITY OF SUFFRAGE.

The next resolutions lying over under the rules were the following, offered by Mr. NOBLE on the 4th of February:

Resolved, That Governments were made for the people, and not the people for the Government; that every adult citizen of sound mind in any State or Territory has the right to a voice in the formation of the constitution of said State, and in the representation and laws of said State, and that any State which disfranchises any class of its citizens on account of sex is not republican in form and should be overturned by Congress.

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia is hereby instructed to report to this House, without delay, a bill so amending an act entitled "An act to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia," which passed Congress January 8, 1867, as to abolish the disfranchisement of persons from voting on account of sex.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary are instructed to report a bill calling a convention and authorizing every adult citizen of sound mind in the State of Massachusetts to vote for delegates to said convention for the purpose of making a constitution for said State republican in form.

The SPEAKER. The mover of the resolutions not being present, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to make a speech on this question, and I will only ask to have read a memorial which I have in my hand in lieu of any remarks which I might make, provided I wanted to make a speech.

The Clerk read as follows:

Memorial of the American Equal Rights Association to the Congress of the United States.

The undersigned, officers and representatives of the American Equal Rights Association, respectfully but earnestly protest against any change in the Constitution of the United States, or legislation by Congress which shall longer violate the principle of republican government by proscriptive distinctions in rights of suffrage and citizenship on account of color or sex.

Your memorialists would respectfully represent that neither the colored man's loyalty, bravery on the battle-field, and general good conduct, nor woman's heroic devotion to liberty and her country, in peace and war, have yet availed to admit them to equal citizenship, even in this enlightened and republican nation.

We believe that humanity is one in all those intellectual, moral, and spiritual attributes out of which grow human responsibilities. The Scripture declaration is, "so God created man in his own image; male and female created he them." And all divine legislation throughout the realm of nature recognizes the perfect equality of the two conditions. For male and female are but different conditions.

Neither color nor sex is ever discharged from obedience to law, natural or moral, written or unwritten. The commands, thou shalt not steal, nor kill, nor commit adultery, know nothing of sex in their demands; nothing in their penalty. And hence we believe that all human legislation which is at variance with the divine code is essentially unrighteous and unjust.

Woman and the colored man are taxed to support many literary and humane institutions, into which they never come, except in the poorly paid capacity of menial servants. Woman has been fined, whipped, branded with red hot irons, imprisoned, and hung; but when was woman ever tried by a jury of her peers?

Though the nation declared from the beginning that "all just governments derive their powers from the consent of the governed," the consent of woman was never asked to a single statute, however nearly it affected her dearest womanly interests or happiness. In the despotisms of the Old World, of ancient and modern times, woman, profligate, prostitute, weak, cruel, tyrannical or otherwise, from Semiramis and Mes-salina to Catharine of Russia and Margaret of Anjou, have swayed, unchallenged, imperial scepters; while in this republican and Christian land, in the nineteenth century woman, intelligent, refined in every ennobling gift and grace, may not even vote on the appropriation of her own property, or the disposal and destiny of her own children. Literally she has no rights which man is bound to respect; and her civil privileges she holds only by sufferance. For the power that gave can take away, and of that power she is no part. In most of the States these unjust distinctions apply to woman and to the colored man alike.

Your memorialists fully believe that the time has come when such injustice should cease.

Woman and the colored man are loyal, patriotic, property-holding, tax-paying, liberty-loving citizens, and we cannot believe that sex or complexion should be any ground for civil or political degradation.

In our Government one half the citizens are disfranchised by their sex, and about one eighth by the color of their skin; and thus a large majority have no voice in enacting or executing the laws they are taxed to support and compelled to obey with the same fidelity as the more favored class, whose usurped prerogative it is to rule.

Against such outrages on the very name of republican freedom your memorialists do and must ever protest. And is not our protest preëminently as just against the tyranny of "taxation without representation" as was that thundered from Bunker Hill when our revolutionary fathers fired the shot that shook the world?

And your memorialists especially remember, at this time, that our country is still reeling under the shock of a terrible civil war, the legitimate result and righteous retribution of the vilest slave system ever suffered among men. And in restoring the foundations of our nationality your memorialists most respectfully and earnestly pray that all discriminations on account of sex or race may be removed, and that our Government may be republican in fact as well as form; a Government by the people, and the whole people; for the people, and the whole people.

In behalf of the American Equal Rights Association,

LUCRETIA MOTT,

President.

THEODORE TILTON,

FREDERICK DOUGLASS,

ELIZABETH CADY STANTON,

Vice Presidents.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY,

Secretary.

Before the Clerk had concluded the reading of the above,

Mr. SPALDING moved that the gentleman from Wisconsin have leave to print the remainder. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. SPALDING. Then I insist that he shall read the paper himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman shall not dictate to me about reading a speech. [Laughter.] The Clerk has read the greater portion of the memorial, and all I wanted to have read. My object in presenting it was that the distinguished ladies who sent it might have a hearing in this House, as no advocate of their rights was present at the time the resolutions came up. I am not their advocate, but as I see the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NOELL] is now present I will yield to one who will advocate their course, as he has always done by his acts and words. [Laughter.]

Mr. NOELL then addressed the House, but before concluding the morning hour expired, and the resolutions went over till Monday next in the morning hour.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that this bill be made a special order for Wednesday evening next at seven o'clock, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. SCHENCK. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say, in connection with the motion I have submitted, that if we expect to act on this bill and the tariff bill at this session it is indispensably necessary that we shall now order evening sessions.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to say that the bill for the equalization of bounties has been shoved aside week after week. I intend that its consideration shall not be further postponed in this way if I can prevent it by objecting to the making of additional special orders.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that this bill if made a special order will be a special order in the Committee of the Whole; and as it cannot be considered unless a majority decide to go into the Committee of the Whole it cannot interfere with the bounty bill, which would be considered in the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. But a member of the Committee of Ways and Means can at any time move to go into the Committee of the Whole. If the bill now reported is not made a special order in Committee of the Whole, the motion cannot be made to go into the Committee of the Whole for its consideration.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to suspend the rules so as to make the bill a special order for Wednesday evening next at seven o'clock, and from day to day until disposed of.

On the motion there were—ayes 84, noes 40. So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended; and the motion of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

BOSTON CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. HULBURD, by unanimous consent, submitted from the Committee on Public Expenditures a report, with accompanying testimony, relative to the Boston custom-house; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLANTS, by unanimous consent, submitted the views of a minority of the same committee on the same subject; which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move that two thousand extra copies of both reports be printed for the use of the House, and five hundred copies of the evidence.

The SPEAKER. That motion goes to the Committee on Printing under the law.

CYPRESS HILL CEMETERY, NEW YORK.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to inquire into the propriety of appropriating a sum sufficient to enable the trustees of the Cypress Hill Cemetery, Long Island, New York, to place head-stones to the graves of soldiers buried in said cemetery during the war, inclosing the grounds, and erecting a suitable and appropriate monument on the same.

PRINTING TAX BILL.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House one thousand copies extra of the bill amending the internal revenue laws, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means this day.

EXPENSES OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution, which I have been instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to present:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, upon the order of the Committee on the Judiciary, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding $10,000 in the aggregate, as may be necessary to enable the said committee to prosecute the several investigations committed to its charge.

Mr. ROSS. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done at this time, as the House is now acting under a suspension of the rules, if there be any objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSS. I make the point of order, that under the rules it must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That can be suspended as well as other rules.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW ORLEANS RIOT.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that the rules be suspended in order to permit me to submit a report from the select Committee on the New Orleans Riots, accompanied by a bill, on which I shall ask action at this time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT then, from the select Committee on the New Orleans Riot, submitted the evidence taken by the authority of the House, together with the report of the majority thereon; and moved that they be laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOYER, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, submitted the views of the minority; and moved that they be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed with the majority report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which, under the law, was referred to the joint Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That twenty thousand extra copies of the reports, and ten thousand of the evidence taken by the Committee on the New Orleans Riot be printed for the use of the members of the House of Representatives.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. ELIOT, from the same committee, reported a bill for the reëstablishment of civil government in the State of Louisiana. It was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

The bill was read in extenso, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, a Governor for the State of Louisiana, who shall hold his office for one year unless sooner removed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or unless sooner superseded by a successor elected under the provisions of this act. Such Governor so appointed shall have attained the age of thirty years, shall be a citizen of the United States and of the State of Louisiana. He shall not have held any office whatever under the government of the so-called confederate States nor of any State which recognized the authority of such pretended government. He shall not have signed, voted for, or by speech or otherwise favored the act of secession of any State; nor shall he be any person who has ever held any office in the Army or Navy of the United States and who afterward took an oath to support the said pretended government; nor shall he be a person who was a member of either House of the Congress of the United States after the first Monday in December, A. D. 1860, and who afterward took an oath to support the said pretended government, nor shall he be one who has borne arms against the Government of the United States, or who has in any way given aid, counsel, countenance, or encouragement to the late rebellion; but shall be one who has at all times borne true faith and allegiance to the Government of the United States. And before such nomination shall be acted upon by the Senate such nominee shall make the same oath (which shall be signed and filed with the Secretary of the Senate) prescribed by first section of the act of 2d July, A. D. 1862, and which oath shall also contain a declaration that the nominee has done no act which would work a disqualification for holding such office under the provisions of this act.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That the President shall forthwith nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, a provisional council, consisting of nine persons, who shall have the same qualifications as are herein prescribed for the office of Governor, and who, before being confirmed by the Senate, shall on oath make, sign, and file with said Secretary the same oath as is prescribed for the Governor. Such councilors shall continue to hold their office, unless sooner removed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until a Legislature shall be duly elected and qualified under the provisions of this act. Such provisional council shall, with the Governor, have all legislative power in such State. But in no event shall the Governor or any councilor enter upon the duties of their respective offices until after confirmation by the Senate. A majority of such council shall be a quorum; and the same shall continue in permanent session, with power, however, to order such adjournments as may be deemed proper, but no adjournment shall be for more than thirty days at one time.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That the Governor shall forthwith take possession and charge of all archives and other property belonging to the State; and it shall be his duty to see that all laws of the State and of the United States shall be duly executed within said State. Until all officers shall become elective by the people as herein provided the Governor shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the provisional council, shall appoint and commission all the officers now provided for by the existing government of said State, or which may hereafter be created by law. Such officers shall hold their offices, unless sooner removed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the provisional council, until successors shall be elected and qualified as herein provided. And all councilors, legislators, and other members and officers of the provisional government hereby established, and also all the members of the constitutional convention hereafter provided for, shall be selected from such only as can truthfully take the oath aforesaid, prescribed by the act of 2d July, A. D. 1862, and before entering upon the duties of such office shall take and subscribe such oath, which oath shall be filed with and preserved by the chief justice of the State.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That unless otherwise hereafter provided by Congress, the persons duly qualified as electors, according to the provisions of this act, in the State of Louisiana, shall, upon the first Tuesday of June, A. D. 1867, proceed to elect a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, a Senate, and House of Representatives, and all the other officers herein provided to be appointed; which Senate and House of Representatives shall be composed of the same number of members, and be elected from the same districts, as is provided under the present government of such State; and the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Senators, Representatives, and all the other officers of such provisional government shall respectively hold their offices for one year and until their successors are duly qualified, unless such officers are sooner removed or superseded, in pursuance of the other provisions of this act. All such officers so elected shall have the same qualifications and shall take, subscribe, and file the same oath as is herein required in the case of the appointment of such officers. And the powers, duties, fees, and compensation of all such officers shall be the same as now by law appertain to such offices respectively, in so far as such laws are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, That the following persons, and no others, shall be electors and entitled to vote at all elections held under the provisions of this act, namely: every male citizen of the United States, without distinction of race or color, who has attained the age of twenty-one years and who has resided in Louisiana one year, and who has never borne arms against the United States since he was a citizen thereof, and who can truthfully take the oath prescribed by aforesaid act of July 2, A. D. 1862: Provided, That any person otherwise qualified as an elector, as herein provided, and who never voluntarily gave aid, countenance, encouragement, or support to any rebellion against the United States, nor any such aid, countenance, encouragement, or support to any government inimical to the United States in any other manner, capacity, or rank than as a private soldier in open and civilized warfare, may be admitted to the rights of an elector by an order of any court of record of the United States upon establishing to the satisfaction of the court, by the testimony of persons who have at all times borne true allegiance to the United States that he is one coming within the description of persons designated in this proviso, and upon establishing, as aforesaid, that such person after the 4th day of March, A. D. 1864, never gave any voluntary aid, countenance, support, or encouragement to such rebellion nor to any government inimical to the United States. Upon such proof being made and upon taking and subscribing upon the records of the court an oath that all the things are true which bring the applicant within the exceptions of this proviso, and also that such person will at all times bear true allegiance to the Government of the United States and to the perpetual union of the States thereunder, such person shall receive a certificate which shall entitle him to the rights of an elector.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever any person's right to hold office, or to vote under the provisions of this act, shall be challenged or called in question, and it shall be made to appear to the officers of election or others having the matter to decide, either by the oath of the person challenged, or by other evidence, that the person challenged, in fact, did any act, the voluntary doing of which works a disqualification to vote, to hold office, to be admitted by order of the court to the rights of an election, or to be registered as such under the provisions of this act, then in all such cases such acts shall prima facie be deemed to have been done voluntarily; and it shall devolve upon the person challenged to prove to the satisfaction of the tribunal having the matter to decide, and by the evidence of persons who have always borne true allegiance to the United States, such facts as shall satisfy such tribunal that such acts of disloyalty were involuntary.

Sec. 7. Be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is hereby required to make and publish rules providing for—

1. A just and true registration prior to each general election of the names of all persons who under the provisions of this act are entitled to vote at any election named in this act, and he shall designate persons having the qualifications of electors by whom such registration shall be made, which registration shall be completed and made accessible to all the electors of the State at least one week before each general election.

2. For the times of holding all elections, the time for holding which is not fixed by this act, and also for the places and manner of holding and conducting all the elections contemplated by this act, including rules for receiving, counting, certifying, and returning the votes cast, the granting certificates of election, the appointment and compensation of all judges and other officers of election, and for every other thing which shall be necessary to the holding of a free election by the people. But all officers and agents appointed to make such registrations and to conduct, make returns of, certify to, or do any act touching any election shall be persons entitled to the rights of an elector under the provisions of this act, and all such persons shall, before entering upon such duties, take and subscribe the oath aforesaid, prescribed by the act of 2d July, 1862; and also to faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their office. Said constitution shall provide that no debt, demand, or liability contracted or incurred in the name of the State or otherwise in support of the recent rebellion shall be assumed or paid, and that no pension, compensation, gift, or gratuity, shall be bestowed upon or paid by the State to any person by reason of any thing done or suffered in support of the rebellion; and such constitution shall provide that the aforesaid provisions shall be irreversible and incapable of abrogation by amendment thereof.

Sec. 8. Be it further enacted, That upon the third Tuesday of October, A. D. 1867, unless the Congress of the United States should by law otherwise provide, an election shall be held by all the persons qualified to vote under the provisions of this act for the choice of members to a convention to adopt a permanent constitution and frame of government for the State of Louisiana. No person shall be eligible to a seat in such convention who has not attained the age of twenty-five years, and who has not all the other qualifications prescribed by this act for Governor; and such convention shall be composed of the same number of members, and shall be elected from the same districts, as is now provided by law for the House of Representatives; and no person shall take a seat in such convention who has not first taken, and upon the Journals of the convention subscribed, the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862. The constitution framed by such convention shall not permit any distinction in the rights of men on account of race or color, and shall recognize the power and duty of the Government of the United States to protect and enforce the perpetual union of the States under such Government upon such terms as may be by them prescribed. Such constitution shall be submitted for approval by the convention at such time as it may fix to the electors of the State qualified to vote under the provisions of this act, the election to be held under rules prescribed as aforesaid by the Secretary of War; and if approved by a majority of such electors it may be presented to Congress for the admission of the State to representation in Congress thereunder.

Sec. 9. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to designate forthwith an officer of the Army of the United States, who is of rank not below brigadier general, who shall be stationed in the State of Louisiana, and shall be the military commander within the State; it shall moreover be the duty of the President to place in such State under the command of such officer such military force as shall be requisite to execute the duties herein assigned to such commander. It shall be the duty of such commander, whenever the civil authorities in such State shall be unable to, or shall from any cause neglect, omit, or refuse to see that all the laws are speedily enforced for the punishment or prevention of crimes or offenses against the rights of any person whomsoever, to at once arrest and hold such offenders until the civil authorities shall cause such offenses to be duly prosecuted. And it shall moreover be the duty of such commander to render such support to the civil authorities in the preservation of order and in the enforcement of the laws and rules regulating elections, and also all other laws, both of the United States and of the State, as shall insure the full, speedy, and impartial enforcement of all such laws and of equal justice, and this without regard to race or color.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the militia of the State shall consist of all the citizens of the State qualified as electors under this act, who shall be as soon as practicable duly organized and equipped, and during the existence of the provisional government hereby created such militia shall act under the direction of the aforesaid military commander within the State.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That all laws passed by the provisional council or by the Legislature herein provided for shall as speedily as possible after their enactment be duly certified and transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States for the approval of Congress. And should the same be disapproved by Congress, the fact shall be at once duly certified and transmitted to the chief justice of Louisiana, and the date of the receipt thereof shall be indorsed thereon, and the same shall be filed and preserved in the records of the Supreme Court. And all laws so disapproved shall be void from and after the date of such indorsement.

Sec. 12. Be it further enacted, That until the people of Louisiana shall be admitted to representation in the Congress of the United States under such loyal and republican government as the United States shall recognize and assume to guaranty, such people shall be entitled to one Delegate in the House of Representatives, to be elected at the first general election provided for in this act by the qualified electors of the State as provided in this act. Such delegate must be a person who has the qualifications for and could hold the office of Governor under the provisions of this act. And he shall have the same powers and rights now had by Delegates from the Territories of the United States.

Sec. 13. Be it further enacted, That all laws now in force in Louisiana, consistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and with the provisions of this act, shall remain in force until repealed or modified: Provided, That no person shall be competent to act as a juror who is not an elector under the provisions of this act: And provided also, That all the expenses of and incident to the administration of the provisional governments herein provided for shall be collected and paid as is now done for the support of the present government of Louisiana.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, I was not in my seat when this bill was introduced. I understand the rules were suspended to allow its introduction.

The SPEAKER. They were.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I raise the question that this House cannot suspend a joint rule of the two Houses. I understand the resolution establishing this committee is a joint resolution, and that it requires the concurrence of the Senate to suspend the rule by which these matters are referred to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the fact is otherwise; it is a rule of the House only. The Chair will state the history of the case. On the first day of the first session of this Congress the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STREVEN] offered a resolution for the appointment of a joint Committee on Reconstruction. That resolution provided, among other things, that all matters relating to representation of the so-called confederate States, when presented, should be referred by both branches of Congress to that committee without debate. When the resolution came to the Senate that body refused to concur in that part of it. The Senate has never referred these matters to the joint committee there, but has laid them on the table. Afterward, on motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] it was resolved that all papers relating to representation in the so-called confederate States of America should be referred to the joint Committee on Reconstruction without debate. It is therefore a rule of the House alone, and not a joint rule.

Mr. LE BLOND. Since the Chair speaks of it I now remember it. I wish now to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

ELIOT] whether this bill comes into the House for action at this time.

Mr. ELIOT. In reply to that inquiry I will state that it is not the desire of the committee to do that if the bill can be retained in such a way as to secure the action of the House upon it in the course of to-morrow. We desire to have debate upon it sufficient to satisfy the gentleman in regard to its merits and have the bill seasonably passed. I do not want to run the risk of not having the bill acted upon and passed in time to become a law. It is of course undesirable that a bill of this nature should be even discussed before it has been put in such a shape that gentlemen can make themselves acquainted with its provisions, and I hope there will be no objection from any quarter that such delay can be had, and such resumption of it made as to enable gentlemen to become familiar with the details of the bill, and yet enable us to pass it in season to go to the other branch and be acted on there.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg leave to suggest to the gentleman to put his proposition in this way: that his bill be taken up and considered by general consent after the pending business before the House from the Committee on Reconstruction shall have been disposed of.

Mr. ELIOT. If I should agree to that I will inquire of the Chair what would be the effect so far as the business of the House is concerned?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the condition of the business of the House. It is nominally engaged at present in the consideration of the bill reported last December by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAMS] in regard to the tenure of office, which the House resolved to debate under the five-minute rule. While that was pending the House authorized the joint Committee on Retrenchment to report a bill in regard to the civil service. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] was also authorized by unanimous consent to report a bounty bill, which comes up when the civil service bill is disposed of unless interfered with by other business which has priority. The Committee on the Judiciary was also authorized to report an indemnity bill, which was ordered to come up as soon as the other pending matters were disposed of. While they were all pending the joint Committee on Reconstruction, which is authorized to report at any time, reported a bill which is also pending. With all these bills pending, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] has reported this bill this morning, and it is now before the House. So the House has a variety of business before it, and it is as much as the Speaker can do to keep the run of it.

Mr. ELIOT. Then, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BOYER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly I will.

Mr. BOYER. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there is an evident impropriety in the House acting upon this bill either to-day or to-morrow. This House sent a special committee of investigation to the city of New Orleans, who were engaged there for a considerable time in taking the testimony of witnesses. Since their return to this city they have been engaged during several weeks in the same occupation. It is only to-day that the majority of the committee have submitted to this House their report, which it is to be presumed none of the other members of this House as yet have seen. Although upon the committee, I have not as yet had an opportunity of being enlightened by the views of my colleagues upon that committee as expressed in their report to this House.

The testimony which has been taken by this committee is very voluminous. If it was to answer any good purpose to send this committee forth to make this investigation and report to this House the testimony taken by them, then, why should we be called to act upon a measure directly affecting the State of Louisiana, and intended to abrogate the Government which is in successful and peaceful operation there at this time? Why should this be done before members of this House have had an opportunity of even reading the evidence which has been taken by this committee, and which has a bearing upon this subject? It seems to me that that testimony should be printed, that we should have the reports printed, in order that we may have all the light upon this subject which is accessible to us. We should make use of all the means which this House has ordered to be provided for us in order that we may properly judge of the question here involved.

I would therefore suggest to my colleague upon the committee, and its chairman, [Mr. ELIOT,] by whose courtesy I am allowed now to occupy the floor, that it would be manifestly improper, and it would be so regarded, it seems to me, by the whole country, for this House, without making any use of these opportunities, of forming an enlightened judgment, to rush at once to its passage this bill which is intended to sweep away the constitutional government of the State of Louisiana, which government, as I have already remarked, is now in peaceful and successful operation. If that government is not now in peaceful and successful operation there perhaps the testimony taken by this committee will show it. I should like at least to have an opportunity of showing the facts in this case. If that opportunity could be afforded me I think I should be able to render a good reason to this House and to the country why the government of Louisiana as it now exists should be allowed to remain undisturbed and to go on in the course in which it has been proceeding for some time past.

I do not desire unnecessarily to trespass upon the time of my colleague [Mr. ELIOT,] therefore I do not feel warranted in any further remarks to the House upon this subject. I rose simply to make the suggestion which I have made, and I had not intended to occupy so much time in giving my reasons for it.

Mr. ELIOT. It is perfectly manifest that if the wishes of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYER] should be complied with, or his suggestion adopted, this bill would go over indefinitely and beyond the present Congress. We understand very well that that gentleman does prefer that matters in Louisiana should remain as they are. I was in hopes that some suggestion would be made to relieve the committee from the difficulty in which they were placed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to make another suggestion?

Mr. ELIOT. Will the gentleman allow me first to reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BOYER?]

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to make a suggestion to relieve the gentleman from the difficulty to which he has referred.

Mr. ELIOT. Very well; I will hear it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will make this suggestion to the gentleman, that he move to recommit this bill to the committee whence it came, and then enter a motion to reconsider the recommitment. And I would inquire of the Chair if that motion would not be a privileged motion that could be called up at any time?

The SPEAKER. There are now pending some twelve or fourteen motions to reconsider; they are all privileged, but they cannot be called up while any other business is before the House for consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then by unanimous consent give the committee leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. That would be no better for the accomplishment of the object which the Chair supposes the gentleman has in view. The highest privilege which the House can confer upon any subject is by giving unanimous consent to its consideration. There are already pending three subjects having that privilege. This bill being now immediately pending is before the House for consideration and action at this time.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I do not see that there is any course of action open to the committee except to ask the House to consider and pass upon this bill now.

The SPEAKER. The only course the Chair can suggest is for the House to unanimously reconsider the unanimous consent given in relation to the other subjects, and make this bill anterior to them.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I suggest that that be done.

Mr. SCHENCK. I object.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] better call the previous question on this bill and put it upon its passage this morning; it is his only chance. Let him show his pluck, and call the previous question on it at once.

Mr. ELIOT. If any gentleman can make a suggestion to relieve the committee I will gladly yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BOYER. I desire to inquire whether, if this bill were referred to the Committee on Reconstruction that committee could not, under the rules of the House, report at any time and so give priority to the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair has already stated, the House has involved itself in this dilemma. Some time ago the House, by unanimous consent, authorized the Committee on Military Affairs to report at any time the bounty bill. That bill is now pending, to be considered whenever it shall be reached. The House also, by unanimous consent, granted to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] leave to report from the Committee on the Judiciary at any time what is known as the indemnity bill. That bill has been reported and is now pending, to come up after the bounty bill. If the House should now grant unanimous consent for the reporting of this bill at any time it would come in after the bounty bill and the indemnity bill. The Chair does not know any method by which the House can relieve itself.

Mr. THAYER. Why cannot this bill be postponed to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. It can be.

Mr. THAYER. Then let me suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] who has charge of this bill—

The SPEAKER. If it should be postponed it would probably never be reached, because other matters would have priority, which has been given to them by unanimous consent.

Mr. THAYER. The House ought not to be asked to vote on the bill at this time, when it has not been printed and no opportunity has been afforded to examine it.

Mr. BOYER. I would ask whether it is not better that the bill should fail rather than that it should be passed when the House has no sufficient means of forming an intelligent judgment upon it?

Mr. SCHENCK. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we had not your clear head to guide us we should be in such a muddle that no one could extricate the House from it. We have had an explanation of the condition of business; and I wish to add a single remark in relation to the present status of this bill and the manner in which it is presented for the action of the House.

At the very commencement of this session we revived the Reconstruction Committee, and agreed that everything relating to the representation of the insurrectionary States and their reorganization should be referred to that committee. For reasons best known to the committee it had, I believe, no meeting; and various side attempts were made to dispose of the question of reconstruction, until the whole subject, as it was presented by a bill from the gentleman at the head of that committee, was referred to the committee. We then obtained a report in the shape of the bill which has been under discussion for several days. We see on all sides of this House—I think I am not mistaken in saying this—a disposition to come speedily to an agreement so to amend that bill as to make it agreeable to a large majority here and to pass it. If it be passed it will cover the whole question of reconstruction for all the rebel States.

Now, in this condition of things, when we are approaching probably a solution of the whole difficulty, there comes in from another committee by a side-wind a proposition for reconstruction applicable to one particular State, and that in the shape of a bill whose provisions occupy probably nearly a quire of paper; and upon this we are called upon to act, and at once, because if we do not act upon it at once it will lie over with no prospect of our being able to reach it. In this condition of things what would be the sensible course for the House to take? To take up and go on with the whole subject of reconstruction presented in the bill now under consideration, what is called the military bill, coming from the proper committee, the Committee on Reconstruction. Commit this bill to that committee at once. They will have an opportunity, for it is a privileged committee, to report it back at any time, and if it prevails it will cover the whole ground.

It seems to me in all this matter we resemble more what I have seen in boys hunting rabbits. After going a little distance on one track we come to another which crosses it, and we follow the new track till another crosses it, take that, and so continue; and nothing is accomplished. I propose that we put this out of the way, as a new track or a new line crossing our path, by sending it to the Committee on Reconstruction and going on with the reconstruction bill and disposing of it, as I think we can, in the next twenty-four hours.

I will (I know the gentleman holds the floor against me, and I cannot do it now) at the first opportunity, if I can vote down the previous question, in order to move to recommit this to the Committee on Reconstruction and go on with the reconstruction bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me.

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly, if the gentleman wishes to make a suggestion.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. As this is germane to the subject the House was considering when it adjourned on Saturday, and as that will come up I suppose the next business in order, why cannot this bill, if the gentleman desires a vote on it, be moved as an amendment to the other one?

The SPEAKER. Further amendment is not in order, as there is an amendment to an amendment pending, and gentlemen have given notice of others they intend offering.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The majority can vote down all the other amendments and adopt this one in their stead. There is nothing to interfere with the gentleman from Massachusetts offering his bill as a substitute.

Mr. ELIOT. In reply to one suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio, I wish to say the bill now before the House from the Reconstruction Committee does not interfere with the provisions of the other bill also pending, nor will action on this prevent action on that. The bill from the Reconstruction Committee is a pure military bill, and if it passes to-day would not interfere at all with this, except I am desirous not to have any collision, either of fact or feeling, between this bill and the other one.

I do not see but the committee is constrained to go on with the discussion on this bill unless the House will adopt the suggestion I have made just now, that the bill shall be ordered to be printed and we shall have leave to call it up to-morrow in precedence of all other orders.

Mr. RAYMOND. Let me ask a question. Mr. ELIOT. Yes, if it will throw any light on the subject.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know what action on the part of the House is necessary in order to carry out the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, to have the general bill on reconstruction come in and take the place of this now before the House?

The SPEAKER. By the passage of this bill, by laying it on the table, by referring it, by postponing it to a day certain, or indefinitely, or any other disposition of this bill, will then bring up the bill on reconstruction.

Mr. RAYMOND. Are we now in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired. You cannot suspend the rules in the morning hour, but only after it has expired.

Mr. SCHENCK. I suggest that the gentleman yield the floor to me to make the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Reconstruction, and at once to take a vote on it.

Mr. ELIOT. And that existing orders be so far suspended as to take the action first on this bill. [Cries of "No!"] I am contented to yield to any suggestion with the understanding I have stated.

Mr. SCHENCK. I want the gentleman to understand me. I am willing, for one, if we recommit to his committee, they shall have leave to report at any time; but he asks more than that; he asks all the other business of the House be set aside for this, and that I cannot consent to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest that if the gentleman obtains the best terms possible that is all that can be done. It must be evident, in the present temper of the House, that if he should go on and consume an hour this morning, at the expiration of the hour it may be immediately referred either to the Committee on Reconstruction or to his own committee. Hence, if he accepts the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, to recommit the bill with power to report at any time, it certainly seems to me it is the best proposition he can get.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, will it be in order to move to adjourn, so that gentlemen may have a caucus on this subject? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Not while the gentleman from Massachusetts is on the floor.

Mr. ELIOT. If I can be allowed to report this bill at any time, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont, upon the understanding that that means just what it says, then I shall give notice that I will report it to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if any gentleman demands the regular order of business he can prevent the gentleman from reporting it to-morrow morning.

Mr. ELIOT. It must be perfectly obvious, then, that this bill must take its chance now with the House.

Mr. CHANLER. I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman must proceed or surrender the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to make an inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. ELIOT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to know if this should go to the joint Committee on Reconstruction, and a motion should be entered to reconsider, whether a majority of the House cannot at any time postpone all prior orders and take this up?

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman demands the regular order, that brings the pending business before the House. If any gentleman had demanded the regular order to-day at the expiration of the morning hour, that would have brought up the reconstruction bill, which was made the special order by the unanimous order of the House, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] would have been entitled to the floor.

Mr. ELIOT. I understand if the motion to recommit is made and a motion to reconsider the recommitment is entered it would then be within the power of the chairman of the committee to call the bill up for consideration at any time, unless some gentleman called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is so.

Mr. ELIOT. Now, if there could be an understanding that advantage should not be taken of me—[Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that the committee has reported the best bill that has yet come before the House. [Laughter.] It has been drawn by more than a dozen gentlemen. [Laughter.] There is no one person who can be considered responsible for it, because the brain, the heart, the judgment of every gentleman on this floor whose efforts have been directed in this channel have been invoked and are incarnated in this bill. [Laughter.] I am perfectly sure when we come to discuss it we shall agree upon a vote. I desire it shall be adopted, and to have the House in good nature when it is done. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. ELIOT. A very short one.

Mr. BOYER. I desire him to inform the House whether or not his colleague on the committee representing the minority was consulted with reference to the draft of this bill?

Mr. ELIOT. I take it upon myself to say that he was not. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. ELIOT. If it will take but an instant.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to know how it is that a majority of this House have been able to give an opinion upon this bill before it was reported? I presume the gentleman had not disclosed it to a majority of the House.

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said that this bill embodied the heart and brain of every gentleman in the House who had directed his efforts in this channel. There are bills before the House presented by different gentlemen; they have been carefully examined and compared, and what is good has been taken from each one of them.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. ELIOT. It is manifest that I must let the House judge in this matter. I have tried all the ways I know and there is but one left to me, and that is to place the matter before the House. I shall have to call the previous question. It may be voted down; if so, I shall have discharged my duty. I now call the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. May I ask the Chair what will be the effect of the operation of the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It will be to arrest all debate except one hour, to which the gentleman from Massachusetts will be entitled.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Mr. Speaker, if this bill does not pass, what will become of the loyal men of Louisiana? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question.

The question being put on seconding the previous question, there were—ayes 66, noes 68.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. ELIOT called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELIOT and BOYER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 79, noes 70.

So the previous question was seconded.

The question was upon ordering the main question to be now put.

Mr. BINGHAM. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire of the Chair what would be the effect upon this bill should the House refuse to order the main question to be now put?

The SPEAKER. The effect would be to divest this bill of the operation of the previous question, the same as if the call for the previous question had not been seconded.

Mr. BINGHAM. And in that case would it not be in order to move to commit this bill to the joint Committee on Reconstruction?

The SPEAKER. That motion would then be in order.

Mr. PIKE. Yes; and it would then be in order to kill the bill.

Mr. SPALDING. And should the main question be ordered it would be in order to pass the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had indefinitely postponed House bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men;

A bill (H. R. No. 1136) to amend the act establishing a national asylum for disabled soldiers;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) for the relief of certain volunteer officers; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 272) fixing the pay of the clerks at the Springfield armory.

The message further informed the House that the Senate requested the return of Senate bill No. 527, to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes, which bill had been passed by the Senate and been sent to the House for its concurrence.

AMENDMENT OF POSTAL LAWS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 11, 1867.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate a bill (S. No. 527) to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes, passed by the Senate and sent to the House for its concurrence.

Attest:

J. W. FORNEY,

Secretary.

By W. J. McDONALD,
Chief Clerk.

By unanimous consent, the Clerk was ordered to return the bill.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN LOUISIANA—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill for the reestablishment of civil government in Louisiana.

The pending question was upon ordering the main question, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the House adjourn; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ECKLEY and Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire of the Chair what would be the condition of business to-morrow should the House agree to adjourn at this time?

The SPEAKER. Should the House adjourn now this bill will be the first business in order to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—yeas thirty-two; noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. More than one fifth have voted in the affirmative. The Chair will state, however, that he cannot put to the House the question upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Friday next. The Clerk will read the clause of the Constitution relating to this subject. The Clerk read as follows:

"Neither House during the session of Congress shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting."

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I modify my motion so as to make it Thursday next. I will merely remark that if the Speaker had come to the knowledge of that fact a little sooner it would have saved a great deal of trouble.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had knowledge of it, and stated it as soon as the time came for submitting the question to the House.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. A motion to adjourn, made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE,] is now pending. Upon that question the yeas and nays were called for and tellers have been ordered upon ordering the yeas and nays. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SPALDING, and the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. BAXTER, to act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—yeas thirty; noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ELIOT. I would inquire of the Chair what would be the effect of an adjournment now?

The SPEAKER. This bill will be the first business in order to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ELIOT. I believe the bill has already been ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will it be printed and laid upon our desks to-morrow morning by the time the House meets?

The SPEAKER. In all probability it will.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That was my object in moving to adjourn.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 30, nays 127, not voting 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Gloss, Brenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hise, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Kerr, Latham, Le Blond, Loftwich, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, and Andrew II. Ward—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brownell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, DeFrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hubburd, Hunter, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, Melndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—127.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Baldwin, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Brandegee, Bundy, Conkling, Culver, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jones, Kasson, Marshall, McCullough, Phelps, Pomeroy, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Winfield, and Wright—33.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MERCUR. I desire to state that the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. KASSON, is absent by leave of the House on business relating to the committee of which he is a member.

Mr. DEMING. I desire to say on behalf of my colleague, Mr. BRANDEGEE, that he is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. BERGEN, upon all questions relating to the subject of reconstruction. I desire also to say on behalf of the gentleman from New York, Mr. GRISWOLD, that he is called away by imperative business.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The question recurred upon ordering the main question to be now put.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to make a suggestion for the consideration of gentlemen on the other side of the House. We are not disposed on this side to delay unnecessarily; we only desire an opportunity to be heard upon this bill, and that it shall not be passed with indecent haste at least; we wish an opportunity of reading the bill.

Now, I would suggest to gentlemen on the other side that this bill be allowed to lie over till to-morrow morning, with universal consent; that it shall then take precedence of all other matters, and then come up for debate. Of course the bill will be printed by that time, and we can see the bill and the report upon which the bill is based. That will give us all an opportunity to read it. I believe that all of us upon this side are willing that this bill shall take precedence of the other bills that were made special orders, and that it be taken up then and receive the usual consideration. It is for the other side to say whether they will or will not agree to that proposition.

Mr. ELIOT. Before I reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] I desire to know whether the proposition is to have the bill acted on to-morrow?

Mr. LE BLOND. No, sir; my proposition is that the bill shall come up for debate in precedence of all other special orders; that can be done by unanimous consent. I do not propose that it shall be acted on to-morrow.

Mr. ELIOT. I suppose that action on the bill to-morrow will be under the control of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] to the House, and will then ask if there be any objection. The proposition is that this bill shall remain pending before the House; that the debate to-day shall progress upon the bill reported from the joint Committee on Reconstruction; but that to-morrow debate shall commence upon the bill reported from the select Committee on the New Orleans Riot. Is there any objection to that proposition?

Mr. WARD, of New York. I would inquire whether the debate upon this bill is to be unlimited?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. That matter will be under the control of the House.

Mr. WARD, of New York. They can filibuster to-morrow as well as now.

Mr. STEVENS. If I understand the proposition, it is that this bill shall come up for debate to-morrow. I would inquire if the previous question has not been seconded?

The SPEAKER. It has; but if this proposition is agreed to by unanimous consent the operation of the previous question will be dispensed with.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I must object to that part of the proposition.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope the gentleman will not object. It is very hard to ask gentlemen to vote upon this bill without any opportunity for discussion.

Mr. STEVENS. It is very hard to be incubating here for a week or two and then find everything added. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] shall be agreed to, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] shall signify to the Chair to-morrow or any other day that he desires to obtain the floor in order to move the previous question on this bill, the Chair according to usage will recognize the gentleman, he having reported the bill, as entitled to take the floor for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot agree to that.

The SPEAKER. Then the question recurs upon ordering the main question to be now put.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays cannot be ordered on the reconsideration of a motion which cannot be decided by yeas and nays.

Mr. ELIOT. If the seconding of the previous question be reconsidered will that have any effect in bringing about what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] proposes, and what I myself desire to have done?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to reconsider shall prevail, the bill will then be before the House for debate and action.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] will not press his motion to reconsider.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I must insist upon my motion.

The question was then taken upon laying on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded; and upon a division, there were—ayes 50, noes 58.

Mr. ALLISON called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ALLISON and FARNSWORTH were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 66.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

The question then recurred on reconsidering the vote by which the previous question had been seconded.

Mr. ALLISON called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SHELLBARGER and LE BLOND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 66.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs, "Shall the main question be now put?" on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ELIOT. Before the roll-call is proceeded with I desire to inquire whether I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND.] I am very desirous that the House should have an opportunity to discuss this subject, but—

Mr. ALLISON. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order pending the operation of the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the main question; and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 84, nays 59, not voting 47; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Broomall, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Deuing, Dixon, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnham, Ferry, Grinnell, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Hulburt, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellbarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Bingham, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Denison, Dodge, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbard, James H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, Kuykendall, Laffin, Latham, Le Blond, Lettwith, Marvin, McKee, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Plants, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Schenck, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Whitley, and Windom—59.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Deftrees, Delano, Briggs, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hart, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Ketcham, Marshall, Marston, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrill, Pomroy, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Williams, Winfield, and Wright—47.

So the main question was ordered.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. FINCK. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FINCK. Is it in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FINCK. I make that motion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire an opportunity to say one word before the roll is called.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. BROOMALL. Is it in order to call for the reading of the bill at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is. A motion to lay on the table having been made the bill is in a different stage.

Mr. BROOMALL. I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. Before the Clerk reads the bill I desire to announce that it is my purpose before the vote is taken to move an adjournment so that gentlemen may have an opportunity to read the bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Why cannot the gentleman move to adjourn now, leaving the bill in its present position?

The SPEAKER. A motion to adjourn would be in order, having priority of the motion to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. ELIOT. Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious that we cannot profitably continue our session to-day. It is very desirable that gentlemen shall have an opportunity to read the bill before they are called upon to vote on it. In order that this opportunity may be afforded, and that we may dispense with needless motions and roll-calls, I move that the House now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled House bill No. 183, concerning the fire department of Washington city; when the Speaker signed the same.

PROFESSOR AGASSIZ'S VISIT TO BRAZIL.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House asking "for any official correspondence which may have taken place in regard to the visit of Professor Agassiz to Brazil," a report from the Secretary of State; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL CONTRACT FINES, ETC.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House, in compliance with law, a report of the fines and deductions from the pay of contractors during the year ending June 30, 1866; which was laid upon the table, the law providing that such reports shall not be ordered to be printed.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with law, a statement of the Quartermaster General of all contracts made during the month of January, 1867, and those not previously sent in other reports; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House relative to the amount of bonds issued to the Central Pacific railroad and also the Union Pacific railroad companies, miles of road completed, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

LAWS OF ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House laws of the Territory of Arizona; which were referred to the Committee on the Territories.

AMENDMENTS ORDERED TO BE PRINTED.

Mr. BINGHAM, by unanimous consent, moved that an amendment which he proposed to offer to the pending bill, touching the establishment of military divisions in the southern States, be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the House also ordered to be printed an amendment which Mr. BLAINE proposed to offer to Mr. BINGHAM's amendment.

CONGRESSIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas a society has been formed by the members of the Thirty-Ninth Congress called the "Congressional Temperance Society;" and whereas it is contemplated by said society to hold a public meeting on Sunday, the 17th instant, at seven and a half o'clock p. m.: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Hall of the House of Representatives be granted for that purpose, to enable members of the House to take part in the ceremonies on that occasion.

Mr. LE BLOND. We make no objection, for it may be such temperance society is needed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The restaurant ought to be closed on that occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I agree to that.

The SPEAKER. There is no liquor sold in the restaurant.

Mr. LAFLIN asked leave to submit some reports from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, objected. The question then recurred on Mr. ELIOT's motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72; noes 38.

Mr. WARD, of New York, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at three o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of 11 soldiers and 92 citizens of Lee and Scott counties, Virginia, and War Gap, Tennessee, and vicinity, asking protection against the judicial power of that part of Virginia which they declare is used against Union men and Union soldiers.

By Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio: The petition and accompanying papers of Daniel Woodhouse, president of the United States, European, and West Virginia Land and Mining Company, concerning his contract with and obligation of the republic of Mexico and for the enforcement of the same.

By Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas: A memorial from the Legislature of the State of Kansas, asking Congress to grant increased pensions to soldiers of the war of 1862.

Also, a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Kansas, praying Congress to grant for the use and benefit of the "freedmen's university, sections of land in the State of Kansas, from any public lands not otherwise disposed of."

Also, a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Kansas, asking that the benefit of the homestead law be extended to the settlers on lands recently purchased of the Osage Indians.

Also, a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 489, entitled "A bill to provide for giving the right of preemption to settlers on the Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas, and for other purposes."

Also, a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Kansas, praying that the same aid be granted to the Union Pacific railway, southern branch, as is now granted by law to the Union Pacific railway.

Also, a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Kansas, praying Congress to pass the bill to refund certain bounties withheld either by negligence or fraud from veteran volunteers of company G, eighth regiment, first Army corps.

Also, a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Kansas, praying Congress to make an appropriation to enable the Department of Agriculture to make a scientific investigation of the nature, causes, and results of the cattle disorder, known as the Spanish fever or Texas cattle disease.

By Mr. DONNELLY: The petition of William A. Jackson, and 52 others, citizens of Hennepin county, Minnesota, asking for the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, President of the United States and his removal from office.

By Mr. ECKLEY: The petition of 35 citizens of Smithfield, Jefferson county, Ohio, against the curtailment of the currency, and against requiring national banks to redeem their circulation in the city of New York.

By Mr. ELDRIDGE: The petition of citizens of Wisconsin, Illinois, and Michigan, for a survey and estimate of the cost of making a suitable harbor at the mouth of Menomonee river.

By Mr. FERRY: The petition of Maleom Campbell, Albert Nuart, Joseph Heald, M. Fannan, Duane Thompson, E. C. Dicey, and 113 others, citizens of White River, Michigan, protesting against the curtailment of national currency and the redemption of notes in New York.

By Mr. FINCK: The petition of Wiley H. Beckett, and others, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Columbus, Ohio, to Beckett's Store, in Pickaway county, in the same State.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The memorial of Jesse Baldwin, of Youngstown, Ohio, praying for the repeal of the law which makes paper money a legal tender in payment of debts.

By Mr. HARDING, of Illinois: The petition for mail route from Rock Island to Sterling, Illinois.

By Mr. KETCHAM: The petition of R. C. Jones, for additional pay.

By Mr. LONGYEAR: The memorial of J. Owen, and others, citizens of Detroit, Michigan, asking that some proper expression on the part of Congress be made in behalf of Captain McKay, and his comrades of the steamboat City of Cleveland, for meritorious services in saving the lives of the crew of revenue steam-tug Winslow, on the night of October 7, 1864; and for compensation for losses incurred in such service.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of William C. Howe, and others, asking an equalization of tax on incomes.

By Mr. MORRIS: Concurrent resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of New York requesting the Senators and Representatives of said State to sustain the passage of such a law as shall aid in the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific railway.

By Mr. RAYMOND: Three several memorials from John C. Green, William H. Aspinwall, Oliver Charlick, Thurlow Weed, Phelps, Dodge & Co., John J. Cisco, and others, citizens of New York, remonstrating against any action looking toward the impeachment of the President, and praying for the adoption of measures that will promote the peace and prosperity of the Union.

By Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts: The memorial and resolves of the Boston Board of Trade, against any change in the laws regulating the currency and national banks.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The memorial of Vice Admiral Curtiss, praying that Congress will afford relief to the widow and children of D. C. Heap, late paymaster United States Army.

By Mr. SCOTFIELD: The petition of citizens of Farmington, Pennsylvania, praying for the impeachment of the President.

Also, the petition of citizens of Farmington, Pennsylvania, in favor of universal suffrage.

By Mr. WELKER: The petition of Daniel E. Foote, and 125 others, citizens of La Fayette township, Medina county, Ohio, asking for the passage of the tariff bill of last session of Congress.

Also, the petition of O. S. Bart, and 120 others, citizens of Granger township, in Medina county, Ohio, on the same subject.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 11, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

The reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with, by unanimous consent, at the suggestion of Mr. CHANDLER.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate an attested copy of the resolutions of the Legislature of Ohio ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposing an additional article to be known as article fourteen; which were ordered to lie upon the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. POLAND presented the petition of A. P. Childs and others, temporary clerks in the Quartermaster General's office, praying that their pay be increased to equal that of first-class clerks; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Vermont, remonstrating against the passage of any act authorizing the curtailment of the national currency, or having in view the return within a limited time to specie payments, and against compelling all national banks to redeem their notes in New York, or prohibiting them from paying or receiving interest on bank balances; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILLEY presented the memorial of Joseph Nock, praying for the restoration of the sixth section of the act entitled "An act in addition to an act to promote the progress of the useful arts, and to repeal acts and parts of acts heretofore made for that purpose," approved August 29, 1842, which requires all patentees and assignees of patents to stamp, engrave, or cause to be stamped or engraved on each article vended or offered for sale the date of the patent repealed by act of March 2, 1861; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SHERMAN presented resolutions of the Legislature of Ohio, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed to the several States by a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress passed on the 18th day of June, 1866, to be denominated article fourteen of amendments to the Constitution of the United States; which were ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the petition of Henry Horne, praying for compensation for money advanced for the purchase of supplies for the use of the Union prisoners at Andersonville, Georgia; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CATTELL presented the memorial of Joshua H. Butterworth, praying for an extension for seven years of his patent for a bank and safe lock; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

He also presented a petition, numerously signed by operatives and employés in the manufacturing establishments of Philadelphia, praying for a removal of the five per cent. tax on goods and a drawback of three cents per pound on cotton to be refunded to the manufacturer, and a tax on all articles of luxury not produced in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POMEROY presented seven petitions of citizens of Kansas, praying for the establishment of a daily mail route from Troy to Leavenworth, in that State, via Doniphan and Atchison; which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. FOWLER presented the petition of Robert Ford, praying for compensation for services as a teamster in the United States Army, and for services to Union prisoners in Libby prison; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) for the relief of certain officers of volunteers, to submit an adverse report. The resolution provides that officers who were ordered to report to New York for the purpose of being mustered as officers into the brigade of General Ullman shall receive certain pay. The committee report against the resolution on the ground that at the last session a general law was passed that would cover the case. I move that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the same committee to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1136) to amend the act establishing the National Asylum for Disabled Volunteers. This bill provides that any director, a member of the board, who shall be elected to Congress may serve out his term. The committee thought it best not to change the general law to meet a special case. They directed me, therefore, to report adversely to this bill. I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolution, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 942) donating a portion of the Fort Leavenworth military reservation for the exclusive use of a public road;

A bill (H. R. No. 1003) for the relief of the members of the twenty-first New York cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1141) to authorize the purchase of certain lots of ground adjoining the Allegheny arsenal, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 1137) for the relief of Oliver Lumphrey; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) for the purchase of David's Island, New York harbor.

He also from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William T. Connell, John Keplinger, and Isaac Conrad, private soldiers who were enlisted into Captain Shail's company of seventh West Virginia volunteers, August 17, 1861, and were captured prior to muster and held as prisoners till January 9, 1863, praying to be allowed the pay of privates from August 17, 1861 until January 9, 1863, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 167) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the seventh regiment of West Virginia volunteers; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. WILLEY. A few days since the bill (S. No. 491) amendatory of the several acts respecting copyrights, which came back from the House of Representatives with a slight amendment, was, inadvertently I suppose, referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office. The bill originally came from the joint Committee on the Library. I am now directed by the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and I move its reference to the joint Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to report adversely upon the joint resolution (H. R. No. 272) fixing the pay of the clerks at the Springfield armory, and I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am also directed by the same committee to report adversely upon the bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men. I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) for the relief of Captain A. B. Dyer, submitted an adverse report, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOGG, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of O. E. Dreutzer, praying for compensation for services rendered as consul at Bergen, in Norway, reported a bill (S. No. 586) for the relief of Orlaf E. Dreutzer, late consul of the United States to the Kingdom of Norway; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 150) extending the time for the completion of improvement of Fox and Wisconsin rivers, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CRESWELL, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the petition of Harriet G. Peale, Rosalba P. Underwood, and John H. Griscom, executors of the estate of the late Rembrandt Peale, artist, praying for an appropriation for the purchase of Peale's painting, now in the rotunda, entitled Washington before Yorktown, submitted an adverse report, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FOWLER asked, and by general consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 168) for the relief of Robert Ford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 587) to incorporate the Atlantic and Island Wrecking Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No.

588) for the relief of William H. Webb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 589) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Theological Institute," and to define and extend the powers of the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 590) granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims in a certain cause involving the right to the use of a patent; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following resolution; and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to consider the expediency of an amendment to the civil rights act extending its operations so that where the residents of any State, being citizens of the United States, are debarred from any of the privileges of citizens of such State, then all cases arising out of any offense against any such resident, and also all cases between any such resident on the one part, and any citizen of such State not debarred from any of the privileges thereof on the other part also shall be heard and determined by the courts of the United States, and not by the courts of the State.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNORS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by me on Saturday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report to the Senate whether Andrew Johnson, Vice President of the United States, and acting President, had any authority of law or under the Constitution to appoint provisional governors for the States lately in rebellion against the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I look upon this resolution as very important at this time. If the President of the United States had no authority of law or under the Constitution to appoint provisional governors for the States lately in rebellion, then all action under those governors falls. There have been no governments established over those States if their inception itself was illegal. I desire that the Committee on the Judiciary should make an early report upon this point. It is due to the President and it is due to the country that it shall be settled, and settled at an early day. I am not a lawyer, and am hardly competent to decide for myself whether there was any such authority.

We know, sir, that when Andrew Johnson, through the bullet of J. Wilkes Booth, became President of the United States, the rebels had laid down their arms; that all the rebel States were held by military power; and under this military power Andrew Johnson had a right to appoint military governors, not only for every one of the States lately in rebellion, but for every city, had he seen fit so to do. The laws of war are as well understood as written constitutions or the laws of peace. They regulate and govern and control all civilized nations. When Mr. Lincoln desired to create a government in Tennessee he appointed Andrew Johnson a brigadier general in the Army of the United States, and as Brigadier General Andrew Johnson, of the Army of the United States, he appointed him military governor of the State of Tennessee. That he had a right to do as Commander-in-Chief of the Army.

But, sir, it is another and a different thing to appoint a provisional governor. I believe that is an office unknown to the Constitution or to the laws of our Government, an office which, in my judgment, he had no authority to create. Those governors were not sent before us for confirmation; nor would it have made them any more governors if we had confirmed them, because the Senate and Andrew Johnson together could not have created an office. If there was no authority of law for it, then it required the House of Representatives and the Senate and Andrew Johnson united, having first enacted a law creating the office, before the officer could be thus appointed.

Under the laws of war, as I have said, he had a right to hold these States by military power and force. Those laws of war have been changed from age to age. They are arbitrary. They are simply the will of the conqueror. Under the laws of war in ancient times prisoners of war were remorselessly put to death, but those laws from age to age became modified. But, sir, as late as the year 1866, and as late as the month of July in the year 1866, the laws of war empowered the conqueror to levy all the expenses of the war upon the conquered. When Prussia conquered Austria she not only took from Austria what Provinces she desired, but she actually compelled Austria to pay thirty million florins for the expenses of the war. When Prussia annexed Frankfort-on-the-Main she made Frankfort pay for the expense of conquering her, in edim. Under the laws of war the conquered must submit to the will of the conqueror; and the United States had a perfect right to make these rebels pay the whole expense incurred by this Government in putting down the rebellion under the laws of war.

If Andrew Johnson, in violation of law, in violation of the Constitution, and without authority under the laws of war, has assumed willfully a power that did not belong to him but which belonged to Congress, then I do not hesitate to say—and I say it with all deliberation—that for that one act, and that alone, Andrew Johnson should be impeached. I say it as one of his judges. If he is guilty—I say it understanding the force of what I say—for this one act of usurpation, if it was without authority of law, or under the Constitution, or under the laws of war; then, sir, he should be impeached. A judge on the bench has a right to say, "If that man is guilty of murder he ought to be hanged; if the other man is guilty of horse stealing he should be sent to the State's prison." A judge has a right to say that; and I have a right to say that if Andrew Johnson is guilty of this high usurpation of which he has been charged, he ought to be impeached for that one act, and that alone.

But, Mr. President, there are other high allegations made against Andrew Johnson, acting President of the United States. It is alleged—I know not whether the allegation be true or false, but it is alleged—that Andrew Johnson delivered over property seized from rebels, the railroad rolling-stock throughout the South, without authority of law, to those rebel railroad organizations. It is alleged again that the railroad rolling-stock that was sent from the North to the South, amounting to many million dollars, was, without authority of law and in violation of law, and by the express orders of Andrew Johnson, sold on a credit to those rebel railroad organizations. If this allegation be true, then I say Andrew Johnson had as much right to put his hand into the Treasury of the United States and take out so many million dollars as he had to sell that rolling-stock to those rebel railroads on a credit, and for that act of usurpation, I say, if he be guilty, he should be impeached and removed.

Sir, this is a Government of law, and the President is the mere Executive to carry out the law. It is his sworn duty to obey and execute the law, and if he fails in that duty he is amenable to the law the same as any other individual in the United States.

It is alleged again, I know not whether the allegation be true or false, but it is alleged that Andrew Johnson, without authority of law, and in violation of law ordered the collection of the direct tax levied upon the rebel States to be stopped. I know not whether this be true or false. The allegation is made, and if it be true that in violation of law and against law he ordered this thing done, then for that act Andrew Johnson should be impeached and removed.

It is likewise alleged that Andrew Johnson has acted in direct violation of the provision of the Constitution which says:

"[To [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint, ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law."

The Constitution has appointed his advisers. The Senate of the United States must advise as well as consent. The Constitution so declares. It is alleged that in direct violation of this clause of the Constitution he not only has not advised with the Senate, but he has appointed men deliberately who have been rejected by the Senate. I know it will be claimed that this has been done before, and that for it he has a precedent. It is true that in two or three instances General Jackson did reappoint men who had once been rejected by the Senate, and I do not hesitate to say that for that act of usurpation General Jackson should have been impeached by the Congress of the United States.

But, sir, I will pass that over and come to another allegation that is yet more startling. It is alleged—I know not whether it be true or false—but it is alleged that Andrew Johnson made appointments during the recess of the Senate by removing the incumbents, and during the late long session of Congress did not send their names to the Senate at all, but on the adjournment of the Senate, without consulting the Senate, and in direct violation of the Constitution and of his oath of office, reappointed those men, never having sent their names to the Senate at all. I know not whether that allegation be true or false; but if it be true I say Andrew Johnson should be impeached for that one act and that alone. Sir, if the Congress of the United States permit such a violation of the Constitution as that to go unpunished the Congress of the United States should never meet again. The English Parliament for hundreds of years has watched with zealous and jealous care all encroachment of the kingly power upon the Constitution of England. Had any British minister been guilty of any one of the acts which are alleged to have been committed by Andrew Johnson he would have been impeached for any one of them.

Mr. President, much has been said both in this body and before the people of the country about the plan of the President. I should like to ask any member of this body what right the President has to have a plan outside of the laws of Congress. The President has a right to advise Congress what plan it shall adopt; so has every individual in the United States the same right. If Congress sees fit to adopt the plan of the President, well and good; it becomes the plan of the nation; and if Congress sees fit to adopt the plan of John Jones, who by petition advises Congress to adopt it, then John Jones's plan becomes the plan of the Government. But, sir, if Congress declines to accept the plan of John Jones or of Andrew Johnson, (it is perfectly immaterial which,) then the plan falls to the ground; and John Jones has the same right to proclaim to the nation that his plan is to be carried out as Andrew Johnson has that his plan is to be carried out: they have been both rejected by the law-making power. Sir, I have heard enough of this presidential plan. What right has Andrew Johnson to a plan that has been rejected by Congress? He has no more right than my horse. The plan has been rejected; it is ended, and I want to hear no more of the President's plan.

Let the President of the United States obey the laws. If he do not obey the laws let him do it at his peril.

But, sir, there is a kind of timidity and dread that we, in executing our constitutional powers, shall bring some dreadful calamity upon this great nation. Mr. President, this nation has come victorious out of the most terrible rebellion that the world has ever seen. It has fought Jeff. Davis for four years, sustained by the inhabitants of the rebel States; it has conquered the rebellion; and now, sir, what fearful calamity could be brought upon this nation by our exercising our constitutional rights? Mr. President, the removal by impeachment of a man who has violated the Constitution and who ought to be removed—I care not whether he be President of the United States, or occupies the chair which you so ably fill, or what position he occupies—would produce about the same amount of excitement in the country that the removal of the custom-house officer in the city of New York would occasion, and not any more.

This people has decreed, and that decree has been registered on high, that this nation shall stand; and no man, and no set and no combination of men, I care not whether it be headed by Jefferson Davis or Andrew Johnson or any other living man, can overthrow it. It has withstood every assault, and it will stand against every assault that will ever be made upon it. I hope, Mr. President, that the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. DIXON. Is the resolution before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet.

Mr. DIXON. When it shall be before the Senate I desire to propose an amendment to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take the vote as soon as debate ceases upon the question whether the resolution shall be taken up.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Michigan has said with truth that it is important to know whether the President of the United States exceeded his authority in appointing provisional governors. So far I agree with him. Perhaps I should not agree with him as to the propriety of a Senator rising here in his place and calling on the House of Representatives to impeach the President; but in not agreeing with him perhaps I may be wrong. The Senator of course knows what it is proper for him to say; but it struck me while I was listening to the remarks of the Senator that he was not adding very much to the credit for impartiality as a judge which he will desire to have if an impeachment ever comes before this body, and he shall sit here with his ermine on as one of the judges to try the case. It strikes me that what he has said will not add much to that credit for impartiality which the Senator already has. But, sir, whether his remarks are proper at this time is not for me to decide: that is a question for himself.

The Senator says that it is very desirable to know whether President Johnson had a right to appoint provisional governors. I agree that it is important, more especially if that is to be the basis of an impeachment, as I take it for granted it is from the remarks which have fallen from the Senator from Michigan. It is also important to know what have been the precedents on this subject; it is important to know what other Presidents have done under like circumstances; and therefore I shall ask the Senator to consent, and if he does not consent I shall ask the Senate to vote, to insert in the resolution an amendment to this effect, that the committee be instructed to inquire whether Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, and Andrew Johnson who have both performed these acts had authority to do them. I shall propose when the resolution is before the Senate something in these words, to insert before the words "Andrew Johnson" the words "Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States," and then to continue,

"and Andrew Johnson, acting President," according to the Senator's expression, so as to inquire whether they had this authority. I presume there will be no objection to this amendment, more especially as the Senator is mistaken in saying that President Lincoln only appointed Andrew Johnson military governor of Tennessee and made him a brigadier general. The gentleman is mistaken in point of fact in regard to that. Andrew Johnson was appointed military governor expressly without reference to his commission.

But aside from that, take the case of Edward Stanly. Edward Stanly was not a brigadier general of the United States when he was appointed provisional governor of North Carolina. I presume the Senate will consent to this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is not yet before the Senate; the question is on the motion to take it up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. I offer the following amendment to the resolution: in line four of the resolution strike out the word "Vice," and in lines five and six strike out the words "and acting President;" so as to read "whether Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, at any time," &c.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am informed that as the resolution was originally drawn it gives the true title by which he should be addressed, and I believe it to be so; still it is perfectly immaterial.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that, as the Constitution makes the Vice President President to all intents and purposes, we shall not in any formal proceedings adopt any form of language which shall detract from the office; and I desire this to be done without any reference to the subject-matter of the resolution at all. I hope it will not enter into the argument.

Mr. HOWARD. I like the form of my colleague better than that suggested by the honorable Senator from California. It is merely a question of form and not, as I think, a question of substance. The Constitution does not declare that on the death of the President of the United States the person elected Vice President becomes President.

Mr. CONNESS. I am aware of that.

Mr. HOWARD. That is not the title which is given; the Constitution provides that—

"In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve upon the Vice President."

This contemplates a case in which the President of the United States proper may be still in life although unable to discharge the duties of the office. In that case it seems to me that we should hardly call the locum tenens of the office, which would be the position occupied by the Vice President, the President of the United States. I therefore prefer the form contained in my colleague's resolution. There is in it certainly nothing disrespectful to the gentleman who now occupies and performs the presidential functions. If we are to consult perfect accuracy I think the form of my colleague is to be preferred.

Mr. CONNESS. I apprehend that if the history of the entire proceedings of the Senate shall be examined, in all the resolutions that have been offered calling upon the President of the United States for information in every respect whatever, it will not be found that he has been addressed or alluded to officially in any other form by the Senate than as President of the United States. I do not think there is a citizen in the Republic that proposes in any manner to detract from the great dignity of that great office. To adopt the form of the resolution which the honorable Senator from Michigan says he prefers would be to change the practice of the Senate. I confidently appeal to the universal practice of the Senate for the propriety of the change that I propose to make.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I agree entirely with the Senator from California, as to the propriety of his motion to substitute the term "President." There is no question I believe on that point; it has been held always that the Vice President in such a case became President of the United States. The duties of the office devolve on him, and the office devolves on him, and I see no necessity for varying from the ordinary course. But I did not rise to speak to that question. I have no objection personally to this resolution passing if the Senator from Michigan chooses to offer it and the Senate choose to pass it. What I have to say is that if I were a member of the Judiciary Committee to which the resolution is proposed to be referred, if it should be so referred in the present state of things, I would not act upon the matter; I would not investigate it; I would not report upon it individually, for the simple reason that in the present state of things when an investigation is going on in the House of Representatives looking to a possible impeachment of the President, and when this matter is under consideration in the House, I do not think that as one Senator I would consent to investigate or form or express an opinion upon anything that might by possibility be included in any charges made by the House of Representatives. Since this matter has been discussed in the public press and by individuals I have had but one rule, and that is not only not to express an opinion upon any subject which has been discussed with reference to the President; but further than that, to be careful not to form any opinion or to make any investigation whatever of any description which might tend to influence my mind, should by possibility such an event ever take place. I think, therefore, that it must be highly disagreeable, to say the least, for any Senator, having in view the fact that possibly he may be called upon to act as a judge upon this very question, to investigate it in advance and express an opinion upon it which might bind him and which might tend to influence his own mind when he came to set here in an entirely different capacity.

I have made these remarks simply to express to the Senate my notion that in the present condition of affairs it becomes us, every member of the Senate particularly, to be extremely cautious not only with reference to what we say, but with reference to allowing our minds to be influenced in any degree in advance by what possibly we may have to consider in a judicial capacity. I regret, therefore, that this resolution has been offered, although as I am not called upon to act on it, but the members of another committee are, it is not a matter for me particularly to interfere with. I regard it as something rather between them and the honorable Senator and the Senate to decide according to their judgment.

Mr. POMEROY. I have supposed every Senator has uniformly avoided expressing any opinion in regard to the question of impeachment. I have been asked a great many times, as I suppose other Senators have been, what is to be done on that subject. It is a matter of excitement in public assemblies where we have been. I have always declined saying anything in regard to it, because I have supposed that it was highly improper for a person who was to sit in judgment upon a case of that kind either to form or to express an opinion. That is the reason why I for one cannot give my consent even to the adoption of a resolution on this subject. I have supposed from what I learned in the papers that the matter would be presented to the Senate, and I thought that then would be time for us to consider it. But to consider it in advance of its being presented in a constitutional manner I think highly improper. I shall be ready, of course, as every Senator is, to consider the question when it is properly presented; but let it be presented under the form of the Constitution by the House of Representatives, and let us not incapacitate ourselves for a fair judgment by prejudging it now.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to—ayes twenty-eight; noes not counted.

POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 903, being the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now, I am willing to yield to my friend from New York, who has a motion to make.

Mr. MORGAN. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I move now to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (S. No. 527) to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes, which was passed on Saturday evening. I desire to have the motion entered for future consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. CONNESS. It would be very much better if the honorable Senator would have the motion considered now, because the effect of entering it will be to keep the bill back, and it should go to the House of Representatives at once if it is not to be reconsidered.

Mr. MORGAN. I am entirely willing to have the question taken now, and I will give my reasons for making the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the bill has been sent to the House of Representatives, and it will require that a message be sent to the House requesting the return of the bill before action can be taken on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. MORGAN. I move, then, that a message be sent to the House asking for the return of the bill.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to hear a statement of the reasons of the Senator from New York for this course.

Mr. MORGAN. The reasons for the reconsideration of this bill were stated on Saturday evening. I stated then that it was passed in a very thin Senate, with far less than a quorum present, and at a time, too, when after the executive session Senators were not expected to be present. It is deemed an important bill, changing salaries in many respects, and interfering with another bill which we are to consider to-night in relation to the compensation of clerks in the various Departments. As there was but a small number of Senators present when the bill was passed, eight or ten or twelve at the outside, I think the bill should be reconsidered and more fully examined than it has been.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senate will not agree to reconsider this bill. It disposes of a matter that we cannot well avoid taking care of. The Post Office Department have urged the measure upon us, and it has been well and thoroughly considered by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, and there is nothing in the bill which would justify this action on the part of the Senate.

Sir, the Post Office Department has grown with the growth of the country till its annual revenues now amount to between fourteen and fifteen million dollars. Is it strange that in the lapse of years modifications of its own organization should be required? This bill is intended to adapt the machinery of the Post Office Department to the present condition of things. One provision of the bill to which objection has been made provides for a superintendent of the dead-letter office. What is there extraordinary in that? In the dead-letter office there are now some eighty-five clerks. The Department ask that over that large number of clerks in that responsible bureau there shall be a superintending clerk, with a salary of $2,000. The bill does not increase the number of clerks there, but it allows the selection of the most responsible and capable man for the purpose of being put in charge of that particular bureau.

Then again, the bill provides for a superintendent of the foreign mail branch of the Post Office Department. The negotiation of postal treaties is effected by the Post Office Department without reference to the Senate. By an act of Congress of 1863, the executive department is allowed to enter into postal negotiations with foreign States. That has got to be a highly responsible and important branch of the business of the Post Office Department, and the Postmaster General asks that that bureau shall be placed in charge of some one officer who is specially fitted for it. This bill creates the bureau, so to speak, of foreign postal service, and gives to the head of that bureau an adequate salary, a salary commensurate with the character and capacity of a man fitted to fill the place. Surely there is nothing extraordinary in this.

Then again, there are in the United States three blank agencies, one in the city of Washington, one in the city of New York, and one in the city of Buffalo. The business of these blank agencies is to distribute to the various post offices the blanks, the wrapping paper, and the twine they need. It is a very important branch of the service. The amount of matter distributed is large, and its money value is large. The Post Office Department here believe they can economize and make more efficient this branch of service by bringing these three agencies here to the center at Washington and combining the three into one. They have asked the privilege to do that. The expense will probably be about one thousand dollars more than is now paid to these three agents; but it is believed there will be a large saving by the greater economy that will be effected in the distribution of the blanks, twine, and so on.

These, sir, are the principal provisions of this bill, with which the Senator from New York finds so much fault. You would suppose there was some extraordinary and hidden trick in it; some great plot to destroy the Government or to increase its expenditures immensely. It contains the few simple provisions which I have narrated, and in addition to them a section conferring power on the Postmaster General to increase the compensation of letter-carriers in the city of New York. The maximum now allowed to this meritorious class, who perform a valuable service in all seasons, without regard to the inclemency of the weather, often occupying many hours of the day, is $900. This bill allows them to be paid $1,200, which the committee thought to be reasonable, and which the merchants of New York, neighbors of the honorable Senator, in great numbers have asked the Government to allow. Beyond these provisions which I have thus stated, there is nothing of consequence in the bill, according to my present recollection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, if I had any sort of doubt as to the propriety of reconsidering the vote passing this bill, that doubt would be entirely dissipated by the speech which the honorable Senator from Minnesota has just made. It seems that it is a long bill, containing many provisions increasing salaries, creating offices, and making provisions with reference to the punishment of certain offenses. All three of these things are involved in it. I looked over it as reported in the Globe this morning, and some parts of it I am inclined to approve, and I do not know but that on examination I shall approve it all; but I was perfectly surprised to see that the bill had passed without examination. I have thought it my duty, whenever I have offered a bill or have had charge of a bill, which made changes in the laws, especially in regard to salaries, to call the attention of the Senate specifically to it, in order that they might understand what was being done.

But how was this bill taken up? We went into executive session on Saturday, and everybody knows that when at that time of day we go into executive session for a special object, especially after a motion has been made to adjourn, it is understood that the business of the day is at an end. I was not present; I went away supposing that nothing further was to be done; but it seems that with some eight or ten Senators present, not a quorum, or anywhere near a quorum, this bill was taken up, discussed in all its provisions, and passed without a division being called. The practice is a dangerous one and ought at once to be stopped. I of course have no question and wish to make none in regard to my friend from Minnesota; he thought it was all right; he thinks so now; perhaps it is. But my objection is to taking up a bill of such importance at the time this was taken up, when Senators could not be expected to be present. If such a practice is permitted to grow up in the Senate we shall not know what is done here. I fully agree with the objection which was made at the time by the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] and if I had been present I certainly should have called for a division, even if I had been in favor of the bill, for the simple purpose of having a quorum of the Senate present when a bill of that sort was considered, and for the purpose of opposing the beginning of the practice of taking up a bill of importance under the circumstances under which this was taken up, with eight or ten Senators present, and at a time when it was understood that the Senate was not to do any business of consequence. I am opposed to such a practice, and for that reason, even if the bill is all right, I hope the Senate will send for it and reconsider it, and act upon it properly, when the Senate is in session and full.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not care whether the Senate send for this bill, reconsider it, and act upon it properly, as the honorable Senator from Maine would say, or not; but I cannot listen to the speech of that honorable Senator without making a few words of reply.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of this body is made up not quite as well as the committee headed by the honorable Senator. It would be difficult in a body of fifty Senators to find an equal number of Senators such as compose the committee he has the honor to be chairman, of equal wisdom, of equal influence in this body, and having equally the confidence of the country. But, sir, in making up the committee—I give the Senator my word, having had a little to do with it, an effort was made to make it a very respectable committee, a careful committee. But the honorable Senator will bear testimony with me that, notwithstanding the care in making up that committee, it is not composed of Senators that can get the ear of the Senate. When the honorable Senator brings in a bill here from his committee the Senate bows before him, and I the lowest of them all in obeisance; and any day that the Senator claims is the day of the Finance Committee, any hour that the Senator claims is the hour of the Finance Committee. Is it so, I ask the Senator in all candor, with the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads? Much business is committed to their care. They sat upon this bill long in consideration. It was deliberated on by a full committee. They considered every proposition in it, but they could not get an hour of time for its consideration by the Senate. That was found simply to be impossible. What with the bills which the honorable Senator so ably handles—and he well knows that I but say what I mean—getting and claiming as they do the time of the Senate, and the bills represented by the honorable chairmen of the Committees on Military Affairs, on the Judiciary, on the District of Columbia, and the bankrupt bill, and last, though not least, the Niagara ship-canal bill, a bill to improve the postal laws is not heard of; not an instant of time can be obtained by the chairman of the Post Office Committee to obtain action upon it. This day we understand was to be occupied by the honorable Senator who is at the head of the Finance Committee; to-night is mortgaged for the consideration of a particular bill, and to-morrow night is I understand for the consideration of special bills. When are the postal bills to be considered?

I say to the Senate—and I make this reply so that the Post Office Committee shall stand justified—that they did their best in considering the bill spoken of, and they would not have asked its passage at such a time as it was passed if they could have avoided it. If the bill is now referred in the House to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of that body it will never be heard of again this session, for that committee will not be again called upon for reports. There is no chance of passing it there but by taking it from the Speaker's table and putting it on its passage. And yet it contains provisions of importance to the postal service, and which, as I repeat again, have been most carefully and exactly considered.

But our careful Senators rise here and object lest the passage of this bill under the circumstances be a precedent. I admit that it would be a very bad precedent, and certainly there would be no Senators less disposed to establish such a precedent than the members of the Post Office Committee of this body; and I ask again in all candor what could we have done? When could we have the bill considered? I submit to the Senate that if they desire to drag this bill back, if they desire by their action while they repudiate it by their words, to cast an imputation on the committee composed of some of the same members who constitute the honorable Senator's committee, let them do so, and if legislation is delayed and hindered it will not be our fault.

I make this statement in defense of the Post Office Committee, and as a matter of justice to them that the Senate may understand the facts.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should be very sorry indeed if my friend from California or my friend from Minnesota should think that in what I said I meant to throw the slightest imputation either upon the Post Office Committee or upon them individually. I have no doubt that they acted in perfect good faith with a view to the public business, and from what I read in the bill as I glanced my eye over it carelessly I think I should approve of it from beginning to end generally.

Mr. CONNESS. Then why not leave it to us?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Because it cannot be left to a committee to pass a bill. That is the answer.

Mr. CONNESS. Does not the Senator know that we could not get an hour or half of an hour of the Senate?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must say that I do not know that.

Mr. CONNESS. Does not the Senator believe it if he does not know it?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No doubt it is difficult to get time now. But my object in making the remarks I did make was simply to present what I think if followed as a precedent would, as my friend admits, be a very bad practice.

Mr. CONNESS. I know that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well. Now with regard to this particular bill, I do not think that any harm would be done in passing it or leaving it stand passed. I have entire confidence in the honorable Senator from Minnesota and the committee of which he is chairman with regard to their intentions about this matter. I have no doubt that what was done was done with a single regard to the public business and the importance of pressing the bill through. I hope that statement on my part will satisfy them, but I did think, on looking over the bill and seeing the circumstances under which it was passed, that if suffered to be a precedent and the attention of the Senate not called to it we might be in very great danger of passing measures at a time when the Senate was not present as a body. That is the ground of my objection to the practice, and the Senators, for whom I have great respect and regard, will accept this explanation.

Mr. CONNESS. Now, Mr. President, since it cannot be made a precedent, since we do not ask it to be made a precedent, and would be against any such precedent, is legislation to be delayed by dragging the bill back here again?

Mr. MORRILL. I had Saturday assigned on a resolution somewhat solemnly, or at least intelligently, acted on by the Senate, for the consideration of District business, and I had the bad luck to proceed about an hour with that business when I found myself without a working force here, without Senators enough to enact a bill, so that I was obliged to take up for consideration only such measures as could go through by common consent, laying aside everything that was contested. After I had yielded to that necessity, and we had gone into executive session and come out again, finding our force not increased, the Post Office Committee undertook to try its hand at legislation. I did not object; I was quite willing. Through the suavity of the honorable chairman of that committee and the great persistency of the honorable Senator from California, who is also a member of that committee, they got this bill before the Senate. The Senator from New York seemed to have an objection to proceeding with the bill, and stated that it was irregular. That it was irregular nobody doubts. The honorable Senator from Kentucky was waiting to announce the death of a colleague of his in the House. A division of the Senate would break up the body and prevent that Senator from presenting his remarks to the Senate. In that condition of things I understand the honorable Senator from New York was persuaded not to interpose an objection which he felt that he had to the bill, and which he comes here and renews upon reflection to-day, feeling that he did not do his whole duty in not presenting an objection to the consideration of the bill under the circumstances.

Now, with the profoundest respect for the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I think they ought to yield to the wishes of the Senator from New York, who yielded his objection on that occasion, but who cannot think to-day that he can do his duty without moving this reconsideration.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When this bill was up on Saturday night I thought it seemed objectionable to consider it when the Senate was not quite full, and so expressed myself; but the bill was taken up, and it was very fully considered, and I thought it was right in its provisions. Because the bill has passed, and I think it is right, I shall vote against the reconsideration, although I think it is objectionable to take up measures when Senators are not expecting their consideration.

Mr. RAMSEY. If this were the first instance of a bill being passed through the ordinary forms required by the Constitution in a thin Senate I should not object to the action proposed; but it must be in the knowledge of every Senator that we are every day passing bills of infinitely more importance in pecuniary and other points of view than this with much less than a quorum present. Is it to be the rule of the Senate that hereafter, whenever a bill has passed in that condition, we shall send for it to the other House, or are we at once to break up and adjourn whenever there may not be a quorum in the Chamber? We know that upon important appropriation bills the Senator from Maine has kept us here voting appropriations of a momentous character with a very thin Senate, with much less than a quorum.

I think the Senate might as well go into the consideration of this bill now upon the motion to recall it from the other House; and I am satisfied that if Senators give it their consideration they will find that there is nothing objectionable in it. I made persistent efforts through two weeks, I think, to get the floor for the purpose of asking the Senate to take up this bill; and when, on Saturday evening there seemed to be no objection to proceeding to its consideration I moved to take it up, and the Senate agreed to my motion. If it is brought back now I may not be able to get it up during the rest of the session. It is a bill of the highest importance to the proper administration of the Post Office Department; and if Senators will consider it now upon this motion to recall it—and they may as well do it now as when the bill comes back—they can state their objections to each provision of the bill. Assuming that the Senate will pursue this course I will proceed to explain the bill—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the bill is not, in the possession of the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. But the motion to recall it is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is; but that motion does not open the merits of the bill. The bill is not in the possession of the Senate. The Chair, however, will not of its own motion interrupt debate.

Mr. RAMSEY. I had proposed to go on and explain the bill, but of course will not do so if it is out of order.

Mr. CONNESS. Upon the motion to recall the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I have never known a case where the Senate refused to reconsider the vote passing a bill when the fact was stated that it was passed by less than a quorum. To do so would be to pass a bill in plain violation of the Constitution, which declares a majority of a quorum necessary to the passage of any bill. It is true, the record does not show that a quorum was not present. Perhaps technically you may say there was a quorum present, because no evidence to the contrary appears upon the record; but it is stated in open Senate, by a Senator who was himself present, that this bill was passed by less than a quorum of the Senate. That statement is made here in open Senate; and if we refuse the motion to reconsider a bill passed under such circumstances, the result is to pass a bill in plain violation of the Constitution, because among ourselves there is no question as to the fact.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Ohio how it appears that less than a quorum was here when this bill was passed? It certainly does not appear so upon the record.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator makes the very point. It is true, we have no technical evidence of the fact, because the Journal does not show there was not a quorum present; but we have the statement of a Senator, which is unquestionable, and no one doubts it. Under these circumstances it is wise to refuse the motion to reconsider? I have never known it to be done. I do not think any case has ever occurred in which, when a statement of that kind has been made by a Senator and not contested, a reconsideration has been refused.

In regard to the bill itself, I am perfectly willing to consider it to-day or at any time whenever the Senator from Minnesota moves to take it up. There are one or two provisions in the bill of which I should want an explanation before I could vote for it, but I do not propose to state them now.

Mr. RAMSEY. I proposed to go into that now, but it was held to be out of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion to reconsider must prevail before you can do that. I cannot even state my objections to the bill till that motion prevails, but certainly that motion ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Minnesota that he had no design to make a point of order, or to arrest the Senator's remarks, but he simply suggested what the rule of the Senate was, leaving it to the Senator himself to act as he pleased, and to any other member to call to order.

Mr. DAVIS. I am, I believe, unconditionally in favor of this bill so far as I understood its provisions on Saturday evening. That is my opinion in relation to its merits; but nevertheless I feel constrained to vote in favor of the motion that the Senate request the return of the bill from the House of Representatives for the purpose of reconsideration. Every gentleman who was present knows that the bill was passed by less than a quorum. That fact was just as palpable as any fact could be to the observation and sense of the Senate. I believe the honorable Senator from New York was probably induced not to press his objections against the bill at that time because of my earnest wish to have the Senate take some notice of the death of a respected colleague of mine. If the objections had been pressed the Senate would have been divided, and the division would have shown unquestionably that there was not a quorum present. The consequence would have been that the Senate would have had to adjourn, and I should not have had an opportunity of performing a pleasant but sorrowful duty.

I agree with the principle suggested by the honorable Senator from Ohio. I believe it is a loose, a vicious, a reprehensible, and an unconstitutional practice for the Senate to pass bills when it is obvious to every Senator that a quorum is not present. I regard it as a deliberate violation of the Constitution, of evil and dangerous effect; and I should like to have the Senate adopt a positive and peremptory rule that whenever the Presiding Officer of the Senate shall have reason to doubt the presence of a quorum he shall verify the fact, and if on his verification he ascertains that there is not a quorum present it shall be his imperative duty then to suspend further action by the body until a quorum be obtained. Under this view of the case I will vote in favor of the proposition to ask the House to return the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I called for the yeas and nays on this motion, but I now withdraw that call. The honorable Senator from Maine suggests that he is willing that this bill shall be considered now, and as he has the Senate for one of his bills to-day, I, for one, as a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, accept the proposition. But, at the same time, I give notice that while I shall remain a member of this body no bill shall ever pass when I am here with less than a quorum present. So Senators must remain in their seats if they want legislation. I know it is every day the practice of the Senate, but I intend to apply the rule hereafter as closely as it is now applied to this committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I have reduced the motion which I submitted awhile ago to form in this shape:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 527) to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes, passed by the Senate and sent to the House for its concurrence.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think that we had better not decide on any rule that would be very inconvenient to the Senate. I think the Senator from California cannot carry out his proposition. It is known to every one of us that when the Senate is quite full oftentimes, so many gentlemen are called out by their constituents during the progress of business to the committee rooms or to the consultation rooms of the Senate as to leave apparently upon the floor a very thin Senate, and yet when it comes to a vote there is quite a large vote; and this view is an answer to the Senator from Kentucky. I dislike to see bills passed when there is not a full consideration of them. I am not prepared to say that if the yeas and nays had been called on this bill on Saturday evening a quorum of the Senate would not have been present, either in the Chamber or in the adjoining rooms. There was no test of the matter, but I observed the fact that the Senate was thin, and I supposed some Senators had gone home, and therefore I objected to the consideration of the bill. But as it was fully considered and passed I shall not now vote for its reconsideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to say one word in explanation of my course. I am usually in my seat when business is transacted in the Senate unless I am compelled to be absent. I supposed the Senate was about to adjourn when I left on Saturday, and I was not aware that any business was transacted afterward by the Senate until the subject was mentioned this morning. After the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia had given notice that he could not proceed with his business because there were so few Senators present, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] made a motion to adjourn, and everybody seemed to accede to it; but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] desired the motion to be temporarily suspended until he could move to recommit some bills, and as those motions were entertained by the consent of the Senator from Indiana, and as it had been announced by the Senator from Maine that no other business could be transacted, I withdrew from the Senate, supposing, of course, after those bills were recommitment, that the Senate would adopt the motion of the Senator from Indiana. I was therefore accidentally absent, and was quite surprised to find that after that time business of the nature of this bill had been transacted. I have nothing particular to say about the question before the Senate, but I shall vote for the reconsideration.

Mr. DAVIS. I have always been thoroughly satisfied of the utter impropriety of the Senate passing any measure or taking any legislative action when there is obviously and palpably a quorum not present; and I am gratified that the honorable Senator from California has declared his purpose to call for a division of the Senate when in his judgment a quorum is not present. We all know that in the night sessions and late in the evening the opportunity is seized upon by many members of the Senate, when there is not a quorum present, for the purpose of hastily passing measures. I think that is a custom that ought to be reformed. I think it is in flagrant discrepancy with the principle of the Constitution which requires every measure of the Senate to be passed by a quorum. The Senator from California or any other gentleman can avail himself of his right and of his duty to have a majority of the Senate present by calling for a division of the Senate at any time, and I shall always be prepared to second such a motion and give it any countenance I can.

Mr. CONNESS. The honorable Senator will remember that that rule which I said I would apply in future, so far as the demand should go—and I shall be as good as my word—will operate very much harder upon myself than upon the honorable Senator, for it will be found, I think, upon examining the legislation of an entire session of Congress, that while I vote for more than two thirds, perhaps three fourths, of the bills that are passed and become laws, the honorable Senator has hardly voted affirmatively for half a dozen. He is generally found in the negative; so that it will not trouble the Senator so much if bills shall not pass.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the honorable Senator has received rather ungraciously my avowal to support his principle of practice; but, however, I give it my support, without any regard whatever to the measures that I oppose or that I support, but simply to the propriety of the rule and the constitutionality of the principle.

Mr. CONNESS. I suppose that is just what the Senator meant.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I believe it is the right of any Senator to ask for a reconsideration of a bill, but if, because the bill has passed and gone to the other House, the Senate should deny the request to bring the bill back again, the right of a Senator to move a reconsideration would be practically gone. Therefore, without inquiring at all into the merits of the case, whenever a Senator, in order to make a motion to reconsider, asks to have a bill brought back from the House, I shall vote for it. I have always done so, and I shall do so in this instance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator ready for the question on the order now offered to the Senate?

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pension appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 903) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1868, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with two amendments.

The first amendment was in line nine, after the word "mothers" to insert the word "fathers, brothers;" so that the clause will read:

For pensions of widows, children, mothers, fathers, brothers, and sisters of soldiers, as provided for by acts of March 18, 1818; May 15, 1828; June 7, 1832; July 4, 1836; July 7, 1838; March 8, 1843; June 17, 1844; February 2, July 21, and July 29, 1848; February 3, 1853; June 3, 1858, and July, 1862, with its supplementary acts, and for compensation to pension agents and expenses of agencies, $23,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-three, after the word "mothers" to insert "fathers, brothers;" and in line twenty-six, after the word "sixty-two" to insert "with its supplementary acts;" so that the clause will read:

For Navy pensions to widows, children, mothers, fathers, brothers, and sisters, as provided for by acts of August 18, 1848, and July 14, 1862, with its supplementary acts, $280,000, to be paid from the Navy pension fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time; it was read the third time, and passed.

SIGNING OF TREASURY WARRANTS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 493.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 493) supplemental to an act to establish the Treasury Department, approved the 2d of September, 1789. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power, by an appointment under his hand and official seal, to delegate to one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury authority to sign in his stead all warrants for the payment of money into the public Treasury, and all warrants for the disbursement from the public Treasury of money certified by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to be due upon accounts duly audited and settled by them; and such warrants so signed are to be in all cases of the same validity as if they had been signed by the Secretary of the Treasury himself.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will give a very brief explanation of this bill. As the law now stands, every warrant upon the Treasury, either for transfers from one branch to another, or to take money out of the Treasury on warrants that have been drawn after the certificates of the accounting officers are properly made, must be signed by the Secretary of the Treasury himself. It is a very onerous and a very unnecessary duty to perform. Every day the Secretary of the Treasury has brought to him a pile of warrants, generally about a foot high, a very large number of them, and it takes him a very long time to sign them. He cannot read them; he cannot know what they are, and he does not know personally what they are unless his attention is called to them by something which is peculiar in the case itself, to which his attention is called by the accounting officer. The accounts have to go through the accounting officers. They all have to be certified as having been examined by the Comptrollers and the Auditors. Then they have to be examined to see that they are in due form by the Assistant Secretary, who puts his initials on them, and they go to the Secretary, who must devote a very considerable portion of time to writing his name just as fast as he can write it, without knowing what he is signing in point of fact. It is a very unnecessary labor, and it has been for some time thought to be expedient to devolve that duty of merely putting the name to the warrant upon some officer of the Department. It cannot be done either by the Secretary or Assistant Secretary except on proper certificate with regard to all of them that the accounts have been examined, and found correct, &c., and may be done by one as well as the other. It will be all under the Secretary's supervision. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to take up House bill No. 918.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 918) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This bill contains the ordinary appropriations for the Post Office Department, according to the estimates. It also contains, on page 3, a proviso with regard to the steamship service between San Francisco and China. I deem it my duty simply to call the attention of the Senate to that, in order that they may know what the provision is. They will recollect that we authorized steam service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, which was let out upon contract, with the provision that the steamers should touch at Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands. At the last session a bill was passed through this body to dispense with that part of the contract. It did not pass the House, however; and there is now the same provision in this bill, with the addition that a new steamship service, without any more pay, is to be established "between the port of Japan, used by the main line of steamships, and the port of Shanghai, in China, making continuous regular trips, connecting with the main line," &c. I will simply say that on an examination of this matter the Committee on Finance did not see fit to make any change, but reported the bill as it came to us, recommending its passage. They became satisfied that on the whole it might be as wise to do this, although I hope provision will be made some time or other for a steamship service between California and the Sandwich Islands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to make an amendment to the bill; I had nearly forgotten it. I hold it in my hand—a new section which I offer to the bill, not however by the authority of the Committee on Finance, for they have not had an opportunity to consider it since the papers were placed in my hands. I have thought, therefore, I would offer it on my own responsibility, as it is a matter which I think will address itself to the approbation of the Senate. I ask to have the amendment read, and then I will state what it is for.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to transfer two clerks from the third class to class four in the office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department; and a sum sufficient to pay the increased compensation required by said transfer for the remainder of the current and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senate will notice that it is a mere authority to transfer two clerks to the fourth class, involving an additional expenditure of $400. I send to the desk a letter from the Auditor stating the reasons for it, which may be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.
WASHINGTON, February 7, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following statement:

There are in this office nine separate and distinct divisions, the examining, registering, book-keeper's, collecting pay, money-order, solicitor's, foreign mail, and special mail, and but seven fourth-class clerkships.

The principal clerks in charge of these divisions, in consideration of the responsibilities attaching to these positions, ought to be fourth-class clerks, and are, with the exception of the collecting and special mail divisions.

The collecting division has in charge the collection of balances due from postmasters, late postmasters, and contractors, and there are engaged upon it twenty-six clerks. The superintendent of a business of such importance, and the supervision of the entire correspondence relating to it, in my opinion, entitles the principal clerk to the same compensation as that received by those of the other divisions. The same may be said of the special mail division, although a less number of clerks are employed.

John P. Wheeler and J. O. Wilson, the principal clerks of these two divisions, have been discharging these duties for several years as third-class clerks; and I think it due to their long, faithful, and efficient service that they should be placed upon an equality with the others.

I therefore earnestly recommend that the proper legislation may be had to increase the number of fourth-class clerkships in this office from seven to nine.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

H. J. ANDERSON, Auditor.

Hon. HUGH McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have also a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending that this authority be given, which I suppose it is unnecessary to read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the title of the bill was amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

ALCOHOL FOR SCIENTIFIC PURPOSES.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 163.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 163) to provide in certain cases for the removal of alcohol from bonded warehouses free from internal tax. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to grant permits to curators of incorporated or chartered scientific institutions to withdraw alcohol in specified quantities from bond without payment of the internal revenue tax on it, or on the spirits from which the alcohol has been distilled, for the sole and exclusive purpose of preserving specimens of anatomy, physiology, or of natural history belonging to the institutions; but the curators, on applying for such permit, are to file a bond for double the amount of the tax on the alcohol to be withdrawn, with two good and sufficient sureties, who are not to be officers of the institution making application; the bond and sureties to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and conditioned that the whole quantity of alcohol so withdrawn from bond shall be used for the purpose specified and for no other, and that the curators shall comply with such other requirements and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. And if any alcohol so obtained shall be used by any curator or other officer of the institution for any purpose other than that specified, then the curators, officers, or sureties are to pay the tax on the whole amount of alcohol withdrawn from bond, together with a like amount as a penalty in addition thereto.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will explain briefly the object of this resolution. There are some scientific institutions in the country which have procured at very great expense a great many specimens of natural history, and they need alcohol to preserve them. That under the direction of Professor Agassiz particularly is exceedingly valuable. I suppose his collection of fish is very much the best in the world. It is equal in extent both to the English and French collections put together. They cannot be preserved without alcohol, and the labor of collecting must be lost unless they have it. In order to purchase the alcohol they have to pay a dollar a gallon first, and if they are obliged to pay the additional two dollars it makes it so high that they have not funds enough connected with that school to enable them to procure the necessary amount. The matter is of great importance to the cause of science and of course to the country, and I trust there will be no objection to it. The bill is exceedingly well drawn and well guarded, and the committee I believe were unanimous in recommending its passage.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to ask the honorable chairman if he will accept an amendment to allow all other persons who purchase alcohol or spirits to purchase it at one dollar per gallon. I think it would be a good thing to amend this resolution so as to put it at that price. There would be a great deal less swindling in the country and we should get more revenue. I think this is an opportune period to make the change.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We can hardly put it here. I hope my friend will not offer an amendment of that character to this resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. WADE. I now move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 33.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 33) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The joint resolution, as originally introduced by Mr. WADE on the 20th of February, 1866, was in the following words:

Resolved, &c. (two thirds of both Houses concurring.) That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which, when ratified by three fourths of the said Legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE.—

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and shall not again be eligible to that office during the term of his natural life. In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, who shall not again be eligible to the office of President of the United States during the term of his natural life. Whenever Congress may, by law, provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, such officer shall not again be eligible to the office of President of the United States during the term of his natural life.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the joint resolution with an amendment to strike out all after the word "article" in the eighth line, and to insert the following:

No person elected President or Vice President who has once served as President shall afterward be eligible to either office.

Mr. WADE. I am in favor of the amendment, and hope it will be adopted.

Mr. DIXON. In the amendment which I propose to offer to this resolution I do not wish to be placed in a position antagonistic to the proposition itself. I do not propose to strike out and insert, but to add to it. As I understand, the committee report to strike out virtually all of the original proposition, and to insert:

No person elected President or Vice President who has once served as President shall afterward be eligible to either office.

I am prepared to vote for that, provided it can be so shaped as not to seem to be an attack upon an individual officer. I think the Senator ought to consent to insert the word "hereafter," so as to read "no person hereafter elected President or Vice President;" for I presume his object is to effect a general purpose, and not to aim at an individual. It seems to be aimed at an individual as it stands at present. I do not suppose that was the intention of the Senator. I know it was not, for he has disclaimed it.

Mr. WADE. If the gentleman will allow me, I have no objection whatever to that amendment. On the other hand, if those opposed to the party to which I belong want to take up the present incumbent I shall not object to it at all. I should rather be in favor of it.

Mr. DIXON. With regard to this proposition I have only to say it is wholly immaterial to me how it is worded except as I have stated. I do not know what are the designs and intentions of the present Chief Magistrate of the United States, but he has repeatedly said that he should not be a candidate for reelection, and I have no idea myself that he ever will be. Still it seems to me the Senate of the United States ought not to be called upon to vote for a proposition which shall seem to be aimed at any individual whatever. Therefore if, as I understand, the Senator from Ohio proposes to change it so that it shall refer only to future officers hereafter elected, I shall vote for it; and I shall vote for it much more willingly if he is willing to make another alteration, and that is with regard to the term of office. I do not know that anything is said in regard to the term of office in the amendment as the committee report it. I should much prefer, if the term of office is to be limited, that it shall be confined to the term of six years. I would vote for it more readily in that shape, but I believe, as it now stands, there is no proposition with regard to the term of office whatever; it leaves it as it is.

Now, sir, I have said that I do not propose what I shall offer as an amendment in opposition to the resolution. I propose a preamble and certain resolutions which will be very proper in connection with this as an entire scheme. I do not see that there is anything in what I propose to offer which is at all inconsistent with or inapplicable to the proposition of the Senator from Ohio. They will be germane. They both relate to the great interests of the country. I have already given notice of my intention to offer a preamble and additional resolutions, and I now ask leave to submit them to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. DIXON. I desire to say a very few words upon the preamble and resolutions that I propose. I suppose they will be read; but I have no desire to call for their reading if Senators do not wish it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator offer this as an amendment to the amendment reported by the committee? It can only be offered in that point of view at the present time, there being an amendment pending.

Mr. DIXON. It would be, I suppose, an amendment to the amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In that point of view it is in order.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest to my friend that he might allow the question on the amendment of the committee to be taken and then offer his as an addition. That will simplify the proceeding.

Mr. DIXON. Very well. After the vote is taken on the amendment of the committee I can proceed to say what I have to say on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It strikes me that the words "who has once served as President" should be struck out; so that it will read:

No person elected President or Vice President shall afterward be eligible to either office.

My reason is this: I do not think it quite fair to say that a man who has been elected Vice President, and by the death of the President or his removal he becomes President for a portion of the term, shall afterward be ineligible to the office of President. It is cutting him off from the privilege which every other citizen has of being, if the people so choose, elected President of the United States. It is not so high an honor, by any means, to elect a man Vice President as it is to elect him

President. Suppose we should pass a law, which I believe has been proposed in the other House, providing who shall be President in certain cases: first, the Vice President; then, if there is no Vice President, the President of the Senate.

Mr. CRESWELL. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the phraseology of the article as it will stand with the amendment made as he suggests? It seems to me that a person who is elected Vice President, then, would be incompetent ever afterward to be elected President. That, I apprehend, is not what he intends.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The language now includes the idea that if a person has been elected Vice President, and after being elected Vice President becomes, by the death of the President, President of the United States, he shall be ineligible afterward to the office of President.

Mr. CRESWELL. But if the amendment that the Senator from Maine suggests be made, will it not at least bear the interpretation naturally that a person who has once been elected Vice President cannot afterward be elected President?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, perhaps I did not suggest the proper amendment. I merely stated it with the view of having the proposition correct and to state the reasons.

That bill proposes I believe—I have seen some account of it in the papers—that if the President shall die or cease to be President, the Vice President shall take his place, and if there be no Vice President the President of the Senate, and if there be no President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, and going through several provisions. Now, sir, suppose that along toward the end of the term of office, the President should die, and the Vice President, or the President of the Senate, or the Speaker of the House should become for a few months or a year President of the United States, is it just to say that the citizen who by that contingency has served for a short time in the office of President shall not afterward be eligible to the office at all?

Mr. JOHNSON. And the best man, too.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Probably he might be the very best man, and the man the people would select.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the Senator is not aware of the operation of the language. I do not think it applies to such a case as that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly; "who has once served as President."

Mr. SUMNER. "Elected President or Vice President."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes; who has once served as President or Vice President. I am right.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If it is the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House who serves as President he is not made ineligible.

Mr. SUMNER. He must have been elected President or Vice President, and then have served as President.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is true. I thank the Senator for the correction. I am wrong about it. It would not apply to those officers as it stands at present worded. But take the Vice President; go as far as that; a man is elected Vice President. Suppose that being elected Vice President, toward the end of the term he becomes for a few months President, or acting President, as the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] called it this morning; is it right, is it just to him, because in that contingency he has served for a short period of time in the office of President that he should afterward be ineligible to that office. I think not. I think, therefore, for that reason alone, disconnected with any other, I should be opposed to the resolution as it at present stands. I do not think that it would be right to make that rule. I do not think it would be just to the individual. To be sure, the rule would not hold, so far as the justice or the injustice is concerned, to the same extent if the Vice President should be President during nearly the whole term of office, as in the present case.

But we are providing for all cases; and more than all that, every man in the Republic I think who is constitutionally eligible is entitled to be considered a candidate, and to be nominated and elected, if the people so choose, to the office of President; and the fact that he has served a short time in the office when he was not selected to it is not a sufficient reason to exclude him.

I will state in addition to that that I would not have anything in the resolution that would look as though we were making a change in the Constitution with a view to affect any particular individual. I know that is not the intention, and the Senator would not desire it. We are fixing this for a great many future years. I agree also with the Senator from Connecticut in his idea, that if we fix it for one term we had better fix it for six years instead of four. I hope, therefore, that this resolution will be amended in these particulars.

Mr. WADE. This resolution was drawn with no respect to any individual in the world. I brought this subject before the Senate because I think the Constitution as it stands is greatly defective in this particular. Without any disparagement to any gentleman who ever filled the presidential chair, I believe the Government has not been as well administered as it would have been had there been no hope of another term to the incumbent occupying the presidential chair; and when I say that I need not disparage anybody. Such temptations placed before men as to have a view to their continuance in so honorable and great a position as that of President of the United States will warp the judgment of almost any man, whether he knows it or not. I believe that every statesman who has had his eye fixed upon the administration of our Government for years past has not failed to discover that measures have sometimes been adopted looking quite as much to the continuance of the incumbent in office as to the public good. This idea has not escaped the greatest and best men that we ever had in the office. They have all seen, and many of them have felt, that there were temptations that ought to be removed. Those who have been most revered who have occupied that high position have been the first to warn us that those temptations should be removed.

As to the objection made by the Senator from Maine, I do not think the resolution ought to be amended to correspond with his view, because I think the reason of the limitation applies to the Vice President when he becomes President, and it touches nobody else. When a person becomes President by virtue of law, in case of the death or removal of the President and Vice President, he does not fall within the rule laid down in this proposition. It may be that a gentleman elected Vice President, on the death or removal of the President toward the end of the term, may fill the office for but a short period; but such occurrences will be very rare. They are possible, but not very probable. But when they do occur, the same temptations and the same evils which induce us to bring forward the amendment at all attach to those persons. A gentleman goes from the Vice Presidency into the presidential office. If there is anything in what I have already suggested, the temptation upon him applies with quite as much force as it does upon the man who was elected to the office first.

Our experience of Vice Presidents has not been well calculated to favor this objection. We have had some four of them, from Aaron Burr to the present, and I believe nobody would have regretted it if their office had been circumscribed to the period in which they did hold the office. The reason is that as quick as they reach this place they are within the reason of the rule. The Senator thinks it a great hardship that an individual who happens to fall into this office for a short period should be ineligible afterward. I do not think it is a very great hardship. No gentleman need submit to it unless he pleases.

This resolution was not framed by me with a view to individual interests or ambitions. I care but very little for the individual who shall happen to be the President or Vice President. This great office can honor but few. If there are emoluments attached to it they can reach but very few at best of all the American people; and it is hardly worth our while to frame the measure with a view to individual interests or ambitions. The effect that it will have upon the public is what we should look to. I certainly cannot commiserate very much the condition of the man who has had the good luck to be Vice President and then President for a short term, because he cannot be President for a full period. The Senator says that by this proposition we do such an individual great injustice. I do not think so. I think it better, inasmuch as he falls within the reasoning of these temptations, that he should be content with that portion of the presidential office that may fall to him, although I am not very particular about it. If it can be so framed as to escape that, I should not think it very objectionable; but still I do not think it wants amending for that reason.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let me ask the Senator what reason is there why a man who has once been elected Vice President should not afterward be eligible to that office? He has the least power and patronage of any officer connected with the Government. He is merely the Presiding Officer of the Senate. The power that he exercises and the patronage that he has does not compare with that exercised by a Senator from a State. To be sure, he has the chance, the possibility of becoming President. But suppose he does not, why should he not be eligible for a second time or for any length of time that the people choose to elect him to the office of Vice President of the United States?

Mr. STEWART. He is under this resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; the language is he shall not afterward be eligible to either office.

Mr. STEWART. If he has served as President he cannot be elected, but if he has served as Vice President he can be elected Vice President.

Mr. WADE. As I understand he can be elected Vice President as often as the people choose to elect him, unless he has served as President. The language is:

No person elected President or Vice President who has once served as President shall afterward be eligible to either office.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Suppose he has served as President for a short time; why should he not be eligible again to the Vice Presidency?

Mr. STEWART. He might come into the Presidency again.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He might for a short time; but what harm would come of it? The reasoning is not applicable. The Vice President has no sort of power to do wrong in the office of Vice President. He has no patronage. My own idea is that the proposition ought to be confined to the office of President. All the logic, all the reasoning of the Senator from Ohio applies to the office of President. It should not apply to persons who, from the fact of being Vice Presidents, have by any contingency become Presidents of the United States for a brief period.

Mr. WADE. The original draft of this resolution only contemplated the exclusion of persons who had once occupied the presidential office, and it intended to cut them off, whether they held that office for a short or long term. The committee, however, have obviated all that. Those that may, by law, occupy the office, as when it shall devolve on the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, or on the presiding judge of the Supreme Court, are not involved in the rule. They are not subject to the exclusion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why should it not, on the logic of the thing, apply to them precisely as it applies to a man elected Vice President, who happens a short time to be President, because they can exercise the same power while they are in the office? The same logic applies to both.

Mr. WADE. I do not know but what it does. I will say I do not feel any very great interest on that point. I am willing, however, to take the amendment as it came from the committee, because, as I have already endeavored to explain, I do not think it will be a great hardship to make a person who, being Vice President has come into the Presidency, ineligible afterward to the office.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator from Ohio will give way for a moment I will state a reason for that. As regards those who may succeed to the Presidency by virtue of law, the same law may limit their term; and you can fix it so that they shall occupy it but temporarily; whereas the person who becomes President by virtue of election as Vice President holds the office during the residue of the term; he is beyond the control of the law-making power. You can regulate those who are put in by law as you please. That does not require a constitutional provision.

Now, one word further. If it be an evil to have a President eligible for a second term, it is equally so to have a Vice-President eligible. The object is to prevent a person in power from using the office while in it to secure a reelection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He has no power as Vice President.

Mr. STEWART. That is very true, but if he becomes President he has it for a fixed term; you cannot control it by law. The same reason applies equally, I think, to make him ineligible that applies to a man originally elected President, for if he becomes President his attention will be called to securing a reelection rather than to the proper administration of the affairs of the Government. I believe the same reason applies to the Vice President as to the President, and the reason in each case is because they have a fixed term. The committee left out those who come into the presidential office by force of law, because they have no fixed term; they have no term but what Congress can control. They are simply temporary. The committee thought it would not be worth while to make them ineligible.

Mr. WADE. I thought the Senator rose for an explanation. If gentlemen will allow me to finish the few words I have to say they can take the floor. I do not propose to occupy more than a few moments longer.

I do not see that the Vice President does not fall within the reasoning I have already endeavored to illustrate as the reason why the President should not be eligible again. In the two cases that are familiar to us all the presidential office fell to the Vice President very early in the term; I believe as early as the first or second month in the presidential term. Now, sir, he would have a great advantage over anybody else, because if you do not exclude him he would be eligible again, although he had already occupied the office for almost an entire term.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. Fillmore did not hold the office for much more than half the term.

Mr. WADE. I think the Senator is mistaken. General Taylor lived but a very short time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Sixteen months.

Mr. WADE. Not over that. General Harrison, I believe, died within the first or certainly the second month of his administration.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But suppose he had not died until the very last month?

Mr. WADE. Very well. We cannot tell exactly when they will die, as it has fallen out now. When the office has devolved on a Vice President he has occupied it almost the entire term; and the same reasoning applies to him in that event as applies to the President who was elected as such, and there is a greater reason why he should not occupy it, because the people really have never elected him with the expectation that he ever would be President. Their selections have been exceedingly good, for the Presidents themselves have always been more satisfactory than the Vice Presidents, whom the people never expected would be Presidents when they elected them. I do not think that the Vice President when he becomes President ex officio should be in a better condition than though he had been elected President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator if the amendment would be satisfactory to him with the words "elected President or Vice President" stricken out; so as to read:

No person who has once served as President shall afterward be eligible to either office.

I would prefer the amendment in that form.

Mr. WADE. That would restrict it still more. That would restrict it as regards those officers that came in by law, where, as has been said by the Senator from Nevada, Congress may limit the term of office to such period as they may see fit. For instance, if the President of the United States should die to-day, and the office should devolve upon the President of the Senate, Congress might fix the term long or short, as I should think.

Mr. STEWART. They can provide for an election in such a case.

Mr. WADE. They can provide for an election whenever they please, and they can limit it when the contingency falls out in that way. Therefore they do not fall within the same rule as those who come in under the Constitution for fixed terms, beyond the reach of Congress.

Now, one word as to the length of this term. I know that a great many, and perhaps a majority of the people believe the presidential term too short; that the great agitation and excitement coming around once in four years, distracting business and exciting the public mind, is too often. That reasoning is very plausible, and if there was nothing more in it I should be clearly of that opinion myself. But who does not know that in the vast and growing powers that devolve upon this great officer there is danger in a long period of his drawing such influences to himself as will be dangerous to the public weal? Six years is a very long term for a man to be in the position of a dictator; for really the President of the United States under our Constitution is scarcely less powerful than a Roman dictator. His word is law; his will is the rule of action of the whole body; and he rides over Congress at his will, as a general thing. In time of war the whole Government is in his hands to such an extent that I can hardly see how you could give him any more power than he legitimately has under the Constitution.

When our Constitution was framed originally there was not so much power and influence devolving upon the President of the United States as there is now upon the Governors of some of the States. It was not thought to be dangerous. The framers of the Constitution hardly contemplated the immense growth of the nation, and as it grows and progresses in power, wealth, and influence, the presidential office becomes more and more important every year. If the excitement is great upon electing this great magistrate for four years, how much more intense will it be if you lengthen out the period! It will make the presidential election much more important than it is now. And suppose the people make a mistake, as they are always liable to make a mistake, in the selection of this great officer and get a man there who is false to all they wanted of him, all they expected of him, who thwarts all their ideas, who overthrows all their principles; and there he sits, clothed with a power that you cannot get rid of; when such a thing happens every man would wish that his term, at all events, was not more than four years. On the other hand, when you elect a magistrate by the power of the majority of the people, of their own principles, who honestly stands by them and endeavors to carry them out to the advantage of the people and for the welfare of the Government, it is natural for them to wish that the term should be extended.

I have no very settled convictions on this subject myself; but I have reflected upon it much, and I know no rule by which we can measure the time that we ought to fix. Our fathers adopted four years when the Government was exceedingly small, when the influence of the Chief Magistrate was not a hundredth part of what it is to-day in the selection of the officer, in wielding all the great powers that properly devolve upon him. If they thought then that four years was long enough, I think the great importance of the office, the ambition with which men aspire to all its honors and emoluments, are such that we should not rashly devolve it upon any man for a great length of time. Suppose you were to fix it at ten or twenty years, do you suppose you would ever get it out of his hands? If you make the term too long it would be apt to become hereditary, perhaps, in his family. As a republican I fear to invest any man with the great and growing powers of this high office for any great length of time. I think it is better and safer that it should frequently come back into the hands of the people, and again be submitted to their judgment to select another man as good as he is; for it is idle to suppose that there is but one man in the United States who is perfectly fit for this great office. We shall always find men enough, and if we look with an honest heart and with sagacity of mind we shall have no trouble in finding honest and honorable men to fill the office; but let us not tempt them with too long a period.

On the whole I have come to the conclusion, though not I will say very satisfactorily to myself, when I balance the evils of frequent elections with the dangers that attach to a longer period of office my republican ideas bring me, after all, to circumscribe it to the time fixed by the old fathers of the Constitution. I hardly think we can make it better; and I fear that in attempting to rid ourselves of the trouble and excitement and real difficulty of frequent elections we shall run into the other extreme, which is more dangerous and more fatal if we are wrong than the ordinary fixed term of this office. I therefore shall vote to keep it as it is; but if I am out-voted in that, I shall not be entirely satisfied that the majority are wrong, and shall cheerfully go with the Senate upon that subject, however they may fix it, wishing, however, that they would not extend the term.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. President, at the time this resolution was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary I gave notice that when the resolution should be called up for consideration I should move to amend it so as to make the term six years instead of four. That subject was considered somewhat in the committee, but inasmuch as the resolution itself pointed to nothing except restricting the office to a single term it was not deemed advisable by a majority of the committee to report a change as to the length of the term; that point was not acted upon. The amendment that I have drawn is in form a full, complete article, embracing precisely the language in which the amendment was reported by the committee, with some additional words to reach the extension of the term to six years. I offer the amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the committee. It embraces the amendment of the committee. It is to strike out all of the words proposed to be inserted by the committee, and to insert:

The President and Vice President of the United States shall hereafter be chosen for the term of six years, and no person elected President or Vice President, who has once served as President shall afterward be eligible to either office.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the honorable member from Vermont provided the office is one which is not to be repeated. The honorable member from Ohio says he is in favor of the term of four years, because our fathers fixed that as the proper term for the office; but he ought to have recollected that at the same time they provided that the President might be re-elected; and if the honorable member will refresh his recollection of the grounds upon which the clause as it actually stands was inserted in the Constitution he will find that the opinion of a very decided majority of the members of the convention, including many, perhaps, of the ablest men of that body, was, that the President should be reëligible, without any limitation of the term at all. The reasons for that are very persuasive, and they operated as we know to satisfy the convention that the incumbent should be reëligible. I confess that I have come to the conclusion for the last twenty years, as much as I respect the opinions of the convention by whom the Constitution was adopted, that the term should be limited; but in limiting the term I am for increasing the period of service to at least six years.

The honorable member from Ohio I think is needlessly apprehensive that there can be any danger to the liberties of the people, or that there will be any impediment at all thrown in the way of the prosperity of the nation in having the office continued two years longer than the present term; for it is not to be disguised that if a President of the United States shall be found at any time so antagonistic in his own views with the proper policy which the Congress of the United States may think should be pursued his power will be of little or no practical result. We have that illustrated, I think, in the condition in which we are now placed. All the powers conferred upon the office are now in the hands of the President of the United States, and yet we have seen that he is impotent to accomplish any policy of his own when it is found to be in conflict with the opinion of Congress; and we have seen that he is not so omnipotent but that it is in the power of Congress to deprive him of powers which have heretofore been exercised by every President of the United States without objection. Assuming that the legislation of Congress is within the legitimate authority of the body, (and it is not for me to deny it,) it proves beyond all doubt that if the representatives of the people think one way and the Executive another, there is no danger that the measures which the representatives of the people may think proper to adopt will ever be seriously thwarted, or that any danger to the liberties of the people can result from the fact that there is a President in office for six years instead of four.

The limitation of the term to four years was adopted principally upon the ground that the incumbent could be reëlected; and I think my friend from Ohio will find, if he will consult the debates, that but for the provision which makes him reëligible the term would have been extended beyond four years, perhaps to eight. No inconvenience, but on the other hand, as I think, great benefit has been the result of making the term of Senators of the United States six years; and I do not suppose that any reflecting man in the country, who is at all acquainted with the dangers to which all popular Governments have been subjected, and under which, sooner or later, they have fallen, can doubt that the security of our institutions is very much stronger by having the term of the Senators six years than it would have been if the term had been four years, or any shorter period.

The President of the United States has thrown upon him the duty of consulting the interest of the entire country, of making the entire country his study, and it is made his duty in consequence to propose to the Congress of the United States from time to time such measures as he may think are beneficial. Now, it is possible that he may fail the first or the second year, that he may fail the third or the fourth, but at the end of the fourth he may have satisfied the country that the measures which he recommends are the best which can be adopted for the true interests of the country. I am decidedly, therefore, in favor of the amendment suggested by the honorable member from Vermont, if we are to have any change, and I think there ought to be a change, which provides that the term of office of the President shall be six instead of four years.

Mr. SUMNER. I agree with the Senator from Maryland so far as I was able to follow his remarks. It seems to me it would be better if the term of the President was six years rather than four. I regretted that the report of the committee did not embody such a change. I am therefore thankful to the Senator from Vermont who, by his motion, gives us an opportunity to vote on that proposition.

But allow me to go a little further, and there I should like to have the attention of my honorable friend opposite, [Mr. JOHNSON.] If the term of the President is to be six years, should we not abolish the office of Vice President? Are you willing to take the chance of a Vice President becoming President, for instance a few weeks after the beginning of the six years' term, and then serving out that full term. Now, we all know in point of fact that the Vice President is nominated often as a sort of balance to the nomination of the President. It is with a view to certain political considerations and possibly to aid the election of the President rather than to secure the services of a man in all respects competent to be President. Suppose, therefore, we have only a President and leave to Congress the provision for a temporary filling of the office of President as is now left to Congress in the event of the disability of the President and Vice President.

I throw out these views, without making any motion at this moment, for the consideration of the Senate. I submit that we do not meet all the difficulties of the present hour unless we go still further and provide against these abnormal troubles that arise from the nomination of a Vice President, who, as I have already said, is selected less with reference to his peculiar fitness than to certain political considerations of the hour. As my friend says, he is thrown in for a make-weight, and then, as we know, sometimes in the providence of God the make-weight becomes the Chief Magistrate. Now, it seems to me important that if possible we should provide against any recurrence of the difficulties on that head.

But suppose the proposition of the committee to stand as it is reported, I am brought then to the question which was raised by the Senator from Maine, whether it should be applicable to a Vice President who in the providence of God has been called to be President. I am on that point obliged to go with the committee. It seems to me that all the evil which we wish to guard against in the case of the President naturally arises in the case of a Vice President who becomes President. I say that on the reason of the case, and then I say it on the melancholy history of this Republic. The three cases in our history which must distinctly teach the necessity of the amendment which is now before us are the cases of three Vice Presidents who in the providence of God became Presidents. I think but for these three cases nobody would have thought of the proposition which is now before us. It is to meet the difficulties which we have found to arise from a Vice President becoming President, and then hearkening to those whisperings and temptations which unhappily visit a person in his situation that we have been led to contemplate the necessity of such a change. I hope, therefore, if the proposition of the Senator from Vermont is not taken as a substitute for that of the committee, that the words of the committee will be preserved as they have been reported without any change.

Now, while I am up and the question is in regard to the amendment relating to the office of President, I desire to say that I am disposed to go still further. I wish an additional amendment, one that has not been presented to the Senate in this discussion, though it is not unknown in this Chamber, for distinguished Senators who once occupied these seats have often or more than once advocated it—I mean an amendment to the Constitution that shall cause the President to be chosen directly by the people of the United States without the intervention of Electoral Colleges. Such an amendment would give to every individual voter, wherever he might be, a certain weight in the election. It would give to minorities in distant States an opportunity of being heard in determining who shall be Chief Magistrate. Now, as we know practically, they are of no consequence. Such an amendment, it seems to me, would be of peculiar value. It would be in harmony, too, with those ideas which belong to this hour of the unity of this Republic. I know nothing that would contribute more to bring all the people, if I may say so, to mass all the people in one united whole, than to make the Presidency directly eligible by their votes without the intervention of an Electoral College. But there is no such proposition before us at this moment, nor is there any such proposition as I have alluded to with regard to the office of Vice-President. I hope, however, that both of these subjects will not be allowed to pass out of the mind of the Senate, and that some time or other we shall be able to act on them in a practical way.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I feel some hesitation in supporting any amendment of the Constitution in reference to the election or term of the President. I have long thought, however, that it would be but reasonable to limit an incumbent to one term and forbid his reëligibility, and I shall therefore vote for the amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary. But I am entirely opposed to extending the duration of the presidential term. I think the history of the country shows that it is not too short. The frequent recurrence of the presidential election is no more an inconvenience to the people or to the Government than the frequent election of Representatives; it is, indeed, substantially the same process, and it is as easy to elect a President once in two years certainly, as to elect the members of the House of Representatives once in two years; and I do not see what is to be gained to the cause of republican liberty by the extension of the term. It strikes me that the observations of the honorable Senator from Ohio on this point are weighty and well worthy of our consideration. We ought not to permit it to be understood or inferred that the presidential office is anything but an elective, popular office, dependent upon the will of the nation; and I see no reason why there should not be frequent recurrences of the exercise of the elective franchise in respect to it.

Now, sir, I have in my mind a tolerably good illustration of this principle of allowing the President to hold a term of office for six years. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that we once had a James Buchanan as President of the United States; and was it not a most fortunate thing for this country and the cause of human liberty that the term of that gentleman expired at the end of four years? Suppose he had had possession of the office under the Constitution for six years instead of four, and had held on until the 4th of March, 1863, aided and assisted by those pinks of political honesty and honor, the Floyds, the Thompsons, the Touceys, and all that class of men. I ask you, sir, and I ask the gentlemen who favor the extension of the presidential term, what would have been the condition of the United States of America at this time? We should have lost the case, the Government would have been destroyed by the protracted and persevering treachery of that Cabinet, and instead of seeing the United States of America to-day represented in Congress assembled, we should have seen a universal anarchy from one end of the land to the other, and the rebel States installed in the possession of independence and sovereign power as a nation and recognized as such by the other nations of the earth. Our great experiment of self-government in that case would have miserably failed. It was, in my judgment, a most fortunate circumstance that the term of James Buchanan expired on the 4th of March, 1861, instead of 1863.

The honorable Senator [Mr. POLAND] remarks that the mistake committed was that he was elected at all to the office of President. Well, sir, we are just as liable hereafter to commit similar mistakes; it is in the nature of our institutions that the people may from time to time be imposed upon by an incompetent, faithless, or traitorous Chief Magistrate. We were imposed upon then undoubtedly, but it will not follow that because we were once imposed upon we shall not again be imposed upon by means of similar political agencies and intrigues. The thing is to be expected almost as a matter of course, and the liability ought by no means to be overlooked.

If it were left to me—and I have not been without some reflection on this subject whether to extend the presidential term or abbreviate it—I should certainly abbreviate it, and elect a President as frequently as members of the House of Representatives are elected; and besides, elect him by the popular vote, precisely in the same way; but I do not now care to disturb the ancient arrangement under which we have lived for so many years, and I think it unwise to attempt it. I shall vote against the amendment extending the term of the President offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Nor would I except out of the operation of the proposed amendment the present incumbent of the presidential chair, as has been suggested by the Senator from Connecticut. The amendment suggests a fundamental alteration in our Constitution in reference to the eligibility of persons who have once exercised the presidential office. Has that honorable Senator discovered such beauties, such attractions in the political administration of the present incumbent as in his judgment to make it necessary and proper for us to exempt him from the operation of the general rule we propose now to establish? Is there anything in his administration or in his history, or is there likely to be anything in his future history and career, that would justify us in making him an exception? Although I have marked his course most diligently and sought to discover as with a microscope the political virtues that pertain to him, I have not been able to see them in such quantities as to induce me to make Andrew Johnson such an exception. On the other hand, speaking of course with all the charity and forbearance that I ought to exercise toward absent persons, I am prepared to say that if there be a living man within the limits of the United States to whom this restriction ought in justice and upon every consideration of policy to be applied that man is the present incumbent. The Senator from Connecticut, however, would release him from the operation of the rule, while, as it would seem, he would be entirely willing that the exclusion should apply to Mr. Fillmore, still living, and to Mr. Pierce, also a subsisting ex-President of the United States, and to Buchanan.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator is mistaken; my proposition saves them also; it saves every man who has ever held the office.

Mr. HOWARD. Possibly I may be incorrect in the construction given to the Senator's amendment. But, sir, I put this upon the ground which I have mentioned, that of all living men the present incumbent is in my opinion least deserving to be allowed the privilege of being elected President of the United States. However, that is a danger which need not alarm the most timid, for if there be any future imaginary event at which gentlemen of ordinary firmness and resolution ought not to be frightened it is the election of Andrew Johnson as President of the United States. I regard it as a mere chimera of the disturbed brain, not, I will say, of Andrew Johnson, but of those gentlemen who, a few months' ago, told us that with the banner of Johnson and State rights they were going to sweep the country, to reverse the present order of things entirely and bring into these Halls a full representation of the southern States, which we had just conquered with our arms, and which they seemed to regard and now seem to regard as persecuted, injured communities.

I will say no more upon this subject. I am entirely opposed to the prolongation of the presidential term.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I hope, Mr. President, that the consideration of this measure will not be concluded to-day, as I desire to speak to one point which I think important in connection with presidential elections in this country.

I was glad to hear the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] suggest that there was another reform more important than that which has been introduced to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] and that is, that in the choice of President by the people they shall exercise their choice directly and not through intermediate agents. But, sir, I should be unwilling to vote for the proposition for which the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to contend. He proposes to have votes given by the people directly for candidates for President and Vice President upon the ordinary majority or plurality rule which prevails at elections. The Senator from Massachusetts is in favor of having this power of selection exclusively lodged in and exercised by the people of the United States themselves. He says that; I presume he thinks that; but in point of fact, if the Senator will come to analyze the measure which he proposes to support he will ascertain that he stops far short of his object.

Now, what I would desire would be that the people of the United States should in point of fact, and not in point of theory merely, select their chief Executive Magistrate, and the alternate who accompanies him always before them as an associate candidate, I mean the Vice President.

According to the accepted rule you submit in each State to the choice of a majority or a plurality, a certain number of electors to which the State may be entitled. You proceed to count the votes of one portion of the people of that State; you reject and ignore and exclude the votes of all others. You do this upon a system. You do it throughout the country. Hence it is that your elections are a matter of chance, a matter of accident; there is no certainty that the real voice of the people, as expressed by their ballots, will be executed in the Government of the United States; that the head of this Government will take office by virtue of real votes given to him by those in whom the popular sovereignty of this country is lodged.

Sir, would it not have been admirable in 1860 that in all parts of the United States every man's vote should have been counted for what it was worth upon the result, that there should have been no ignoring of minorities anywhere? And would it not be an admirable rule for the future to provide that any political interest however small in a State should have its vote taken into account in the decision of this most important of our popular elections? If an opportunity shall be afforded me before this debate is concluded I will endeavor to show to the Senate, without consuming much time, that there is a necessity for reform in the manner in which the sense of the people of the United States is taken in selecting their Chief Magistrate, and that a reform directed to this point may be easily and conveniently carried into practice under an amendment to the Constitution, or perhaps without an amendment of the Constitution, by a mere statute enacted by Congress.

Mr. President, there is another point connected with presidential elections upon which we may act and act completely as a legislative body, and that is the time when the presidential election shall be held. There are very strong reasons of convenience and of policy in favor of fixing the presidential election in the month of October, fixing it for the entire country for all the States uniformly upon the second Tuesday of that month. I think that upon due consideration given to the reasons which apply to that question there will be little difficulty in coming to an agreement upon it. I propose if I can accomplish my purposes to call that question up and take the sense of the Senate upon it before we adjourn, in the hope that it may be assented to by both Houses.

There are strong reasons for action upon this subject, some of which apply to the present time. In the great State of New York a constitutional convention is about to be held under an act of the Legislature, to be enacted in pursuance of a recent vote of the people, for the purpose of reforming the constitution of that State. If you pass an act of Congress providing that the presidential election shall be held on the second Tuesday of October, instead of being held as now in November, no doubt that State in reforming her constitution will adopt the former day for her State election also.

There are opportunities for fraud along the borders of adjoining States when their elections are held upon different days. We have heard complaints in relation to fraud along the borders of Pennsylvania and of New Jersey, and the same complaints have been made in the State of New York; complaints of voters passing from one State to another when their elections are held upon different days. This is an evil which is almost perfectly provided against when you establish the same day in all contiguous States for taking the sense of the people upon the selection of officers.

There is another reason for fixing one uniform day for general elections, especially in our great States, and that is the influence which an election in one State has upon an election in another State when the latter is held subsequently. There can be no question, for instance, that in 1844 the vote of the great State of New York was controlled by the vote which had been taken in October in Pennsylvania. It gave direction to the canvass in the State of New York; it gave momentum and force to that political interest which eventually triumphed in the State of New York. It controlled the fence-men, all the movable voters, all those who constituted the balance of political power in that State; the consequence of which was that New York was carried by a very small majority for the candidate who was selected to be President of the United States. Now, by establishing the same day for holding elections in Pennsylvania and in New York, and in other States whose votes are powerful and important, you will prevent presidential elections from being determined by the influence and control of one State upon another in the manner I have described.

Again, the month of November, which is now fixed by act of Congress for holding the presidential election, is much too late. It is too late in the season for convenience and for comfort, and I suppose that all those States which have fixed upon November as a month for holding their elections will, whenever the opportunity offers, very gladly change the time and make it one month earlier. And if you fix the presidential election on the second Tuesday in October, fix it upon the day which has been selected by most of the northern States as the day for holding their elections, then all those States which have fixed their State elections in November will make the change promptly. New York will no doubt make such change at her coming convention in case you invite such action by the passage of a proper law here at the present session.

Again, sir, by holding presidential elections on the second Tuesday of October you will obtain in most of the States the election of members of Congress upon that day: and what will be the effect of that? Congress can meet here one month earlier than it does now. At a short session, such as that in which we are now engaged this would be—

Mr. WADE. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether we cannot by law and without alteration of the Constitution fix the times of holding these elections, all of them.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I said I proposed to call up a bill with this direct object in connection with these proposed changes relating to the Presidential election. I say then, sir, you gain one valuable month of time at every short session by meeting here early in the month of November, as we are obliged to adjourn on the 3d of March; we obtain one more month of invaluable time for the transaction of public business. And in the years of long sessions by beginning one month earlier you will be pushed into the summer months much less than you are at present. Instead of adjourning in June or July you can adjourn a month or two sooner. I consider this reform in connection with presidential elections to be very important, and one which ought to be adopted. I speak of it now for the reason that it is connected with the general question which the Senator from Ohio has introduced before us, the choosing of Presidents of the United States.

As to this proposition for limiting the eligibility of particular persons to the office of President of the United States, I must say that I do not think it near so important as he does. I think that those clauses in the Constitution limiting the eligibility of particular persons to the office of President and of Senator and of Representative in Congress are unimportant and unuseful; that too much importance was attached to them in the Convention which formed the Constitution of the United States; that in practice they have been of very little value. It is true that by one of these clauses Albert Gallatin was prevented from taking a seat in the Senate of the United States. He was selected a Senator from Pennsylvania and sent to this Senate, but was, after debate, excluded from his seat here as a representative of my State by reason of one of those limitations in the Constitution connected with the office of Senator. In other instances similar limitations in regard to membership in the House of Representatives have been disregarded. I believe both Mr. Randolph and Mr. Clay, two of the most eminent men of our country, took their seats in the House of Representatives in disregard of one of those limitations; at least the fact has been so represented. I know no good which those limitations have ever secured, I know no practical effect which they have ever had of a useful character, and the same remark will apply to limitations upon eligibility to the presidential office. I do not think that it is important that we should attempt to limit the people of the United States in their freedom of choice. I do not think that the adoption of such policy is wise. I do not think the adoption of a proposition in conformity with it and to apply it will have any very considerable effect in promoting the public interests. However, sir, I am not going into that question at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. No. 527) to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 183) concerning the fire department of Washington city; and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. RAMSEY. I ask the consent of the Senator from Ohio, who has in charge the measure now before the Senate, to pass it by informally and let us proceed to the consideration of the postal bill, which has been returned from the House of Representatives. I think it will take but a short time to pass it.

Mr. WADE. If that is a debatable measure I should not like to have it interposed.

Mr. RAMSEY. I imagine there will not be much debate upon it. I should like to have it disposed of now; if not it may not be reached this session.

Mr. WADE. I would rather it should go over to some other time, for I am afraid it will be debated.

Mr. RAMSEY. There was an understanding that when this bill came back from the House we should at once proceed to its consideration. With that understanding some of us withdrew our objection to its being sent for.

Mr. WADE. I am afraid I shall lose my measure entirely if I let it go over. If it is only proposed to take a vote on this bill I shall not object; but I do not know how far it may take up time.

Mr. RAMSEY. I presume there is only a question about one or two sections of the bill, and it can soon be disposed of.

Mr. WADE. Well, Mr. President, as that bill has been dealt with in rather a short manner perhaps I had better give way to it; and I do so with the hope that it will not take long.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest that the special order be passed over informally by common consent for the purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) That course will be pursued if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection. The regular order of business is passed over informally, and the bill (S. No. 527) to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes, is now before the Senate, the pending question being on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. Now, if the Senate will indulge me a few minutes, I think I shall be able to explain to them that the action which was taken upon this bill on Saturday evening last was proper, and that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of this body acted judiciously and discreetly in recommending the passage of the bill.

I premise by stating that there is no one of the great Departments of this Government increasing and extending itself as rapidly in its business operations and its personnel as the Post Office Department. Growing as it has grown with the growth of the country, it is not surprising that annually there should be some modifications of the laws for the government of that Department asked for. In this instance the modifications proposed are moderate and reasonable, and such as I think justify the Senate in at once adopting them. I will proceed to consider the bill section by section. The first section provides—

That the schedule of charges or fees for issuing postal money-orders, established by the third section of the act approved June 12, 1836, be, and the same is hereby, modified so that the charge or fee for an order not exceeding ten dollars shall be ten cents, for an order of more than ten but not exceeding thirty dollars the charge shall be fifteen cents, and for an order exceeding thirty dollars a fee of twenty-five cents shall be charged; and, furthermore, that the compensation of deputy postmasters for the payment of money-orders is hereby increased from one eighth to one fourth of one per cent. on the gross amount of orders paid at their respective offices.

The Postmaster General, in his annual report at the present session of Congress, states very clearly the reason for this modification of the law. He says:

"The present charge or fee established by law for an order of twenty dollars or less is ten cents, and for an order exceeding twenty dollars twenty-five cents. These rates are defective in this respect: that an applicant who desires to remit any sum under forty dollars could do it more cheaply by two orders than by one, inasmuch as two orders for twenty dollars each would cost him but twenty cents, while for a single order of forty dollars he would have to pay twenty-five cents. The manifest tendency of this state of things is to augment unnecessarily the number of orders issued, involving a waste of time and of clerical labor at both the issuing and paying offices, as well as increasing the liability to error. The adoption of an additional rate of fifteen cents for all orders of more than ten, but not exceeding thirty dollars, without any change of the present fees for orders of ten dollars or less, or for orders exceeding thirty dollars, would remedy the defect in question and promote expedition and accuracy in the transaction of the business.

At some post offices, particularly those located at centers of trade and commerce, the number of orders paid very greatly exceeds the number issued, so that the payment of orders constitutes the chief business of these offices, and as the postmaster's compensation for paying orders, being one eighth of one per cent. on the amount thereof, is much less than for issuing them, for which he receives one third of the fees, it is recommended that the commission for paying orders be increased from one eighth to one fourth of one per cent., so as to afford postmasters at such offices a compensation proportionate to their services."

In 1864 the tariff for money-orders was as follows: for an order of one dollar and not exceeding ten dollars, ten cents; for an order exceeding ten dollars and not exceeding twenty dollars, fifteen cents; for an order over twenty dollars, twenty cents; and the limit to money-orders in that law was thirty dollars. It was subsequently amended by the act of July 12, 1866, and the tariff for money-orders was then changed so as to be for money-orders not exceeding twenty dollars, ten cents; and exceeding twenty dollars up to fifty dollars, twenty-five cents, and the limit of orders was increased to fifty dollars. It seems to me that is a sufficient explanation of this first section, and I trust the Senate will think so. The second section provides—

That in case of the loss of a money-order, a duplicate thereof shall be issued by the superintendent of the money-order office without charge, on the application of the remitter or payee of the original, provided the applicant furnish a certificate from the postmaster on whom the same was drawn that it had not been and would not thereafter be paid, and a similar certificate from the postmaster by whom it was issued that it had not been and would not be repaid to the purchaser; and a second fee shall not be charged for a duplicate money-order issued to replace an order that has been rendered invalid because of non-presentation for payment within one year after its date, or because of illegal indorsements.

The Postmaster General in his report says:

"In case of the loss of a money-order the owner, in order to obtain a duplicate thereof, is required to furnish a statement under oath or affirmation, setting forth the loss or destruction of the original, together with a certificate from the postmaster by whom it was payable that it has not been and will not be paid. A certificate must also be obtained from the issuing postmaster that the order in question had not been and will not be repaid to the purchaser. In the majority of cases the applicant's information with regard to the loss of the original order is limited to the fact that it was mailed at a certain office, but failed from causes unknown to him to reach the person addressed. He is obliged, however, to furnish a statement to that effect under oath, (which is to be administered by the postmaster without charge,) and to defray the cost of a five-cent revenue stamp affixed to such statement. This additional expense is burdensome to the owner, who is rarely to be blamed for the loss of the original order, for which the regular fee had already been paid to the Department, and the latter having undertaken, in consideration of that fee, to transfer through the mails the sum of money represented by the order, should perform that duty without exacting any further compensation. Experience, moreover, shows that the certificates of both postmasters afford complete security against the erroneous issue of a duplicate in lieu of an order that had once been paid. It would seem, therefore, that the legal requirement from the applicant of a sworn statement as to the loss or destruction of the original is entirely unnecessary as well as onerous, and should be abolished. For similar reasons no charge whatever should be made for the issue of a duplicate order to replace an original that has become invalid because not presented within one year after its date, or because improperly indorsed. In such cases the invalidation of the order is in itself a penalty for any negligence of the holder, who, on application, should receive payment of his money by means of a duplicate without a second fee.

That I trust is a sufficient explanation of the necessity for the passage of the second section. The third section provides—

That if any person shall falsely forge or counterfeit, or willingly aid, assist, or abet in falsely forging or counterfeiting, or shall procure, directly or indirectly, to be falsely forged or counterfeited any postal money-order, or any material signature or indorsement to any postal money-order issued by the Post Office Department or any of its agents, for the purpose and with the intent of obtaining or receiving, directly or indirectly, or of procuring or enabling others to obtain or receive, directly or indirectly, any sum or sums of money, and thereby to defraud either the United States or any person of such sum or sums of money, or any part thereof, or shall pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish as true, any such forged or counterfeited postal money-order, with intent to defraud either the United States or any person of any sum or sums of money, knowing such postal money-order or any signature or indorsement thereon to be so falsely forged or counterfeited, every such person shall be deemed guilty of felony; and being thereof duly convicted, shall be sentenced to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for a period of not more than five years, and to be fined in a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars.

The Post Office Department conceived that under no present law could the forging of money-orders be prosecuted as a felony, and hence they asked for this additional legislation, to which, I presume, no one can have any objection. The Postmaster General says in his report:

"During the last fiscal year five cases have occurred of the payment of orders to persons who had forged the signatures of the payees. These persons had previously, through lack of precaution or injudicious confidence of the remitter or payee, been put in possession of all the information required to obtain payment of the order. To forge or counterfeit a money-order is made a penal offense by the act of May 17, 1864, but there is no provision of law to punish the forgery of the payee's signature, and as the latter crime is liable to be often repeated, especially at the large offices, there is a necessity for additional legislation to provide an adequate punishment for it, as well as for any attempt to obtain payment of a money-order by fraudulent means.

The fourth section provides:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint in the bureau of the First Assistant Postmaster General a superintendent of foreign mails, at an annual salary of $3,000, and one additional clerk of class four for that branch of the postal service, and that the superintendent of the money-order system shall receive an annual salary of $3,000.

I have a statement of the number of letters, the number of newspapers, and the amount of postage upon the correspondence exchanged between the United States and foreign countries, each fiscal year from 1863 to 1866, inclusive:

Years.	Letters.	Newspapers.	Postages.
1863 .....	6,089,880	3,411,307	$1,520,494 01
1864 .....	7,024,430	2,546,567	1,642,660 12
1865 .....	7,401,605	4,092,145	1,819,928 56
1866 .....	9,430,546	4,186,166	2,289,219 30

All correspondence with post departments of foreign countries, embracing the negotiations of international postal treaties and arrangements, which are conducted directly between the heads of the respective post departments, and also the direction and management of our ocean mail steamship service to foreign countries, is assigned to the officer in charge of the foreign mail service. Postal treaties and conventions, establishing and regulating the interchange of correspondence in open or closed mails have been concluded with Great Britain, France, Prussia, Belgium, Italy, Hamburg, Bremen, the British North American Provinces, Mexico, Guatemala, Costa Rica, and Venezuela, and negotiations are in progress for direct postal arrangements with several other countries. A new convention with Great Britain, on a very liberal basis, has recently been negotiated, reducing the international letter rate of postage from twenty-four to twelve cents, and admitting into the mails printed matter of all kinds at low rates of postage, the advantages of which will also accrue to all correspondence forwarded to and received from other countries of Europe and Asia, through the British mails.

Negotiations have also been opened with the French Post Department, with the view of readjusting our postal convention with France upon a more liberal basis, establishing not only reduced rates of international postage, but also providing for the territorial transit and sea conveyance of correspondence in closed mails through each country upon a basis of reciprocity mutually advantageous to the public of both countries. The recent establishment of direct mail steamship lines to Brazil and to Japan and China will enlarge the operations of our foreign mail service, involving the necessity of direct postal arrangements with the different countries of South America and Asia, which can be reached by means of these new routes of communication.

All this large and important branch of business is now in the charge of a clerk. The Department conceive that the importance of his duty justifies an increase of his compensation and a change in the denomination of his office, so as to advance him to a higher grade.

The expense under this section will be, for the superintendent $3,000, and for an additional clerk $1,400, making $4,400. Then there is the superintendent of the money-order system which has grown into vast consequence, several hundred thousand money orders being issued every year. It is proper that this important service should be placed in the charge of some responsible officer. It is all in charge of a clerk, and the proposition is to give that officer some increased compensation. The provision is that he shall receive an annual salary of $3,000, and there is provision also for two clerks of the fourth class, amounting altogether to an expenditure of $5,600.

The fifth section provides for the appointment in the bureau of the Third Assistant Postmaster General of a superintendent of dead-letters, at an annual salary of $2,000. I presume it is not necessary for me to explain to the Senate the importance of that branch of the Post Office Department. The increase of this business is evidenced by the number of clerks which it employs. There are now some eighty-five there employed, and the proposition is to place as superintendent of this large office an officer of this denomination, and to give him a salary of $2,000, which certainly is not very large. Then there is an addition by this section of $2,000, making thus far $17,600 increased expenditure.

The sixth section provides—

That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint in the bureau of the Second Assistant Postmaster General a superintendent of domestic mails and a superintendent of inspection, who, with the chief clerks of the three bureaus and the topographer of the Post Office Department, shall each receive an annual salary of $2,500; also, to appoint an additional clerk, to be in charge of mail bags, locks, and keys, at an annual salary of $2,000, and an assistant topographer at a salary of $1,800 per annum.

I suppose every one will concede that in the growth of the business of the Post Office Department there must be a readjustment of its management, of its government, and this is all that this section provides for. Although a number of clerks and bureau officers are spoken of in it, all that it provides for amounts to about ten thousand dollars in money, so that the whole increase of expenditure proposed by this bill in all its various provisions is but $17,900 in this great Department of the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish to ask the honorable member whether the measure is recommended by the Post Office Department?

Mr. RAMSEY. All the sections have been recommended by the Post Office Department and closely scanned by the committee, and the committee did not report favorably on them until they were perfectly satisfied that the Post Office Department was proper and within limits in asking for them.

I have gone through the various sections of the bill as reported by the committee. Two or three sections were added by way of amendment in the Senate which I can state very briefly. The seventh section provides for authorizing the Postmaster General to combine the three blank agencies into one and concentrate them here at the City of Washington. In that way, as I stated this morning, while the aggregate salaries will be increased about one thousand dollars, economy is expected to be produced in the management of this branch of business which will effect the saving of thousands of dollars.

Another amendment added by the Senate was in reference to the compensation of letter-carriers. We have received many petitions from the City of New York, signed by the principal merchants of the city, asking that additional compensation shall be allowed to the letter-carriers there, who are some hundreds in number. At present, as I before stated, the maximum compensation allowed to them is $900 a year. The committee thought it but reasonable, and in this the Postmaster General agreed with us, to carry up the maximum to $1,200.

Now, sir, I have covered the whole ground, and I really think upon reflection and reëxamination the committee did nothing very improper in asking the Senate to pass this bill, and the Senate did nothing very wrong in passing it. I trust, then, that this action of ours may be sustained by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose no one attributes to the Senator from Minnesota anything wrong in the passage of this bill, but still I think it very right, having been passed in so thin a Senate, that it should have been reconsidered. My attention was called to the bill this morning for the first time, and I am glad that an opportunity has been given to reconsider it. I ask now for the reading of the section which was added as an amendment to the bill relative to the settlement of postmasters' accounts.

The Secretary read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust and settle the accounts of postmasters accruing prior to the establishment of the system of salaries for deputy postmasters upon the basis of equity and justice: Provided, That such settlement shall not include any case of official delinquency by any deputy postmaster.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope Senators will reflect a little upon the extensive power given by this section to the Postmaster General. It dispenses with the examination of Auditors and Comptrollers and the whole machinery of the Treasury Department in all cases of claims made by postmasters before the passage of the recent act fixing salaries for those officers. In other words, the Postmaster General will be authorized to settle at his pleasure, upon principles of equity and justice, with every postmaster in the northern States, whether he be a defaulter or not.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator is not correct in that statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only restriction is that the settlement shall not include any case of official delinquency by any deputy postmaster. Now, what is "official delinquency?" When South Carolina went out, suppose a postmaster there had $10,000 in his hands which he has not paid over to the Government; is that a case of official delinquency?

Mr. CONNESS. I say, yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hardly know what that language means. At any rate, this amendment removes these postmasters' accounts from the ordinary supervision of the proper branch of the Government constituted to have that supervision. It seems to me to be an extraordinary provision to select the Postmaster General as a general arbitrator of claims in his Department growing out of the settlements of the accounts of postmasters, whatever they may be, unless they involve official delinquency, which is a term vague and indefinite, and of the meaning of which he is to be the only and sole judge. There is now an Auditor for the Post Office Department to pass upon these things. There are fixed rules and regulations and laws which govern the adjustment of accounts. This removes all these cases from that officer's jurisdiction, and allows the Postmaster General to settle them, not upon the rules and regulations that govern the Department, but upon principles of equity and justice; in other words, he becomes the grand arbitrator of all things of this kind in his Department. I do not see myself how far this authority goes, nor am I prepared in the present unsettled condition of affairs to give the Postmaster General such authority. I think that section ought not to be added to this bill.

The Senator from Minnesota says the bill does not increase the expenses of the Post Office Department more than about fifteen thousand dollars, and he gives the precise figures; but it does contain a provision which if once incorporated into this bill will involve an increase of expenditure amounting to very many tens of thousands of dollars. It is here provided that the chief clerks in the bureaus of the Post Office Department shall be entitled to a salary of $2,500 a year. If that is once enacted, how can you resist the same claim when made by every chief clerk of a bureau in every executive department? Are you prepared for that? Are you willing to raise the pay of the chief clerks of all the bureaus to $2,500? How can you do it in the Post Office Department, which has always been regarded as the least important of all the Departments, and not do it as to the others? How could you resist such claim when made by the chief clerks of the bureaus of the Treasury Department, where the accounts are more complicated? If you ingraft this provision on this bill it will necessarily involve a gradation of the salaries in all the Departments.

There is also in the same section a provision raising the pay of ordinary clerks to $2,000 a year, and raising the pay of the assistant topographer and ingrafting on your postal service at least three or four new offices with salaries varying from twenty-five hundred to three thousand dollars. It is true, the aggregate is not much, but if certain persons who are now fourth-class clerks can thus by name be raised in the pay of their offices by giving them some other name, the same principle must be adopted in all the different Departments. Nothing can be more difficult than the adjustment of the salaries of the various officers of the Government, and therefore I think it ought not to be included in a bill of this kind under these circumstances.

The fourth section makes two new offices in the bureau of the First Assistant Postmaster General, which, after all, is but a bureau of a comparatively inferior Department of the Government—a superintendent of foreign mails at an annual salary of $3,000, a service that has usually been discharged by a fourth-class clerk, and one additional clerk of class four, so that you will have the same number of clerks and besides that a new officer at a salary of $3,000 a year, instead of a salary of a fourth-class clerk. Then you introduce a new officer, called the superintendent of the money-order system, a duty now performed by one of the highest class clerks. The sixth section raises the salaries of the chief clerks of the bureaus of the Post Office Department to $2,500, as I have stated.

Then it must be remembered that this bill takes effect from its passage, and if it should pass the House in a few days it will take effect in a very short time, during the present session, when we are this evening to consider a proposition to give to the clerks an additional compensation of twenty per cent. The result will be that these salaries will be increased, and at the same time they will get the benefit of the resolution which the Senator from Oregon has charge of, allowing twenty per cent.

It seems to me these things ought not to be put into the bill. So far as the legislative features of the bill are concerned I have no objection to them; I have no doubt the Senator has stated them correctly and explained sufficiently the necessity for them; but I do not think that the question of raising the compensation of the various employes of the Government should be introduced in this way, in a bill of this kind, because we cannot do it in one Department of the Government without doing it in all. I remember a case where the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GUMES] proposed to increase the salary of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy to $4,000, and it was adopted. The result was that from that time forward for three years we had a controversy about the salaries of the different Assistant Secretaries of the various Departments of the Government, until finally they were all settled at $3,500. In this case it is proposed to raise the salaries of the chief clerks of the three bureaus of the least important branch of the Government, and if it is done, as a matter of course the same claim will be made by the chief clerks of the bureaus of the other Departments. Perhaps there are a hundred and more chief clerks of bureaus in all the various Departments of the Government. It is better to meet that claim directly as a legislative measure coming up and being fully considered rather than to meet it in a collateral way.

With the exceptions I have stated I have no objection to this bill. The new section to which I have referred I think is very mischievous in its effects. We cannot now see the extent of it. It may embarrass the Government in the settlement of postal accounts. I see no reason why these postal accounts should be withdrawn from the ordinary supervision of the accounting officers of the Treasury. This section undoubtedly does that, and it appoints the Postmaster General a general arbitrator to settle and adjust all the claims that may be made by postmasters in the southern States, unless he should judge that they arise out of official delinquency. If it is in order, I move to reconsider the vote adopting that section.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand it to be the section which provides that the Postmaster General may settle the accounts of postmasters on principles of equity and justice.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, to reconsider the vote adopting the section named by him.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator from Ohio objects to this section and wishes it reconsidered, wishes that it shall not remain as part of the bill: he comments upon it, points out what may be its dangerous tendencies, but he proposes no amendment to it. He says that the latter provision of the section, providing that such settlements shall not extend to any case where there existed official delinquency, is loose and vague, but the Senator does not bring his ability to bear in making it more precise than it is now.

If the Senator had held the office of deputy postmaster in one of our towns many years since and had for his compensation the percentage then allowed by law, where not only the percentage but the whole receipts amounted to comparatively little, and yet in many instances had to provide a house, a fire-proof building, in which to receive the mails of the United States that passed through that office, for his handling of which and his care of which he received not a cent or fraction of compensation; if he had had to sit up the live-long night as the mails came in to attend to them either by himself or through a deputy, and the law allowed him no compensation whatever either for furnishing the building to transact this business in or for the attention required to be given, he would think it was a pretty hard case when the United States district attorney was authorized to bring suit against him in the premises on the instruction of the Auditor of the Post Office Department. But it has not fallen to the lot of the honorable Senator to be exposed thus and asked to defend himself against a suit in the United States courts for a trifling sum of money, but which defense is necessary to be made, and where ruin in reality is to follow.

I hope the Senator will be a little more liberal in regard to this matter, and if he desires to provide against the settlement of any southern postmaster's accounts where he reserved moneys belonging to the Government, let him offer a proviso to that effect and let it be adopted. The Postmaster General understands very well the cases to which this would apply, and he is in favor of such a provision, not I undertake to say because it gives him patronage, not because it authorizes him to settle these accounts, but because his attention is taken up in a great degree, and that of the officers of the Department under him, by a host of claim agents who are constantly engaged in pressing him for a settlement of their accounts. A large share of the time of the officers of the Department is constantly engaged in reference to accounts ante-dating the law fixing salaries, which is precise in its character, and which accounts ought to be adjusted and settled.

There are suits now to the extent of hundreds brought against men, involving their certain ruin; and yet the Postmaster General has not the authority to order their withdrawal. Certainly, if we cannot intrust the head of a Department of this Government, an officer who is the adviser of the President of the United States in the adjustment of these old accounts of the character I speak of, the country has come to a pretty hard pass indeed.

It is well known that I am not on the very best of terms, either politically or otherwise, with the honorable gentleman who presides at the head of this Department, but I am perfectly willing to intrust him with the settlement of these cases. I am exceedingly anxious that our citizens shall be relieved from being constantly harrassed by the agents of the law sent out upon a change in the Auditor's department of the Post Office. We have an Auditor to-day who understands a case; perhaps he has given an order to suspend a suit, but he cannot order its discharge. When a new officer comes in, upon representation made to him he gives an order to reinstitute the suit and to press it to its conclusion. These cases are very hard; they exist all over the country; and it is a duty of the Government at once to ascertain a basis of exact justice upon which the settlement can be made. If the Senator from Ohio sees fit to offer any provision which shall guard it with more care I have no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from California has shown by his argument the danger of this section. According to this construction it does enable the Postmaster General, without limit or restraint, to give additional compensation to every postmaster from the foundation of the Government to the passage of the recent law.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the power conferred. Let Senators read the section of law and see. The Senator asks me to propose some amendment to the section. Nothing of the kind is necessary. Prior to the recent law the mode of assessing the compensation of postmasters was fixed, and the amounts were adjusted by the proper Auditor of the Post Office Department, and there is no difficulty in any person receiving all that is due to him from the Government of the United States for services as postmaster. Every person entitled to pay under the law can readily get it. If the law does not confer this authority we ought not to give to the head of a Department the power to allow that which the law does not grant. If a postmaster has a legal claim the way is open. Under these circumstances it is proposed to allow the Postmaster General to settle those accounts upon the basis of equity and justice.

Mr. CONNESS. What other basis should it be?

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon the basis of law. We never allow the head of a Department to settle accounts upon any other principle. Equity may be administered by Congress, but the executive officers must be governed by law. Suppose a postmaster should make a show of equity in regard to something that occurred twenty years ago, describing an extreme case, as the Senator did, and he should present it to the Postmaster General: the proofs on the part of the Government are all gone, but the Postmaster General under this section would have power to adjust the claim and pay whatever he thought just and equitable. There is no reference to an auditor or a comptroller; none of the ordinary machinery by which claims against the Government are investigated or allowed is provided for. Surely that ought not to be done.

Then, in regard to southern postmasters, the Senator thinks the phrase "official delinquency" will be sufficient to exclude them. Perhaps it may be, but I would not in any case give such authority to the head of a Department. The authority that was given by law two years ago to the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise and adjust claims growing out of the internal revenue system has led to great complaints, and it will be modified at the first reasonable opportunity.

I have no desire to impeach, and I do not impeach, the integrity of the Postmaster General; but I would not subject any officer of the Government to be appealed to day by day by claimants for an additional allowance not contemplated by law. The time of the Postmaster General is now employed. The Senator says that claim agents are harrassing him already. Well, suppose you make him general grand arbitrator of all claims that may have arisen in his Department from the foundation of the Government to this time, he will have no peace; they will hound the life out of him. I would not give him authority to allow any claim unless it is a claim authorized by law, in strict pursuance of law. If the laws heretofore have been illiberal, and postmasters have not been granted enough, let us regulate that matter by our legislation.

Mr. CONNESS. From the remarks of the honorable Senator one would suppose that this case would cover great claims. One would suppose that it would bring about a settlement which would require that the Postmaster General should pay money out of the Treasury, when the facts are the other way; that the Post Office Department, through their Auditor, are prosecuting citizens on the assumption that they owe money to the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. This would authorize the Postmaster General to overrule the decision of the proper tribunal.

Mr. CONNESS. The honorable Senator says that it is an unusual power to give to the head of a Department. Why, Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury has the power given him by law, and exercises it every day, of remitting to citizens when they have had property confiscated or proposed to be confiscated or condemned to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars, as in the cases of ships in the violation of the revenue laws of the United States. The law authorizes that officer to review the entire case, and to grant relief by dismissing the proceedings and restoring the property.

If that authority were not given under the laws as they stand there would be the greatest possible hardship to citizens. Citizens would rise up against the administration of the law. The cupidity of a Government officer might lead to the utter ruin of the best men of the land. These are great cases, and the authority is full and plenary in the head of the Department; but the cases to which this section is to refer are cases involving one hundred or two hundred or mayhap five hundred dollars of claims against deputy postmasters, where upon examination of the case the Department are forced to conclude that an allowance ought to be made in equity to the postmaster, but the law was exact at that time and did not authorize the allowance to be made. The suit is pending; the man is ruined, or about to be ruined. Here is the spectacle of a great Government crushing a man out who in a small and humble capacity endeavored to do the very best he could for the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, to reconsider the vote adopting the section which has been specified.

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish simply to answer one remark made by the Senator from California. He alludes to the power invested by law in the Secretary of the Treasury in cases of penalties. There is no authority vested in the Secretary of the Treasury like this. The Senator will look in vain in any law to find any such authority granted to any head of Department.

Mr. CONNESS. It is a very much greater authority.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. In certain cases where seizures are made and forfeitures incurred the Secretary may relieve parties from penalties, and the cases are restricted by the law; but he has never been authorized to draw money from the Treasury on principles of equity and justice. That power has never been granted.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire simply to say that it is an equity power strictly that is given to the Secretary of the Treasury in those cases; that when he decides he overrules the judgments of courts and the law, because there is equity in the case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from California what is the exact class of cases which will be submitted to the judgment of the Postmaster General if this section becomes a law.

Mr. CONNESS. They are cases of a very limited class where the percentage was the only compensation allowed to the deputy postmasters, but when they were, perhaps, what are termed separating offices, for which the law made no provision; where the office was required to be kept open every night, and a man kept on service; where a building sufficient to receive a large and overwhelming mass of mail matter had to be provided, and yet the law made no provision to compensate the man, and the postmaster went on performing those duties with the expectation that the Department would make an allowance thereafter.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Gentlemen have spoken about equity and law. Probably it would be well that we should understand what equity is and what law is. Whether we consult Lord Bacon or Lord Coke; whether we take the continental jurists or take the common-law lawyers, equity is law, and equity has the same foundation as the common law. It is the law of the country. What the law does not justify equity does not afford.

It is true that in ancient times, under the severe rule of the common law, the chancellors of England introduced from the Continent the continental jurisprudence, and it has received the name or style of equity; but what is that but simple justice, what is that but simple law? Equity is law only in a different form, and to be informed properly we must understand that there is no difference between the common law and the civil law when you come down to their real principles, because they all have the same foundation, and there is no such thing as equity in the understanding that it is out of the complaisance of the officer to grant a favor. Lord Bacon did not do that. The law as administered in the high court of chancery is altogether continuous with the common law of England. The common law of England is the same thing with the law of the Continent, only they use different terms, different styles, and different manners, but all seek the same result, and that is exact right.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot help thinking that this is a very dangerous power. I have always been opposed to bills giving the head of a Department or anybody else power to settle claims upon the principles of equity and justice, because that leaves them entirely to his discretion to do precisely as he pleases. Most of the difficulties that we have had about claims have arisen from power given in such terms. Much of the complaint of the undue exercise of power in the payment of money that ought not to have been paid has arisen out of such legislation.

If it were possible for the Postmaster General himself to sit down and examine these claims personally and ascertain what should be done with them, it would not be so bad; but everybody knows that neither the Postmaster General nor any other head of a Department can give his personal attention to anything of that sort. He necessarily puts it into the hands of a clerk, and a clerk is open to influences, as all men are more or less.

The Postmaster General cannot even revise what he does. Everybody must see that these claims may be almost innumerable. There is no limit. It applies to all accounts of postmasters existing prior to the law establishing salaries. It is simply saying that all of them who may have, or may think they have, equitable claims according to good conscience, may come forward and present them to the Postmaster General, and he puts them into the hands of a clerk to examine them. The power to this extent, it strikes me, is very dangerous, and such as we ought not to grant to anybody. I must therefore vote in favor of the motion to reconsider this portion of the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Harris, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wilson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Norton, Patterson, Ramsey, Riddle, Stewart, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Yates—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Cowan, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fowler, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Howe, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Saulsbury, and Wade—14.

So the motion to reconsider did not prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move in section six, line five, to strike out the words "with the chief clerks of the three bureaus and the topographer of the Post Office Department;" and in line eight of the same section to insert after the word "clerk" the words "of the fourth class;" so as to make the section read:

That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint in the bureau of the Second Assistant Postmaster General a superintendent of domestic mails and a superintendent of inspection, who shall each receive an annual salary of $2,500; also to appoint an additional clerk of the fourth class to be in charge of mail-bags, &c.

Mr. RAMSEY. I think, considering the important duties of the chief clerks of these several bureaus, a salary of $2,500 is not too much, and probably not more than is paid for equivalent service in other Departments.

Mr. HENDRICKS. How far does the proposition which it is proposed to strike out extend?

Mr. RAMSEY. To the chief clerks of the three bureaus in the Post Office Department, the bureaus of the First Assistant, Second Assistant, and Third Assistant Postmasters General. Our proposition is to make the salaries $2,500.

Mr. BROWN. What is it now?

Mr. RAMSEY. Twenty-two hundred dollars, I think.

Mr. SHERMAN. This involves the whole question of raising the salaries of the chief clerks of all the bureaus in the various Departments who now get $2,000.

Mr. RAMSEY. I do not see that that necessarily follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Fessenden, Fogg, Morgan, Sherman, Sprague, and Sumner—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Riddle, and Saulsbury—17.

So the bill was passed.

AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION.

Mr. DIXON. I expected to have an opportunity to-day to say a few words on the amendment which I proposed to offer to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, but as the hour is now late, and as I understand the Senator from Oregon intends to ask for an evening session, and as it is impossible for me to be here this evening, I desire to say that instead of offering my proposition as an amendment to that resolution I shall offer it as an independent proposition. If there be no objection, I suppose it may as well be offered now, and I therefore ask leave to submit it at this time.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 169) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title:

Mr. SUMNER. Is that the proposition the Senator presented the other day?

Mr. DIXON. The same.

Mr. SUMNER. I regard it as a delusion and a snare, and I want to say so at once.

Mr. DIXON. I will say in reply to the Senator that I was in hopes to be able to say a few words to-day in defense of the proposition, but at this late hour, just on the eve of the recess, I will not attempt to do so; but I give notice, however, that I shall call up the resolution at an early day if the Senate will allow me to do so. I move for the present that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. CRESWELL. Before that is done I should like a few minutes for the consideration of House amendments of the Senate bill No. 491.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot consent to withdraw the motion.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to have an understanding as to the business we are to proceed with this evening.

Mr. CONNESS. There can be no understanding of that kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate adopted a resolution the other day providing a session for this evening for the purpose of considering the extra compensation resolution. I expect that the resolution will be considered; and whether other matters will or will not be considered will be for the Senate to determine.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that that measure will be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will be in order and have priority, as I understand, according to the resolution of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess till seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 591) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

CONSUL AT CADIZ.

Mr. POMEROY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to report and transmit copies of any correspondence on file in the Department of State relating to the manner in which our consul at Cadiz has transacted the business of his office, particularly relating to any statement or documents of the Spanish Government upon the question of the invoices of wines shipped to the United States.

COMPENSATION OF CIVIL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 224.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) giving additional compensation to certain employés in the civil service of the Government at Washington; the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. RAMSEY to the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, to insert in line thirteen, after the word "navy-yard" the word "arsenal."

Mr. RAMSEY. When this resolution was up before I moved this amendment. As I said then, I can see no very good reason why there should be a discrimination against the employés in the arsenal. They are very numerous, and their compensation, I believe, is not greater than it is in the other Departments of the Government. We all recollect the great catastrophe that occurred there last summer. There is more peril connected with employment in that particular branch than in any other. These people are sitting upon a powder magazine all the time. If there is any apology, and there is of course, for this increase of compensation, I think it is as justly due to these people as to any others in the service of the Government in the city of Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator will not embrace the persons whom he desires to benefit, because the amendment of the Finance Committee, offered by me, confines this increase of compensation to the persons employed in the offices, and does not extend it to the employés and laborers who may be engaged in the navy-yard; so that the Senator's amendment would only include the clerks and those persons who may be employed in the office of the arsenal, if there be such a place. I am not advised as to whether there is any distinct office connected with the arsenal or not; but the Senator will see by looking at this resolution that it is confined exclusively to the persons who are employed in the offices. I have only to say that if there be any such place as an office of the arsenal I do not know that there is any objection to this amendment, but it will not reach the employés and laborers in the arsenal.

Mr. RAMSEY. Probably a further amendment will be necessary to reach all the cases; but this will comprehend, at any rate, a larger class than the resolution as it stands does, and I do not think there can be any objection to it. There probably is—there must be, it cannot very well be otherwise—an office connected with the arsenal, and it will at least reach that class of persons. I cannot see why they should be omitted. I suppose the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then I will for the present let it rest there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to the amendment in the form it is presented.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If we commence to extend this appropriation beyond the Departments proper, in my opinion the resolution will become embarrassed and will lose support. There are navy-yards and arsenals elsewhere that can as well claim this relief as those establishments in this city. I should feel myself bound to move to include the arsenal at Indianapolis if it be extended to the arsenal in this city.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then you might as well move for the same reason to include the navy-yard at Philadelphia, the navy-yard at Brooklyn, &c.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will say to the Senator that I do not represent either of those navy-yards, or I would do so.

Mr. RAMSEY. If there be any establishment in Indiana or elsewhere—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I believe there is no navy-yard in Indiana. There is an arsenal there.

Mr. RAMSEY. The arsenal here is a branch of the War Department. So it is not liable to the objection the Senator urges.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that the idea embodied in this resolution is to increase the salaries of those persons whose salaries are now fixed by law. Now, if the Senator from Minnesota shows that the salaries of the clerks in the arsenal are already fixed by law and that they are too low, then he will have given sufficient reason for the adoption of his amendment; not until then. I suppose that no one here knows what these salaries are, and until we are informed we cannot vote understandingly upon it. So far as the workmen are concerned their pay is not fixed by law, and it fluctuates according to the value of labor in the market. It is precisely so with those who are employed at the navy-yard. Their pay is not fixed by law. It is one price one year, or one season of one year, and another price at another. The law as now established is that the pay at each of the navy-yards shall be that which is paid for a corresponding species of work in adjacent ship-yards, and it goes up or down according as other labor falls or rises. I suppose that the same is the case with regard to the arsenal. But I agree with the Senator from Indiana, that if we want to pass any bill at all on this subject we have got to cease loading this measure down with amendments to include everybody in the city of Washington.

Mr. RAMSEY. I regret that after I had the consent of the member of the Committee on Finance who has this resolution in charge, the Senator from Iowa should have felt it his duty to oppose so reasonable an amendment as this. If there are no clerks receiving regular annual salaries in the arsenal, then of course no one will be benefited by this amendment. If there are clerks there, all those receiving over three thousand five hundred dollars a year cannot participate in it; but if you say that $2,000 or $2,500, the wages of a clerk in any Department is not enough, and you propose to give him twenty per cent. and I agree that you should, what possible objection can there be that he does that service in the arsenal rather than in the navy-yard or in the Treasury Department or elsewhere? I suppose the theory of this resolution is that the compensation of the Government clerks in the city of Washington, owing to the increased price of living, is not sufficient; and certainly that reason applies as well to the clerks who may be employed in the arsenal as to any clerks employed in any other branch of the Government service in Washington.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not aware that this resolution is to be acted upon and passed solely upon the recommendation of the Committee on Finance or of any member of it; nor do I suppose we can throw off from our shoulders our share of the responsibility of either passing it or rejecting it. When the Senator shows to us that there are clerks in the arsenal, and that their salaries are too low; it will be time enough to increase them. He has failed to show us that. It seems to me that the whole case is embraced in a nut-shell. Whenever we are convinced that the salaries are too low I am ready to vote for an increase, but we may place ourselves in the anomalous position of giving greater pay to the clerks of the arsenal than is now enjoyed under the law by those who are their superiors in rank and who have the control of them. We do not know that. But in regard to the clerks in the Departments we know what their compensation is, for we have fixed it by law, and there is no possibility for it to be raised unless it be by such action as the Senator from Oregon proposes. But can the Senator from Minnesota tell me that it is not within the power of the Secretary of War to increase the compensation of these clerks at the arsenal? According to my recollection of it the pay of each of those clerks is fixed by the Secretary of War, as it is in all the arsenals and armories in the country, and there is no legislation confining him to any particular sum.

Mr. RAMSEY rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have a vote.

Mr. RAMSEY. Very well; I do not wish to protract the debate further. If all salaries under $3,500 be too little in the other Departments they must for the same reason be too little in the arsenal.

Mr. WADE. I hope this amendment will prevail, and I hope, too, that it will be extended to all the laborers of the arsenal as well as of the navy-yard. I have prepared an amendment for the navy-yard. The real hard laborers in these two places are not likely to be benefited by the passage of this resolution unless we amend it; and I cannot understand the reason that induces a man to go for increasing those who have large salaries there and entirely overlook the hard hand-laborer that certainly does as much work and is as much entitled to compensation as anybody and always gets less for it than anybody else. Their case is entirely overlooked through the whole of this resolution.

We are told by the Senator from Iowa that their compensation is uncertain, and depends, as he thinks, upon the will of the head of the Department; in the arsenal, of the War Department; in the navy-yard, of the Navy Department. That may be so; but why can we not act when they appeal to us, and when we know about what they get, for I am informed by those well acquainted with the business of the navy-yard that their wages are from two and a half to three dollars per day; and they work from morning till night, hard, fatiguing labor; and they find it exceedingly difficult to maintain themselves and families upon this pay. I say again I do not understand how it is that while we are providing for those who certainly are better off than these laborers we overlook them entirely and do not attempt to do anything for their benefit.

I know we are told that if we do this we must extend it to every navy-yard in the United States. I do not know but that we ought to do so. They have not applied to us, however, and I do not know that living and expenses are as burdensome in other places as they are here. But here we have the strongest appeals made constantly to us to the effect that they are unable to educate and clothe and feed their families on the wages we give them. While such a fact as that is staring me in the face I can hardly turn my back upon them and say we will not consider their case at all. I think we ought to extend this relief to them. Of course, under this resolution, the amount will be very little to the Government. Twenty per cent. on so small an amount as they earn now will be but a very small sum anyhow, but these poor men are accustomed to have but small amounts, and a very small sum to them appears to do them as much good and will go as far as a large amount to those who are receiving higher salaries. It will not be difficult to calculate this increase on their pay. We know very well what they are paid now, and it would be very easy to add twenty per cent. to the small earnings they have, and it would be of great benefit to them. Although a man receiving a large salary would not estimate it as worth much, yet to these poor men who are accustomed to economize everything and make everything they do receive go as far as it can, it will be a great benefit.

I hope, sir, that we shall extend this relief, not only to the employés of the arsenal, but also to those of the navy-yard. I have received a great number of communications from both places begging that we will not overlook their cases, and I cannot have the heart to do it. Therefore I was about to move an amendment to the resolution, in line eighteen, by inserting after the word "meters" the words "and also to the laborers and employés of the Washington navy-yard." I repeat again, it is not a great sum to come out of the Government, and it will do these people a great deal of good. I hope we shall grant it to them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope Senators will confine their discussions to the questions before the Senate; otherwise we shall not be enabled to proceed with the business. The question now before the Senate is as to whether the clerks in the office of the arsenal shall receive the same compensation as the clerks in the other Departments named in this resolution. I am not advised as to whether or not there is an office in the arsenal to which the amendment would apply; but if there is such an office the clerks of that office of course are paid like other clerks, and they ought to receive the twenty per cent. But whether the workmen and laborers in the navy-yard shall be paid twenty per cent. upon their wages is another and a different question. I hope the Senate will vote upon this proposition, and then if the Senator from Ohio offers his amendment it will be time enough to consider it.

Mr. POMEROY. In reply to the Senator from Oregon, I will say that I do not understand the question to be whether the clerks in the arsenal shall have the same compensation as the clerks in the Departments, but it is whether they shall have the same increase of compensation. I do not know for my own part what their compensation is, or whether it is established by law at all. I suppose that it is not established by law but by regulation of the Department. I am satisfied at any rate that if we intend to increase the compensation of those whose salaries are established by law there is no better way of defeating it than by putting on everybody else.

While I have as profound a respect for the laborer as the Senator from Ohio, having been a laborer all my life, at the same time I understand that his wages are paid under a regulation of the Department, under a rate of wages that may be raised or lowered from month to month. There is nothing binding in law about it. If they are not paid sufficient then it is the duty of the person employing them to pay them more, and he has a right to do it under existing law, and it requires no legislation. But the salaries of these laborers in the Departments who expect help by the measure now before the Senate are fixed. The heads of the Departments cannot raise them if they would; and that is the reason why this resolution especially commends itself to us in legislating upon the question.

For my own part, I think that we should make a regular increase of compensation rather than leave compensation to be distributed according to the discretion of any executive officer. Some clerks have left the Departments during the past year from the highest motives, and they will not be compensated if this resolution is passed. It is only those more subservient men who have stayed there during the year and are, now in the Departments who will be benefited by this resolution. During last summer and autumn there were very many who left the Departments. Some perhaps were turned out; others left because there were some things required of them that were distasteful, or because their salaries were inadequate. Some very good reasons I have no doubt compelled them to leave; and yet this resolution goes back over the ground and pays those who stayed in; it does not propose to pay a cent to those who left, even though they labored through the same portion of the year that this resolution contemplates granting increased pay for.

That is one objection I have to the manner of compensation proposed by this resolution. If it could be made prospective entirely, looking forward and not back, this objection would be obviated; but to pay for a portion of the year when a number of the clerks, and some of the very best clerks, too, left the service from the best of motives, and cannot reap the benefit of it, is only paying a sort of a premium for those who stayed. I do not object to paying this increase, because I think the salaries are too small to those who stayed; but the remedy will not be entirely perfect if it leaves out those who were obliged to leave, and who served some of them many months during the same period for which we propose to pay extra compensation.

I shall vote for the measure generally; but I have no idea that it can be passed if we encumber it with every laborer in Washington in the Government employ. If we do that we must extend it to the laborers outside of Washington who are in Government employ; for those in Washington, in the navy-yard or in the arsenal, have no greater claims upon us than the laborers whom we employ in other parts of the country. They are just as poorly paid in New York and New England, just as poorly paid in the West, and perhaps more so, than they are here. If this resolution is encumbered by such amendments it will never be passed. If it can be confined strictly to those who are in service in these Departments perhaps it can; I think it can. At any rate I shall vote for it.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas one question. This amendment involves the clerks in the arsenal. I desire to ask him where is the distinction between the clerks in the arsenal and the clerks in the other Departments of the Government? I cannot understand why they should not have the same pay.

Mr. POMEROY. I reply, as it has been measurably answered already, that the salaries of the clerks in the other Departments of the Government are fixed by law, and cannot be increased without law. The compensation of the clerks in the arsenals and those employed at various posts about the country is not fixed by law, but can be increased by the person employing them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The question being put; there were, on a division—ayes 12, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Mr. BUCKALEW called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cragin, Davis, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Fessenden, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Morgan, Pomeroy, and Willey—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Connors, Cowan, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Harris, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Nye, Riddle, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, and Sumner—24.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting in line seven, after the word "watchmen," the words "including enlisted men detailed as such." I make this motion because the amendment was intended in that respect to correspond with the resolution as it passed the House. It is my opinion that the words now employed in the amendment would include such persons, but a doubt has been expressed as to whether enlisted men who have been detailed to perform the duties of clerks and messengers and watchmen in these different Departments would be included unless express language be employed for that purpose. I therefore move this amendment, not to add anything to the resolution, but to remove all doubt as to its meaning and effect.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon, who has the care of this resolution, if he means to give the soldier who is detailed as a clerk this twenty per cent. upon his pay proper and also his rations and quarters? This ought to be so in order to put him on the same footing with other clerks. His pay is now made up of three items: pay proper, rations, and quarters. You ought to provide in this amendment that he shall receive twenty per cent. upon his entire pay in order to put him on the same footing with the others. If that is the understanding, I do not know that it need go any further.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would be my understanding of the effect of the amendment if it is made.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If there is any doubt of that being the correct understanding, it should be made clear. There are enlisted men in the War Department and perhaps in other Departments—I do not know about that—who are doing the entire duty that clerks are doing in their Departments, for which they are receiving $1,200 and $1,400, while those enlisted men receive only from $900 to $1,000. They are almost all wounded soldiers; and if any men should receive an increase of compensation they should, and if there is any doubt as to the meaning of the amendment it should be made clear.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think there is no doubt whatever about it, because the amendment is made at the suggestion and in accordance with the wishes of these men, and the language is the language which they desire to have employed. They understand what their interests are in that respect, and will be satisfied with this amendment and this phraseology.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest the addition of a few words, which the Clerk will read. If the Senator is not satisfied to accept the modification I will not press it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts suggests the following alteration. It will not be admissible to receive it as an amendment, because the pending amendment is already in the second degree.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Clerk to read it, and if the Senator is satisfied with it he can accept it, and if he is not I will not press it.

The Secretary read the words proposed, as follows: "to be computed upon the gross amount of compensation received by them;" so as to make the clause read:

To civil officers, temporary, and all other clerks, messengers, and watchmen, including enlisted men detailed as such, to be computed upon the gross amount of the compensation received by them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to that that I know of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator accept it as a modification of his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

The amendment to the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon why the offices of the Surgeon General and Commissary General are not as well included in this resolution as the offices of the Quartermaster General and Paymaster General? There are clerks in the Surgeon General's office. It seems to me, if you include the clerks in the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, the Commissary General of Prisoners, the Paymaster General, and the Coast Survey, you ought also to include the clerks in the offices of the Surgeon General and the Commissary General.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose the language employed in this resolution will include those offices. It would be my opinion that it would include the Commissary General without any specification, because it provides for compensation to civil officers and temporary and all other clerks and employes, male and female, in the Department of War, or in any bureau or division thereof. I suppose this language is the same language that was employed in the resolution as it passed the House. The words "Commissary General of Prisoners" are inserted here I suppose to remove all doubt. I am not very well advised as to the manner in which the War Department is constructed, but I suppose there was some doubt as to whether the office of the Commissary General of Prisoners is a bureau or a division of the War Department, and so it was included specifically.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is there any doubt about the offices of the Paymaster General and Quartermaster General being branches of the War Department? Why are they mentioned? Does not the very fact of particularizing the offices of the Quartermaster General and the Paymaster General make it necessary to particularize the others, upon the familiar principle that where you specify certain things in a law you exclude the others that are not specified? If these specifications were all left out and the resolution was left to stand upon the general language in the first part of it, it might embrace them all; but when you proceed to specify and specify the Quartermaster General's office and do not specify the Commissary General's office, it would seem to me that the legal construction—I submit that to the Senator from Oregon—would be, that the Commissary General's office would not be embraced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state to the Senator that the intention is not to specify the Quarmaster General's office. That is a misprint. The original was "quartermasters," and was so intended to be, and the word "general" should be stricken out and the letter "s" added to "quartermaster" so as to read "quartermasters" and not "quartermaster general."

Mr. GRIMES. So as to include quartermasters' clerks?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir. I will state that this resolution is intended to provide for the clerks and employes in every bureau or division of the War Department, and then it proceeds to specify certain offices connected with its different departments, about which some doubts would seem to exist in the minds of some persons. If the Senator was aware of the constant applications that have been made here, and the suggestions that have been offered, as to whether this resolution did or did not apply to certain offices, he would see the necessity of these specifications. After providing for every bureau or division in any of the Departments it proceeds to say, "and in the offices of the Coast Survey, Naval Observatory, navy-yard, Paymaster General, including the division of referred claims."

Mr. TRUMBULL. Why "Paymaster General"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The word "Paymaster General" was introduced there to embrace the division of referred claims, about which there would seem to be some doubt. I did not frame this part of the resolution. It is copied from what was agreed to by the House. I suppose the word "Paymaster General" was inserted for the purpose of including the division of referred claims, because there was some doubt as to whether or not that was a division of the War Department; and it also proceeds to include the Commissary General of Prisoners, the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands, the quartermasters, the Capitol and Treasury extension, &c. I am very clear that these specifications, in the way they stand here, would not necessarily exclude any other bureau or division of the War Department. No such construction could be put upon this language, because it would not be a reasonable construction. These different offices that are specified here are such as perhaps do not regularly fall within these different Departments. There can be no doubt, as it seems to me, that the general language is sufficient to embrace every division and bureau of the War Department.

Now, I will say as to the quartermasters, that the business of the Quartermaster General's department, as I am advised, is to some extent divided among the quartermasters located here in Washington, and these quartermasters employ clerks who are engaged in performing the precise duties that the clerks in the Quartermaster General's office perform.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Allow me to suggest that there are paymasters and commissaries in the city of Washington who have clerks performing these precise duties, who are not in the Paymaster General's or the Commissary General's office, just as there are quartermasters here with their clerks. If it is necessary to put in the word "quartermasters" to include the quartermasters' clerks, manifestly it is necessary to put in "paymasters" and "commissaries" in order to include their clerks, if it is intended to include them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no evidence that such is the fact.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know there are paymasters here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know there are paymasters in the city, and no doubt those paymasters have clerks; but are they performing duties that pertain to the office of Paymaster General?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Just as much as the quartermasters here perform duties pertaining to the office of the Quartermaster General.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think the honorable Senator knows that to be the fact. I presume if that was the fact, these clerks would have made application for the benefits of this resolution; but no such application has been made from any of the officers referred to by the honorable Senator. Application has, however, been made by the clerks in the offices of the quartermasters in the city, because they were performing duties that ought to have been performed in the Quartermaster General's Department, but the business that belongs to that department has been distributed among the different quartermasters in the city, so that their clerks are performing the identical duties that the clerks in the Quartermaster General's Department perform, and are therefore entitled to the same pay. Such were the representations that were made, and their statements were credited, and on that ground they were embraced within the provisions of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves to amend the amendment by striking out in line sixteen the word "General," and adding the letter "s" to the preceding word "quartermaster," so as to make it "quartermasters."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After the word "buildings" in line eighteen I move to insert "to the photographer and assistant photographer of the Treasury Department." These are two men whose salaries are not fixed by law, but who are very deserving. They are civil officers and regularly employed there.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "office" in line seventeen the words "and the custom-house and city post office at Georgetown." The duties of these officers are certainly on a par with those provided for in the resolution; they are as essentially under our care as those in this city; they are as deserving. Their expenses of living are as high as those of employes in this city. They are as essentially officers of the Government as the employes in the city post office in this city. I can see no reason why the discrimination should be made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] will not be adopted. Application was made by these persons to the Committee on Finance, and we took into consideration their claims; and the opinion of the committee was that it was necessary that the effect of this resolution should be confined to the city of Washington. If we undertake to go beyond Washington and include Georgetown the argument on which you extend the resolution to Georgetown will make you extend it to other places and cities outside of this District. There must necessarily be some limit to the operation of this resolution.

It is proposed by this resolution simply to increase the compensation of the clerks and employes in the different Departments in Washington, and the argument upon which it proceeds is that the expenses of living in Washington have been greatly enhanced, and that to enable the clerks and employes in these Departments to obtain a respectable livelihood it is necessary that they should have this increase of salary. The clerks in the custom-house and post office at Georgetown receive eight or nine hundred dollars per annum, I believe, and we have not been advised that their duties are particularly arduous, or that the amount which they receive is not an adequate compensation for their services. But the chief objection to this amendment is that it opens the door for other amendments, and it is one step toward loading down this resolution with amendments that will effectuate its defeat. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not intend to occupy the attention of the Senate on this subject; but it is clear to my mind that the honorable Senator fails to raise a distinction between employes of the Government in the city of Washington and in the city of Georgetown. I should like to know if the honorable Senator means to say that Georgetown is not as much a portion of the national capital as the city of Washington? I should like to know whether the Committee on Finance desire to establish an invidious discrimination among the employes of this Government against those who happen to live just outside of the limits of Washington? I maintain that an employe of the Government is as meritorious, and he stands in precisely the same relations to the Government of the United States in the city post office in Georgetown as he does in the city post office in Washington, and I might argue, if I had the time, that he is a thousand-fold more meritorious. Why, sir, hundreds of thousands of dollars are expended here in this city of Washington, and the residents of this city are the recipients of it, to a single thousand that is spent in Georgetown. I submit, therefore, that on principle there is no ground for the exclusion.

Mr. POMEROY. The resolution includes employes of the navy-yard.

Mr. MORRILL. The navy-yard is within the city limits of Washington, I believe, although it is further off than Georgetown; but the idea of a distinction between the employes of the Government in Washington and in Georgetown is absurd in principle. On the score of merit this application is a thousand-fold stronger. We are told that eight or nine hundred dollars a year is given to men who toil from morning till night in the post office and custom-house at Georgetown, and it is not proposed to give them anything additional, while you propose to raise young lads who are performing the service required in the Departments here at $1,200. I submit, Mr. President, that if the resolution is to pass at all there should be a discrimination of this kind.

Mr. CONNESS. I had supposed that the basis of the application for an increase in Washington was because of excessive expenses here and the high cost of living. If Georgetown is to be added I do not see why we may not add all the towns west of the Rocky mountains, where expenses exceed those in Georgetown. The zeal on the part of the Senator from Maine in behalf of a part of the District that he so, I was going to say, arbitrarily governs; but that is not the word—undertakes to govern I cannot understand unless he shall apply his care and sympathy also in the direction I have indicated, across the Rocky mountains. If the Senator will only change his amendment so as to give it that application I will vote with him. And I think that by extending his amendment perhaps all over the Union he may get a very large vote in the Senate for it.

Mr. MORRILL. My honorable friend does not show his usual astuteness. He fails to see a distinction between the inhabitants of this district, which is the capital of the nation, and those that are entirely outside of the capital, outside of our limits. Then, I hardly think it is worth while for me to argue to the honorable Senator. What I was saying is that this District, including Georgetown, is the capital of the nation, and I insist upon it that Washington city is not the entire capital of the nation; and this is a resolution purporting to provide additional compensation for the employes of the Government—where? At the national capital.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is its title?

Mr. MORRILL. It has no title, I believe. Yes, it is "A joint resolution giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service at Washington;" that is the title. Of course they do not mean by "Washington" this corporation, to the exclusion of the rest of the national capital.

Mr. WILSON. How about the county of Washington?

Mr. MORRILL. They have not got any officers there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose that the reason the clerks in the post offices were omitted was because the Postmaster General fixes their salary. As I understand, he has a fund under his control, and he says what salary the clerks shall receive and how many clerks there shall be in a particular post office. I supposed that applied to the post offices at Washington and Georgetown and elsewhere; therefore I thought it very strange that the clerks in the city post office here should be provided for when the entire relief is within the control of the Postmaster General. He fixes their salary arbitrarily, as I understand, and whether they get more or less than clerks in the Departments for performing like duties I do not know; it would depend on the discretion of the Postmaster General. All the post offices ought to be included or else this one should be stricken out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have not myself been able to see why the city post office was put in at all, and precisely for the reason stated by the Senator from Indiana. There is a fund out of which they can be paid all that it is necessary they should receive, and they will receive all that they ought to receive. That matter is at the discretion of the head of the Post Office Department. Now, why we should undertake to add twenty per cent. in cases of that description I do not know.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has it been moved to amend by striking out the provision for increased pay of officers in the post office in this city? It seems to me, for the reason stated by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Indiana, that it is entirely at war with the general system of the post office. The Postmaster General can increase the pay as he thinks proper; or if that is not so, and we are to provide for the officers in the city post office, the same reasons would apply to those in the same kind of office in the city of Georgetown. If it be in order, therefore, I move to strike out that provision in relation to the city post office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out in line seventeen the words "city post office."

Mr. WILLIAMS. When the resolution came from the House of Representatives it included these words, "city post office." No change was made in that respect by the Committee on Finance of the Senate. It is true that the salaries of the clerks in the city post office are not fixed by law, but the postmaster of the office does not feel justified in adding anything to their pay unless authority is given by the provisions of this resolution; and these clerks do to some extent perform duties similar to those of other clerks in this city. Everybody knows that the city post office here is a necessary part of the public buildings of the city of Washington, and that there is a very large amount of business transacted in that office for the benefit of the Government; and it is to all intents and purposes used for the benefit of the Government as well as of the citizens who reside in the city of Washington. I state these facts for the consideration of the Senate. Of course I have no particular interest in the matter further than to say that these clerks in the city post office as well as the postmaster claim that they ought to have their pay increased as well as others for the considerations which I have named; but if it pleases the Senate to strike the city post office from the resolution of course I shall not complain.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not object to an increase of the pay of the employes of the city post office if it is too low. The only question is whether we are to decide that or the Postmaster General. Suppose we add twenty per cent. now to the salary which he has already fixed, he may give them twenty per cent. more directly, or in some way that he thinks proper. We have not the whole matter in our control. If we think twenty per cent. added to the amount they now receive is the sum which they should receive we had better negative the power of the Postmaster General to increase that sum. My sole object is to leave the law as it stands; his is better able to tell than we are whether there should or should not be an increase in their compensation.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand that the corps of employés in the city post office perform a great deal of very hard labor, and that as compared with the other employés in the Departments here they perform more labor and spend more of their time actually in the public service, night and day, than other employés of the Government. They have not any regular rest even upon Sundays, such is the press of business in that office; and from what I know of the state of things there I certainly am unwilling to strike out the words proposed by the honorable Senator from Maryland. I think if there are any set of clerks in Washington who deserve this increased compensation it is the clerks in the city post office, and I hope the Senate will not strike out these words.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan or the Senator from Oregon, what is the compensation now allowed? As the Senator from Michigan thinks it is a more meritorious claim than that of any of the clerks in the Departments, many of whom render very high and important service to the Government, I should like to know what allowance is now made.

Mr. HOWARD. I am informed on very good authority that although there is no regularly fixed compensation for the employés of that office, the average amount is a very little over eleven hundred dollars a year. That is all the information I am able to give the Senator from Indiana on that subject. It is obvious that in this place it is not very convenient for a man to live upon $1,100 and lay up anything for old age or a rainy day, as he and I are anxious to do, by turning an honest penny.

Mr. McDUGALL. Nearly every one who knows anything about post office business, knows that the clerks in the post office here, and generally in the large post offices throughout the country have more severe duties to perform than clerks anywhere else. I should not think I was departing from a sound judgment if I were to say that they render double the service that is rendered on an average by the clerks in the Departments here. They are not at rest either by night or by day. The service requires intelligence, promptitude, exact attention, and complete execution. What is proposed here is to add to their now assigned compensation twenty per cent. The reason is that while it is within the power of the Department or the postmaster to compensate up to the present maximum, he does not feel authorized, except by some resolution of Congress, to place the employés in the post office in the city of Washington on the same footing with the employés in the various other Departments of the Government. I believe they labor much more; I believe that their duties require more attention; I believe they should be just as well considered, and I see no good reason why they should not be put in this resolution in the category of other employés of the Government for an advance of compensation.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "annum" in the thirty-second line to the word "provided" in the thirty-seventh line. The words which I propose to strike out are "nor to any person whose salary has been increased by law since the 30th day of June, 1864, except those clerks in the office of the Quartermaster General whose pay was equalized with that of first-class clerks by act of July 28, 1866."

The effect will be simply to make that proviso read:

Provided further, That the resolution shall not apply to persons whose salaries as fixed by law exceed $3,500 per annum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So far as I am concerned I shall make no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois. I do not know what the other members of the Finance Committee may think, but my opinion is that the resolution ought to be amended in that respect.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am very happy to know that the Senator having the resolution in charge consents to the amendment, and his consenting to it relieves me from the necessity of saying anything about it. The object of striking out these words is to allow persons whose pay has been increased since 1864 to have the benefits of the twenty per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not strike out the next proviso, which excludes those persons whose pay has been increased merely temporarily in one Department?

Mr. TRUMBULL. The objection which I should have to that I will state in a moment. The effect of striking out the words which I have proposed to strike out will be to bring within the provisions of the resolution those persons whose salaries have been increased within the last two years, and particularly the female clerks whose salaries were increased, I believe, from $720 to $900, and who would be excluded from the benefit of the resolution as it now reads. If these words are stricken out they will be embraced. The reason why I have not included the other proviso in my motion—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Those mentioned in it are persons whose salaries have been increased, not permanently, but only temporarily.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Maine knows that that was an increase which never met my approbation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The objection was as to the manner.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes. The proviso to which the Senator refers applies to those persons in the Treasury Department who received a part of the $160,000 or the $250,000 fund which was given to the Secretary of the Treasury to disburse there among the clerks.

Mr. CONNESS. Why should they not receive the benefit of this resolution?

Mr. TRUMBULL. The reason they should not receive it is because they have had this bonus already. They have received it from what I thought was a very injudicious appropriation: placing $250,000 in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury to be disbursed among his favorites in the Department. I do not wish to go over that argument again.

Mr. CONNESS. The clerks are not responsible for that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The clerks have got the money, and I do not care about including them now in the appropriation of twenty per cent. that is made to other clerks. If the Senate think proper to strike out the other proviso, I shall say nothing further about it; but I will not make a motion to do it. I trust the words I have moved to strike out will be stricken out, and then if any other Senator thinks proper to move to strike out the last proviso, and the Senate agree to it, very well.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope both provisos will be stricken out if either shall be, and I hope that both will be. I do not know any reason why the clerks who received this bonus, as it is termed, should not receive this general and regular increase of compensation. I do not think the clerks should be held responsible for the mode of distribution of the appropriation. It is not the fault of any clerk that Congress placed the discretion over that sum in the head of the Treasury Department. It appears to me there is but one view which can be taken of that money distributed to these clerks as a bonus, namely, that it was found that they were worthy of it; that up to that time at which they received it they had received an insufficient sum, and that was given them to avoid a general increase, which at that time it was believed the Treasury could not afford; that in getting a share in the distribution of that money they got but what was their due, but what in part compensated them for the labor they had performed up to that time. It is now proposed to give an additional percentage to the clerks in the different Departments, and I ask what fairness there is in failing to extend it to these men. Is that small additional compensation which they received out of the fund distributed by the Secretary of the Treasury and in accordance with the wish of Congress to be regarded as a sufficiency for them for all time? I do not understand the justice of that view of the case.

I hope that both provisos will be stricken out. If we are to compensate clerks at the capital because their present compensation is insufficient, shall we fail to compensate the men who have proved their capacity in the Treasury to the extent of securing the approval of those who exercised control over them? Let it not be said that favoritism guided the Secretary of the Treasury in every case in the matter of distribution. I cannot say that that officer was not guided by favoritism in any case; I do not know that it was so; but I do know that it is a mistake and utterly wrong to charge that he exercised favoritism in every case. It has fallen to my lot on another occasion in the Senate to speak of that miserable organization known as a Departmental Club in Washington. I will not refer to them further now; but I know very well that the distribution of the funds placed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury was not confined to the men who made up that club. I know men in the Department who served through the war, were cut to pieces and incapacitated for hard labor, who have been employed there, and have won their way by their superiority as clerks to high promotion, who have filled their places with the greatest possible credit, who received a part of that compensation, and received it justly. I was about to say as much as this the other day when the discussion took place in the Senate upon this question; but that discussion was so much out of order, so much away from the immediate question then before the Senate, that I concluded to forego expressing, not only my opinion in the premises, but giving the knowledge that I had against the constant asseverations that the distribution was made to favorites and favorites alone. I hope that by no vote of the Senate shall we undertake to make compensation to clerks based upon any opinion that we had or have upon the merit of the other system of distribution by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I hope that we shall not do injustice by our votes here to clerks who have proven their superiority, and thus secured the favor of those who have control over them. I trust that the Senate will strike out both provisos.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Illinois made the remark that he did not wish to apply this extra compensation to those persons who were paid from the fund which was distributed by the Secretary of the Treasury among his favorites. On that point, in order that an end may be put to that sort of remark, I wish to say that I have authority for the statement that the Secretary made the distribution in the various bureaus on the recommendation of their heads. The Secretary directed the heads of bureaus to recommend for extra compensation those chiefs of divisions or clerks performing important duties analogous to those of chiefs of divisions who in their judgment should receive the extra compensation, and the distribution was made on the basis of merit and efficient service, regardless of the former or present politics of the recipients. In view of this statement, I hope nothing further will be said about the money having been distributed by the Secretary of the Treasury among his favorites.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I consented to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois because I have made some examination since the report was made, and I find that the increases referred to in the proviso have generally been increases to equalize the salaries of persons who were performing duties similar to those performed by other persons, so that all persons occupying similar positions in the Departments and performing similar duties should receive equal pay. If this proviso were left in the resolution in its present shape, the result would be that some persons would receive twenty per cent. upon their salaries and others would receive nothing, while they all perform precisely the same duties and are by law entitled to the same pay. I think that would be manifest injustice, and therefore this proviso ought not to remain in the resolution. At any rate, it refers to but few persons, with the exception of the ladies, whose compensation has been increased since 1864. I am satisfied that most of these ladies, who are engaged in copying and counting, perform duties which are equal in all respects to similar duties performed by men who receive $1,200 a year; and if they were discharged it would be necessary to employ men who would do no more work than they do, and the Government would be compelled to pay those men $1,200 per annum, while now they pay these ladies but $900 for their services. If a woman performs the same service in a Department that a man can perform, I see no reason why she should not have, perhaps not equal pay, but at any rate pay that approximates to the amount received by the man performing similar duties.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Illinois by striking out the remaining proviso of that section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order. An amendment in the third degree is not admissible. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CONNESS. I was not aware that the pending proposition was an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Nothing can be more unpleasant than to oppose a proposition like this, especially when the Senator in charge of the resolution himself yields the action of the committee; but as I think I have been governed by a general principle in my action on this subject I prefer now, once for all, to state it.

When the application was first made by the employes of the Executive Departments for an increase of their compensation it was upon a simple and I think very just and equitable principle. They alleged that their pay had been fixed years ago, at a time when they received it in gold, when money was of much more value than at present. With the salary they then received they were able to maintain their families in comfort and independence. They represented to us that on account of the change in prices and the change in the character of the money paid to them they are unable to meet their ordinary expenses, and many cases of real distress came to our knowledge growing out of the insufficiency of their pay, the pay given by the Government being in a depreciated currency and not sufficient to maintain them in ordinary comfort and independence.

That was a claim which pressed strongly upon us and which no man with any feeling could resist. If their pay as it was fixed in 1864 was a just compensation for services of a certain character, it certainly was not just now. It was to meet this that, for a temporary purpose, for this year, till a general reorganization could be had in the Executive Departments, we agreed I believe unanimously that there should be some additional compensation granted to the employes of the Departments. We could not pretend, in the present condition of the Treasury, to give them all that they could reasonably claim. They might claim reasonably, on account of the currency, enough to make their pay equal to what it was before. That, however, we could not give, and finally by common consent it was agreed that twenty per cent. additional should be given to them this year upon the principle I have stated.

There were, however, certain exceptions to this general rule. One of them was the one now proposed to be stricken out. Within three or four years it has been the habit of the Government to employ in certain Departments female clerks and employes. Their compensation was first fixed at $600 a year.

It is true they were called upon to discharge the same services as male clerks to some extent; but the great body of the male population of our country being in the Army, and the ladies being very anxious for employment, the employment was I think wisely given to them, and they were then satisfied with the compensation fixed. Things passed on for a year or so, when upon their own application their pay was increased to $720 a year. I had the pleasure of introducing that proposition and supporting it, and it was carried. That was on the ground that the increased cost of living caused by the continued depreciation of paper money made $720 then no more than equal to the $600 originally fixed. That increase was freely granted. The year following they came to us again, and represented that there ought to be a gradation in their pay; that while some of them were mere copyists, others were performing the duties of first, second, and third class clerks. Upon their representation and application we adopted a scale which they themselves proposed. Their own plan was adopted and an increase of compensation provided for.

Then, in certain departments of the Government, like the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Bureau of Internal Revenue and some other bureaus that were organized during the war, a higher rate of pay was given by laws passed since 1864, in order to meet the argument that I have already mentioned. It was deemed wise when this general increase was provided for, on the ground of the inadequacy of the former pay, that those who had already been increased in the way I have stated should be excepted from the operation of this resolution, and that is the reason why this exception was made.

In regard to the other exception which is also proposed to be stricken out I have a word to say. By an appropriation which we all admit to be wrong in principle a fund was placed in the hands of an executive officer to distribute at his pleasure; and yet under the peculiar circumstances by which we were then surrounded we were prevailed upon to do it. I voted for it on the ground that we were not then prepared in the existing condition of the country to reorganize the Treasury Department. A sum of $250,000 in the first place, and subsequently of $160,000, was placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury to be used in his Department to give extra compensation in proper cases. That this money was wisely and honestly distributed I have no manner of doubt. The statements made by gentlemen in that Department, who perhaps have no political affinities with the Secretary of the Treasury, show that the money was fairly distributed, and there is no ground to impute anything to the contrary. It must be remembered, however, that this sum of $410,000, or a considerable portion of it, was distributed to certain clerks and employes in the Treasury, some of whom received as much as $600, and some thirty per cent. over their salaries. They received from one hundred dollars to six hundred dollars a year out of this fund. Now, in addition to this large increase given to them for their faithful services, because an effort is made by other clerks and employes who have never had a benefit of an increase, and because their application has been kindly listened to by Congress and is about to be granted, it is proposed to give to those clerks who have already received from the Secretary of the Treasury all that the heads of their bureaus recommended an additional twenty per cent.

It seems to me it is not just, it is not right, and I think the resolution as reported from the Committee on Finance containing this exception ought to be sustained. As a matter of course, if the members of the committee vary from it first in one clause and then in another I have no hope of seeing the resolution as reported sustained. But it seems to me the resolution as it stands, giving a general increase of twenty per cent. to all whose compensation was fixed prior to 1864 and making the exceptions I have named, excluding those whose compensation has already been increased from the benefits of this addition, and excluding those who have already received a large gratuity from the funds heretofore appropriated by Congress, will be right.

It does seem to be ungracious, to use no stronger term, because clerks who have never received any benefit from the bounty of the Government are proposed to be increased in their pay, that others who have received this bounty should come forward and claim an additional sum. The resolution already provides that if the amount allotted out of this fund should be less than the twenty per cent. allowed to other clerks that deficiency shall be made up, and if the amount already received exceeds the twenty per cent. that need not be paid back from what they have received.

I shall therefore vote against this amendment, although it is an ungracious task. I do not wish to deny to the ladies employed in the bureaus at Washington the twenty per cent., and to oppose it is a very ungracious and unpleasant duty.

Many of these ladies perform the functions of regular clerks, and perhaps in equity ought to receive the pay of regular clerks; but this resolution is not founded upon that principle. If that was the recognized doctrine upon which we should legislate, we ought to provide at once that ladies employed to discharge the duties of first, second, third, and fourth class clerks should receive the pay of their respective grades, but that is not the ground on which we have placed our legislation. I think they have no cause to complain. They have already been twice dealt with according to their own desire, and they have no ground of complaint if now we refuse to extend to them this twenty per cent. The object of Congress is attained by giving to those who have never received any change in their pay a reasonable and fair increase, and that is all that is justified by the exigencies of the public service and the state of the Treasury.

I do not wish to engage further in this discussion. I shall vote for the resolution as it stands; but if these exceptions are stricken out, and if it is loaded down with other amendments that are not founded upon any distinct reason, I cannot vote for it.

Mr. YATES. I do not think the positions assumed by the Senator from Ohio are correct. I do not think that because the salaries of these clerks have been increased repeatedly at their request to meet the exigencies of the hour that is a reason why they should not receive some additional per cent. with other clerks now. If the Senator will show me that their compensation has been increased until it is equal with that of other clerks who render the same service I shall admit the fairness of his argument; but to maintain that they should not have the benefits of this resolution simply because their salaries have been increased from time to time, while admitting that they perform the same service as clerks who receive this additional per cent., is certainly not a sound argument. The Senator must show that they receive the same compensation that other clerks receive for the same service. And here, sir, I should like to see the American Congress establish the principle that labor by whomsoever performed, by man or woman, shall have its fair reward, and that female industry, female worth, perseverance, fidelity, and faithfulness in the public service shall have the same compensation as similar qualities exhibited by males. If there is to be any distinction whatever, I will unite with my honorable colleague and be as gallant as he, and say it shall be in favor of the female clerks instead of the male clerks. Women have been debarred the emoluments of labor long enough. Odious and unjust discrimination have been made against female labor long enough. Now, sir, let an example go out from the American Congress that labor performed by every one shall have its fair reward, and that there shall be perfect equality between all American citizens, without reference to color, race, or sex.

Mr. CONNESS. I most heartily concur in all that has been said by the honorable Senator from Illinois. The Senator from Ohio, it appears to me, admits the whole case in his argument. He tells us that the Finance Committee consented from time to time to certain temporary advances in favor of these ladies—

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the honorable Senator that those advances were permanent, and that their pay is fixed by permanent laws.

Mr. CONNESS. I speak of the advances made heretofore, and I understand him to say that they were upon the ground that the committee were convinced that the ladies were in many cases unable to meet their just demands. Congress yielded when the extreme necessities of these employes were presented, and that is urged now as a reason why we can go no further.

If it were proposed in this body that a day's labor in any of the Departments when performed by a man should consist of seven hours and a day's labor performed by a woman should consist of ten hours, I apprehend that it would not receive a Senator's vote; and yet you calmly advocate just as much disparity as that would be. While you admit that the value of the services of the female are equal to those of the male, you propose to give her less compensation. I do not understand the justice of such a proceeding.

It is only a little while since we had speeches made here upon a motion to extend the franchise to women, and it was argued at length that we could not deny equal rights to the female sex. Mr. President, we have a proposition before us now more practical in its character than that. It does not even reach the position whether we shall pay the female the value of her labor equally with that of the male, for that is not proposed. I am ready to vote it. I know no reason why a woman performing as much and as valuable service as a man should not receive its rightful compensation; but that point is not involved in the amendment. The question is simply whether the female clerks shall have twenty per cent. added to their salaries, which are now $800 a year less than the lowest class of male clerks have. I cannot refuse to vote it.

I know that the Senator from Ohio is careful in regard to the public expenditures, and I honor him for that; but there is such a thing as exercising care in a wrong direction, and there is sometimes such a thing as being unjust in the exercise of care, and I hope that we shall not do the injustice of refusing to vote this twenty per cent. to the class of persons in the public employment who are in every respect entitled to equal compensation, and especially entitled to our consideration and care.

Mr. DAVIS. According to my understanding there are now four classes of male clerks. The first class receives $1,200 a year; the second class $1,400; the third class $1,600; and the fourth class $1,800. The point which I wish to present for consideration is simply this: that the most efficient class of female clerks who receive the highest pay get $300 less than the first or inferior class of the male clerks. Now, I was struck very much by the view which the honorable Senator from California took of this subject in a single remark he made, and it illustrates the matter under consideration with force and truth. Suppose you were now regulating the hours of labor that should be performed by clerks and there was a proposition made that a female clerk for the same compensation should do labor three hours more than a male clerk, would there be any gentleman in the Senate or in the nation that would not be shocked with the injustice and the enormity of the proposition? It is just in substance the same.

I do not adopt any dreamy theories of my friend from Illinois, but I take a common sense, practical, and just view of the subject, and that is that the laborer is worthy of his hire or her hire, and that where a female clerk or employe does as much service as a male clerk or employe as a general principle of justice she ought to receive the same compensation. But, sir, the proposition is not so favorable to the female clerks as that. It is simply that the female clerks, who were advanced from $600 to $720 and some to $900, shall receive twenty per cent. in addition to that compensation.

Mr. President, you ought in justice and in right to these female clerks give them something like the proposed compensation or you ought to dismiss them from the public service; and if you were to dismiss them from the public service you would introduce in their stead an inferior set of clerks, who would not perform the same amount of labor nor with anything like the same carefulness and fidelity. I do think that the proposition to bring the female clerks, whose compensation is twenty-five per cent. less than that of the first class of male clerks, within the benefit of this proposition, is not even just; it is below sheer justice, and I trust the Senate will vote it down.

Now, in relation to the preferred clerks who receive the extra compensation that the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized by law for the last three or four years to pay them, I presume it was paid to them upon the ground of their great efficiency, their perfect acquaintance with the duties of their offices, and their great efficiency in their performance. I suppose that the present allowance is only what is due according to the proposed rate of increase of compensation to those very faithful and competent clerks. I therefore shall vote for that also.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose that if these words are not stricken out there will be some gentlemen excluded from the benefits of this resolution not intended by it. It will be recollected that perhaps two years ago the salaries of the Assistant Secretaries and the Assistant Postmasters General were equalized at $3,500. Some received prior to that time $4,000 and some Assistant Secretaries $3,000, and Congress equalized them all at $3,500, so that the language now used would exclude those who had $3,000 before and by that law were increased to $3,500, which would not be just if we allow the twenty per cent. to those who were reduced from $4,000 to $3,500, and I would not be satisfied to see the language of the resolution stand as it is.

I admit the force of the argument of the Senator from Ohio on the other question, the compensation to the female clerks; but I do not think that in a bill like this we can reach the question, which Congress perhaps will have at some time to consider, whether the introduction of female labor to so large an extent as we now witness into the several Departments of the Government is an advantage to the public service and brings credit upon it. That is a question upon which I think any Senator may well have his doubts; but I do not think we can adjust and settle that question upon a measure like this.

Pursuant to law these ladies are employed; they have a salary of $900; and I cannot see why, if we give twenty per cent. additional compensation to other clerks, they shall not have it. But when the question shall come up whether by the action of Congress this system of doubtful propriety, and which has been the subject of very much scandal, shall be increased, or whether the influence of Congress shall be given in favor of its gradual abandonment, it will have to be considered. My mind is not fully satisfied about it. Certainly the beautiful sentiments of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] find a response in the heart of every one of us; but it is not clear, when a man looks into some of the congressional investigations, that this system is promotive of advantage in the several Departments; but while the system stands and is recognized by law I am inclined to give them the same benefit of an increased compensation as is given to other employes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As my friend from Oregon, who has the management of this resolution in his charge, expresses his determination to recede from the position taken by the committee in reference to this matter, I certainly do not feel myself bound by anything that was done in committee on the subject; and as I perceive the general sense of the Senate is in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois, it may be well that I should give a brief account of the manner in which the committee came to the conclusion they did—and that conclusion was applicable to both clauses, the clause now under consideration, which applies to the females employed in the Departments, and the next clause, which applies to those persons who received an additional compensation out of the amount placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Senators who look at the resolution as first reported will find that it included both classes and gave the twenty per cent. to both. In that shape it was brought into the Senate. The ground taken by the committee was that although the pay of females employed in the Departments had been permanently increased to $900 a year, on the whole it would be rather invidious to make a distinction between them and others who were perhaps in the same category of having had their pay increased generally. Inasmuch as their compensation was not very high and there was great complaint in regard to the want of adequacy of the salaries, and perhaps in some degree from the consideration which has proved to be correct that it would be impossible to resist the battery of supplications and tongues that must ensue if we did not do it, we thought we might as well come down in the first instance as in the last, because we felt very certain that that would be the conclusion to which the Senate would come and we might just as well make a virtue of necessity and recommend it ourselves. That was the reasoning applicable to that particular clause.

The other clause was with regard to the twenty per cent. to those whose compensation was increased during the last year by the Secretary of the Treasury. With regard to them we supposed their pay had not been made too high by anything they had received, and that the persons who had received it ought to have had it a year before. Indeed, we lost many very valuable men in consequence of such a compensation not having been provided for them. The money had been disbursed, as we understood, on the score of the superior merit of the recipients. It was thought it would be invidious to exclude them from the bonus here proposed to be given, particularly as they were men who had rendered special valuable services, many of them extra services.

It is impossible in a measure of this kind to do exact justice. I know, and we all know, that there are in the Departments many persons, young men and others who are not so young, who now receive all they ought to receive. I refer particularly to unmarried persons and those whose services are not of the highest description and whom we could replace at any moment from the thousands of applications from men just as good as they are. Hence, in any bill giving twenty per cent. increase you will necessarily give money to persons who now receive all they ought to receive, as much as they are entitled to, and are well paid for their services; but still in a bill of this kind it is impossible to discriminate.

If you give the twenty per cent. to one, you must give it to all. You cannot discriminate between classes because some clerks in the first class are very deserving and are so situated that they ought to have it, while some in the other classes may not be entitled to it. If you cannot discriminate between them, and if you must necessarily give it to many persons who really receive as much as they ought to receive now, why should you refuse it to those who are confessedly the most meritorious and the most deserving of any persons in the Departments?

The committee, therefore, came to the conclusion that they should include both, give it to both classes, and save all complaint upon the subject. After that was done, and the resolution was brought into the Senate and was partially discussed, it was discovered that gentlemen were about to move amendments to put on a great many more whose claims were very doubtful. My friend from Ohio [Mr. WADE] spoke of adding the laborers and mechanics in the navy-yard, and the persons employed at the Printing Office, and the laborers and mechanics employed on the Capitol extension, on the Treasury extension, and some others.

If you put in all of these you would meet with infinite difficulties, and there is no knowing where to stop. They do not stand in the same category. My friend from Ohio says they do not get any too much. That is true; but they are paid by the day; they are anxious for the places; they get sure pay and the highest pay that any persons employed as they are receive anywhere else, and we were unwilling to add from three to four hundred thousand dollars, or perhaps half a million dollars, to pay extra compensation to persons who were anxious to get their places, and who were paid as well as any persons doing the same work in the country, and more surely, and who did not come at all within the category of which I have spoken.

When we found that that was the case we did not know but that something might be saved by abandoning our previous conclusion; and it was under the pressure of that idea that the honorable Senator from Oregon brought in this amendment, which was agreed to by the committee. I am in favor, as I was in the first place, of striking out this proviso, and then of striking out the following proviso, to do justice to all these men in the Departments; and I am not in favor of including these laborers and mechanics who are employed in this city in a resolution which had no reference to them and was intended to have no reference to them; and if they shall be included I shall feel compelled to vote against the whole resolution.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to strike out the last proviso, in these words:

Provided further, That all extra compensation allowed and paid to any of said persons during the current fiscal year by the head of any Department shall be taken and considered as a part of said twenty per cent., so that all of said persons shall receive twenty per cent. on their respective salaries as aforesaid, and no more; but no person shall be required to refund any sum that he may have received as aforesaid in excess of said twenty per cent. on his salary.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will be stricken out.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should not have said another word about this but for what was said by the Senator from Maine in reply to a suggestion of mine that this bonus of $160,000 had been distributed among favorites, which he refutes as he supposes by presenting a certificate from the persons who made the distribution—not the best evidence, I would remark to the Senator from Maine. Parties who made the distribution would be very likely to certify that they did not make it upon any principles of favoritism. I should have expected that; they are not the most disinterested witnesses in the world; but however they distributed it, the fact is as was stated by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] that certain clerks in the Treasury Department have received over and above their salaries bonuses varying from one hundred to six hundred dollars; and now, after they have been paid some of them as much as six hundred dollars in addition to their regular salaries, you propose to give them twenty per cent. more in this bill, which, as it is now written and reported by the committee, proposes to give something to those whose salaries have not been raised in any form. It is proposed now to go on and give the twenty per cent. additional to those who have been paid all they ought to have, because they have had a fund of $160,000 from which to draw; and this proviso declares, as it is written, that they shall not be required "to refund any sum they may have received as aforesaid in excess of said twenty per cent. on other salary," thereby admitting in the proviso as it now reads that some of these officers received out of this fund placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury already more than twenty per cent. upon their salaries.

If they have not received it the proviso as it now reads declares that they shall receive up to twenty per cent.; that they shall stand like all other clerks of the Departments. If they have not already received twenty per cent. advance upon their salaries, then this proviso as it now reads is that they shall receive it, and if they have already had the twenty per cent., and more than the twenty per cent., they shall not be called upon to refund. It does seem to me these clerks stand well enough, and this proviso ought not to be stricken out.

Mr. CATTELL. The chairman of the Finance Committee has given a very plain statement of the course of this resolution before that committee. I desire to state, as one of the members of that committee, that I was opposed to both these provisos, and that the committee, in the first instance, agreed to report the resolution without either proviso, and that at the meeting of the committee when the amendment was agreed upon, including the two provisos, I was not present, and consequently I am not responsible for their appearance here. I state this fact simply because I not only voted for striking out the first proviso, but I propose to vote for striking out the second.

In my judgment if there is any error in regard to the sum which was given to the Secretary of the Treasury for distribution among the clerks in his Department it was the error of the Congress of the United States that placed the fund in his hands. In regard to its distribution I hold that there were, and are now, in the service of the Government men of the highest ability whose salaries were fixed years ago, when a dollar was certainly equal to a dollar and a half now; and it was intended to provide for the fact that in order to retain the valuable services of this class of men in the service of the Government it became necessary in some form or other to provide additional compensation for them. It was not thought proper to enter into a revision of the whole system of pay in the Executive Departments of the Government, and Congress in its wisdom chose to adopt this plan of placing a sum in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury for distribution in accordance with his judgment among the most worthy in the service.

Now, I take the ground that the distribution of this money by the Secretary of the Treasury, if done with judgment, was pay for absolute extra valuable services rendered by the gentlemen to whom the compensation went; that it was for services done and rendered up to that time; that it was a compensation absolutely due to them for the faithfulness and ability with which they had performed their duty. I hold, therefore, that having paid these individuals compensation for extra, faithful service which they had performed, when we come to decide the question whether extra compensation shall be given to the entire clerical force you are not to take back from them what you once gave them for services actually performed.

I stated before the committee, as an illustration of this position, that it was the habit of the board of directors of the bank over which I have the honor to preside, during this period, when everything in the way of living has been so expensive, to vote an appropriation to be placed in my hands, as president, for distribution among the most faithful and deserving of the clerks of the bank. I sought out such of them as had families and were faithful, and whom I knew the salaries were scarcely adequate to maintain in comfort and independence. But when we came, as is our practice at Christmas day, to make an addition of some percentage to the salary of all the clerks in the bank, we did not stop to inquire how much the president had given to this one or to that one for his extra faithful services; but, disposed to do a generous and a proper thing, we adopted a resolution to give each the same percentage upon his salary; and I never yet, among the clerks in that establishment, heard a single murmur from any of them that the pay which others had received for their extra, faithful service should be deducted out of the percentage which was given to all of them. I hope that if this resolution is passed at all, if the Congress of the United States want to do a just and generous thing, they will not stop to inquire whether Mr. McCulloch has paid an extra allowance to some persons employed in his Department, who have been faithful to their trust, who have been extraordinarily so, and whose services and signal abilities perhaps could not have been retained but for these extra allowances, and that we shall not require that to be deducted from the general advance which we now propose to make.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is perhaps due to myself that I should say a word or two, as it seems that the responsibility of the change has been thrown upon me by the members of the committee. I was in favor, in the first place, of one of two policies in reference to this compensation. One was to confine this additional compensation to all persons whose salaries were fixed by law, and adopt that as the rule by which the allowance should be made; but if there was any departure from that rule, then all persons in the service of the Government in the city of Washington, whether their salaries were fixed by law or not, should be included; so that there should be some rule by which this compensation should be governed, and not to apply the twenty per cent. to those whose salaries were fixed by law and then pick out a certain number of persons whose pay was not fixed by law and give them twenty per cent., and exclude all others. That was the position I occupied as an individual upon the subject. I was willing to take either ground; but I desired to stand upon some ground where I could maintain myself. It would be consistent to confine this compensation to all persons whose salaries are fixed by law and exclude all others, or it would be right that all should be paid without reference to the manner in which they received their compensation.

When the resolution was reported from the Finance Committee I found that there were persons named in it whose salaries were not fixed by law and a large number of others excluded who were equally meritorious and whose salaries were not fixed by law. Hence it became necessary to reconsider the subject; and the resolution in the form in which it is now pending was as I understand the judgment of the committee in reference to the mode in which the compensation should be made, and I so reported it, although I am free to say that at the time and since the resolution has never been entirely expressive of my individual views on this question; but I acted as the organ of the committee, supposing that a resolution in this shape was the expression of the views of a majority of the committee.

As to this motion, I have simply to say that I am apprehensive that it will, if it prevails, defeat the resolution, because I am very confident that there are many persons who will not vote for it if this clause or something like it is not retained. The extra compensation paid by the Secretary of the Treasury has undoubtedly been paid to the most deserving in the Treasury Department, but they have received during the fiscal year from one hundred to seven hundred and fifty dollars. Some of them have received $750 out of this fund during the present year.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Those are the highest officers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, the highest officers who receive the highest pay. Out of the $250,000 and the $160,000 fund some have received $1,000, some $1,500, and some as high as $2,000. I admit that those persons who received this extra compensation have more responsibilities, more talent, are required to discharge higher duties than those who received less compensation; and I would not object to an amendment providing that those persons who have received one or two hundred dollars should be included in this resolution, and that all who received over two hundred dollars should be excluded. If you undertake to include within this resolution those who have already received $500, $600, or $750, I am apprehensive that it will be a great burden and possibly defeat the whole measure. That is one reason why I think it not advisable to adopt the amendment, not that it may not be right enough in itself.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the honorable member be so kind as to inform me whether twenty per cent. is on the salary proper or on the salary with the temporary increase added?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon the salary proper, not upon the temporary increase.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon if I understood him correctly as saying that as much as $2,000 of this fund was paid to some clerks as extra compensation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say that out of the fund of $250,000 and $160,000 appropriated in 1865 and 1866 some clerks have received as high as $2,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And now it is proposed to give this increase to those who have already had $2,000 extra compensation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a mistake. Let the Senator give the names and it will be seen how the fact is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state how I make it out. I hold in my hand a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of 10th December, relative to the disbursement of the funds appropriated as extra compensation to clerks of the Treasury Department, and on the second page I find a "list of the temporary clerks in the Treasury Department who have been paid out of the $250,000 appropriated by act of March 2, 1865, and $160,000 appropriated by act July 23, 1866, for the payment of temporary clerks in the Treasury Department, and additional compensation to clerks in same Department up to and including November 30, 1866."

Now follows a list. A very large proportion of these clerks have received over $1,000. Mr. W. A. Dumphy has received $2,117 80, and many have received $1,200; one clerk, (Mr. William Fessenden,) $1,943 37; and other clerks have received $900, $1,000, $1,100, and $1,200.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is in two years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say out of the two funds. I am honestly in favor of this resolution; I am anxious to see these clerks get some additional compensation; and I simply make this objection because I am apprehensive that if this clause is entirely stricken out and these persons who have received this large additional compensation included it will make the resolution so objectionable, if not here elsewhere, as to defeat its passage.

Mr. CRAGIN. There is one view of this case that has not been clearly presented, as it seems to me. This resolution is to go back in its operation to the 30th day of June last and to continue for one year. Since the 30th of June last only about six months have elapsed, and these clerks to whom allusion has been made who have been paid out of this fund have received pay for only two quarters of the year. Now, if this provision here remains I understand they are not to receive anything whatever out of this fund for the next two quarters; and if it should be stricken out it will make but very little difference with the present fiscal year whether they receive the extra compensation as contemplated by the money that was placed in the Secretary's hands or whether they now be paid twenty per cent. Having received their pay for the two quarters, the twenty per cent. now added, leaving out their pay under the money appropriated for the other two quarters, will place them almost precisely as though they had received their pay for the four quarters of the year, nothing being said about this twenty per cent.

There is another thing. You will recollect, sir, that near the close of the last session of Congress we voted to pay $100 each to the first and second class clerks. Now if this provision is not stricken out, that $100 will be deducted from their twenty per cent. under this resolution, and I submit to Senators whether that would be right and proper.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I do not partake of the apprehensions of the honorable Senator from Oregon, that the adoption of this amendment will defeat this measure. All that I find in the argument of the Senator from Illinois on this subject is this: that because Congress has heretofore done partial justice to a few clerks we shall now do less than justice to them. That is his argument as I see it and understand it. Because a few clerks have received the compensations stated we are to do injustice to a great many clerks and pay them less than they should have.

Mr. President, for two years I had the honor of a seat in the committee of which the distinguished Senator from Maine is chairman. It was during two years of the war. During that time the most valuable clerks in the Treasury and other Departments, but particularly in the Treasury, left the public employ, being offered and constantly receiving as they did higher compensation for their labor from banks, insurance companies, and private business firms in the country. We were told again and again, and notified by the head of the Treasury Department and by the heads of bureaus in that Department, that unless an advance was made they could not keep men whose services were a necessity to the Government. It was by reason of those constant applications and statements authoritatively made that this system that is now so much condemned, of making an appropriation and placing it within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, was resorted to, because we could not at that time resort to a general advance of the compensation of clerks. The Treasury we thought could not bear it; and therefore it was deemed necessary to make an appropriation which should be divided in a great measure among the most valuable clerks in the Department, that they might be kept in the public service. Now, two years or a year after that measure of justice has been performed it is argued here that we shall do less than justice to-night. I do not understand the logic. I cannot understand why, if we have given something because of the deserts of those men, we shall now play the Indian giver, and, as it were, take it back again by refusing to give them the compensation which we are extending to other clerks.

The honorable Senator from Illinois shows great zeal in this matter. It is well to have zeal in behalf of the Treasury; but it appears to me that it were better exercised otherwise than against those men who perform valuable services for the Government. It was well stated by the honorable Senator from Maine that the worst feature of this resolution is that it proposes to give the twenty per cent. to a set of clerks in all the Departments who are not worthy of it. I mean the first-class clerks, many of whom get as much as they deserve, who have no families to support, nobody depending on them, who can live well, if they live properly, upon $1,200 per annum; but no distinction can be made, and that to my mind is the evil of this measure of relief to the clerks. But it cannot be avoided; it must be done; for there are among those twelve hundred dollar clerks many men of superior capacity and of great necessity—men called upon to maintain families in this District, to educate, feed, and clothe children. But, sir, as to this proposition whether we shall refuse to give this advance of twenty per cent. to a worthy and superior class of men because we have rendered them already in the past a partial measure of justice, I cannot understand the force of the logic nor the justice of the proposition.

Mr. POMEROY. I did not intend to say a word on this subject, but I have such respect for first-class clerks that I do not like to hear it said that they have more than they are entitled to.

Mr. CONNESS. It was not so stated.

Mr. POMEROY. Sir, in my opinion many of the most deserving men in the Departments and the most competent officers will be found among the first-class clerks. Many of them have served there faithfully year after year, doing the same work and sometimes more than the second and third and even the fourth-class clerks; and they are certainly as much entitled and even more than the other classes of clerks to this twenty per cent. I am decidedly in favor of the first-class clerks having something in this resolution. I have known the history of many of them, and it has been a history of neglect and even of suffering; and in the most uncomplaining manner they have year by year discharged their duties and have had no friend to intercede for them, and they will remain first-class clerks. Many of them have been contented with that position. What I rose to say was, that if we are to give this twenty per cent., as I think we ought to do, it is especially due to those who have in a quiet manner performed their duty as first-class clerks without extra compensation.

I do not suppose that this extra compensation has been paid where it was not deserved, as a general thing. I have entire confidence in the manner in which the fund has been administered; but I have noticed that a good many of our men last year, before the fall election, found their places so uncomfortable that they left the Departments. Some resigned; I do not know that any were turned out; but I learn that when their places came to be filled they were not filled with the same kind of men, politically, as went out. This compensation, reaching back to the 1st of July, does not relieve at all those men who left the service, either because they were requested to resign or because they thought their duties to the country were such that they could not stay. I suppose the extra compensation was distributed all right; but I have to say about it that the lower grades, called the first and second class, commend themselves peculiarly to me; and those who have had this extra compensation, in my opinion, have not been in all instances the most deserving.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President; about the close of the last Congress a special committee was raised for the purpose of reorganizing the Interior Department. The chairmen of the various committees in this body who deal particularly with the bureaus in that Department constituted that committee. I was upon that committee, and remember very well that the heads of the bureaus of the Interior Department were called before the committee and gave their testimony in relation to the operations of their various bureaus. I remember very well that the heads of those bureaus stated that since the commencement of Mr. Lincoln's administration the clerks under them, especially in the land department, had changed twice, because, after being a time in the Department, and becoming experienced and having the knowledge which was necessary to discharge its duties, they became so capable and were in such demand elsewhere that it was impossible for them to be retained in the Department. The committee accordingly reported a bill for the reorganization of that Department, which passed the Senate, but which was not acted upon in the House.

It was to prevent just that operation in the Treasury Department that Congress thought proper to put this fund at the disposal of the Department, to hold it as an inducement and as a consideration for distribution among the meritorious and laborious clerks performing the great duties of the Department, to be distributed for that purpose, and to retain them in the service. Again and again it was urged upon Congress by the heads of those bureaus that they would lose their best clerks, and the service of the Government would be very much damaged by their leaving, and this fund was placed at the control of the Department for the purpose of preventing that.

I shall not say anything in reference to the distribution of that fund. The statement of the heads of the bureaus is sufficient for me. But I wish to say a word in answer to the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Illinois, that they, having made the distribution, would as a matter of course say they had made that distribution without any favoritism. Certainly, they made the distribution without any political favoritism toward the Secretary of the Treasury, for, as we all know very well, almost all those heads of bureaus politically were opposed to the views of the Secretary of the Treasury, and they are the persons who made the distribution; so that political favoritism was impossible in the mode in which the fund was distributed. That the fund should have been distributed with a certain degree of favoritism, but a just favoritism, on the part of the heads of bureaus I do not doubt. They were to distribute this fund by favoring those who deserved the favor which the Government held out for the meritorious labor, responsibility, and work which they performed. It was distributed in that way.

Now, Mr. President, I ask, when that inducement has been held out to those men as the consideration of their staying, as the consideration of their performing this meritorious work, and has been paid to them for this meritorious work, is that any reason, if Congress conclude on the whole that all the salaries of these clerks are too low by twenty per cent., and we make a universal increase of salary to the amount of twenty per cent., that the salaries of these men shall not be increased for the future? I see no reason in it at all. If we increase the salaries of all twenty per cent., and these men are reduced to the twenty per cent. increase also, where is your pay for their meritorious services? Where is the reward of merit? Where is the just favoritism which rightfully belongs to them for the meritorious services they perform? It seems to me—I cannot look at it in any other light—that if you retain this proviso and reduce these men to precisely the same footing of all the rest your pay for their meritorious services is gone.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from California seems to suppose that I have manifested a great deal of zeal in reference to this matter. He is certainly capable of judging, for he is entirely cool and manifests no interest and no zeal about it at all. His indifference enables him to determine whether any one else is zealous or not.

I quite agree with what the Senator from Kansas said about the first-class clerks. I think them just as deserving as any other men in the Departments. Many of them are performing the duties which ought to be performed by second and third class clerks on their salaries of $1,200, and many of them are just as competent and performing just as important duties.

One word also in regard to this question of favoritism. I see in the official document which was brought into the Senate by the Senator from Oregon a statement of the persons who received a part of this fund placed in the Secretary of the Treasury's hands to be distributed; and the Senator from Maine brings in a certificate of certain gentlemen—I do not remember all the names of the gentlemen upon that certificate, but I remember some of them—in which they say that the fund was properly distributed, and not according to favoritism at all. Well, perhaps it was; but who were the gentlemen that said that? If I remember rightly R. W. Taylor was one who said it, and he received out of that fund $375; J. M. Brodhead said it, and he got a part of it; T. L. Smith said it, and he got a part of it; E. B. French said it, and he received a portion; John Wilson certified to it, and he got a part; N. Sargent certified to it, and he received a portion; Edward Jordan certified to the fact, and he received a part. No doubt all of them thought it was very proper legislation. [Great laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. SHERMAN. There is but one fact more which I wish to state, and that is in regard to the report which has been referred to, and which seems to have misled the astute Senator from Illinois. He says that Mr. Such-a-one received $250. That is only for one quarter. All the heads of bureaus received $1,000 for the current fiscal year. Two hundred and fifty dollars was paid to them, according to the statement before me, for a quarter. I only wish to say in addition that the heads of the bureaus having received from one thousand to fifteen hundred dollars they are in the course of receiving it for this current fiscal year. Some Senators suppose that this allowance made by the Treasury Department was for years gone by, and is not for the same period of time that is covered by the appropriation we are now making; but it is. The first allowance did not extend, if I remember aright, to the officers of the Department. The Senator from Maine will recollect whether that is so. I think the first allowance was for the clerks, and did not go to the officers who signed that paper. The second allowance, which was made last session, went to all the officers, clerks, and employes of the Treasury Department. The effect will be, if this resolution should pass without this proviso, that in addition to the $1,000 already given to these heads of bureaus you will give them $700 more. That is the only question. It seems to me that having received no more than I think is fairly due them, but all they claimed, and all that the Secretary of the Treasury thought they ought to have, because he has not distributed all this money, it is certainly no hardship for them to wait until all the other clerks and employes have got only a portion of what they themselves have received before they ask anything more.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If I recollect correctly, this appropriation of $160,000 to be expended at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury was given to him to compensate and to secure the best service in his Department. I think I recollect that one of the Senators connected with the Finance Committee stated that that Department had difficulty in retaining the services of many of the most valuable clerks; that being skillful business men their services were sought for by large enterprises in the country, such as railroads, banks, and the like; and in order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to retain their services at the time this fund was placed in his hands. That was upon a particular ground as I have stated. Now, this resolution goes upon the proposition that the salaries of the clerks and other employes in this city ought to be increased. I cannot see why the fact that some have received a part of that fund, under the exercise of the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, should impair their right to a percentage upon their salary with all the other employes. As has been stated, if we adopt that idea we simply take back from them that which it was thought good policy to give them a year ago.

I do not know of any Senator more skillful in debate than the Senator from Illinois; but I do not think that skill in debate altogether compensates for exact fairness and candor in debate. That Senator and other Senators made an attack upon the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject of the distribution of this $160,000. Upon that subject I have got just this to say: I do not think any man can distribute a fund of that kind and not have fault found with him. Among the three or four thousand clerks in this city who would get no part of it there would be almost that number of accusers against him. But when the charge is completely met as against the Secretary of the Treasury, when there is not a clear foot of logical ground for the Senator to stand upon in his accusation against the Secretary himself, he then turns around upon the gentlemen who have exonerated the Secretary from all responsibility about the matter.

I am in no position requiring me to defend those gentlemen who have written the letter which has been read to the Senate. I believe I am in political sympathy with scarcely any of them; but I have heard that they are able officers. Was it not striking that with a sneer the Senator from Illinois should read the name of Mr. Taylor, the First Comptroller? I believe Mr. Taylor, the First Comptroller, is the most radical of all Radicals, so far as I have heard; but in the discharge of his duty I have never heard that he was not a just and fair man. Is it not just for him to have a portion of this fund? He gets a salary fixed a number of years ago; I believe $3,500. Does the Senator from Illinois claim that it was wrong for him to have a portion of this money that was to be distributed according to the efficiency of the employes?

Then what is the purpose of the Senator's reference to the report? Is it to cast discredit upon these bureau officers because they received a part of the fund, or is it the Senator's purpose to discredit them as witnesses when they vindicate so completely the Secretary of the Treasury from every charge that has been made against him on this subject? When there is no ground left to stand upon with regard to the charge made against the Secretary, then a sneer is to be made against the Comptrollers and Auditors because of the testimony they voluntarily give in favor of the Secretary and to acquit him entirely of a charge that was groundless and wrong. I never did in my life against a political opponent desire to avail myself of that which was not right. When I see the party with which I am associated succeed I want it to be upon a ground that is satisfactory, not only to my judgment, but to my conscience; and I believe I have never yet in my life made a charge directly or by insinuation, by sneer, or by any other means that I did not believe to be true and right.

Now, Mr. President, I suppose it is perfectly right that the heads of these bureaus shall have a part of this fund. They have to select among their clerks who shall receive it. They make their report to the Secretary and he approves it. So far as the heads of bureaus receiving any of this fund is concerned of course the responsibility of that is upon the Secretary. He had to decide upon their report so far as all the clerks of the Department are concerned. If any of them have not been well treated they must look to the heads of their bureaus. I was once connected with a bureau in this city which had a clerical force of one hundred and eighty, and I can say that no man can in every respect do full justice to all the clerks in his bureau; it is impossible.

Allusion has been made to the fact that first-class clerks frequently discharge duties that properly belong to the second and third classes. That of necessity must be the case, because the law usually provides a larger number of the first class than of the third or fourth class. The work must be done, and the head of the bureau must assign to the duty whatever force and labor is at his command, and frequently he has to employ upon higher labors gentlemen who are paid only as first-class clerks. It is a necessity resulting from the organization of the Departments under the laws of Congress. Very efficient services are oftentimes found among the first-class clerks and very good clerks; I have no doubt about that, and oftentimes also clerks that are not very valuable.

I wish we could, in the distribution of this fund, give it to the industrious and the careful clerks. If we could thus discriminate I would be glad to do it. But we cannot. We must legislate upon some general principle; and I know of no other mode than to give a percentage upon their salaries. Some will receive money when they do not deserve it. Others, in my judgment, will not get as much as they ought to have. This is the difficulty incident to the subject itself, and I do not see how we can avoid it. Oftentimes clerks are forced upon the Departments by political influence. They get promotion frequently because of political influence. It is not for members of Congress to criticise any Secretary or head of a bureau because of that. The Secretaries and the heads of bureaus are dependent upon Congress to a very great extent, and Senators go to them and demand the promotion of their friends and the appointment of their friends, men who have fought their battles at home, and these Secretaries and heads of bureaus are brought under congressional influence to a greater extent than they ought to be. The remedy is not in the Departments; it is in Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON. You do not mean to include all Senators?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No; I do not mean to include all Senators. I believe I did get a couple of clerks appointed last year. They had just been discharged from the Army. They were a couple of captains from the State of Indiana, who were discharged here and did not happen to have much money on hand. I got them clerkships, or rather got them suggested for clerkships, but when they were examined they did not pass the examination; so I believe I am responsible for none now. [Laughter.] I wish they had got the appointments. But I intend to do what I think is just in this business. I know something of the ability in these Departments. I have seen talent in these Departments that could have carried men to the highest positions in the States, to the highest business positions, to the highest political positions, if they had not buried themselves in the Departments. I see talent and learning and ability in these Departments and bureaus; but when once they get in there men see no opening and no avenue if they leave their positions, and they think they are perfectly helpless and dependent if they are turned out of office. It is a misfortune to them that that impression should rest on their minds, for if they had the courage to break the bands and go out and struggle in the avenues of life, in all the pursuits that are opened up to the enterprising and the talented in this country, they would succeed well enough; but when they once get into an office here they think there is no other place for them to live on earth. That is their misfortune. But they do bring talent to the Government of great service and great value, and I am not going in any votes I give to be niggardly in compensating for that service.

Allow me to say in reply to the Senator from Kansas that upon this question I am not going to inquire what are the politics of a clerk. I did not do much of that when I was at the head of a bureau here with one hundred and eighty clerks in that bureau. The inquiries I made were, "Is your work up? Are you serving the people? Are titles secured to the people's lands through your instrumentality?" It is news to me that there have been some gentlemen in the Departments so sensitive that they could not remain there during the last year. I did not hear of that until the Senator from Kansas suggested it, that the politics of the President and of the Secretaries were so objectionable to them that their sensibilities were entirely overcome and they resigned. [Laughter.] My impression is that Barnum could make money out of just such a man if he could find him. I have not heard of any such. My opinion is, from all the information I have on the subject, that in the Departments in Washington there are six men opposed to the President where there is one in his favor to-day; that in the Department of the Treasury there are six men opposed to the President where there is one in his favor. I am not advised as to the politics of the ladies.

Mr. RAMSEY. Does not the Senator know that there is a larger proportion outside of the Departments standing about in that relation to the President? [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator makes a remark that delights the gallery, but it is a remark that is not supported by the facts. Last year when the contest was made before the people, out of four million voters eighteen hundred thousand men indorsed the President.

That is not six out of seven, I guess; and with such a large support in the country I have thought he ought to have some support in his Departments; but he and the Secretaries think otherwise, and it is for them to decide. I have no concern about that. No political party ever was built up in this country, in my judgment, by the influences that went out from these Departments.

I think good manners would require that the gentlemen in the different Departments should not avail themselves of their positions, either by word of mouth or by communications sent to the newspapers, to abuse and traduce the President and the Secretary that continues them in office. I think that is good manners, common decency, just that sort of common decency that forbids a man to abuse the person who entertains him, or the person from whom he receives a kindness. But if any persons will render good service in the Department, and at the same time abuse the Secretary, and the Secretary can stand it, I am very sure I can; and that shall not influence my vote. I think instead of the criticism of the Senator from Kansas being just the thing is altogether the other way. These Departments are filled by men who are opposed to the President and the Secretaries to a very large extent; and I vote just as cheerfully, knowing that fact, for this relief as if the fact were otherwise. I do not make an inquiry about the like of that. The question is: ought these men to have an additional compensation? I think they ought, and therefore I support it.

Mr. WILSON. I hope at this hour that we shall proceed to take the vote. It seems to me that we are well enlightened on this great question that we have had before us this evening. We have some other questions before Congress besides this question of giving a gratuity to the clerks in this city. I think we understand it, and I suppose all of us are for it, and I hope we shall not act niggardly, but act generously. As it is a mere gratuity, let us give it without grudging. I should like to have the vote now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to accommodate my friend by taking the vote now, but I have a few words to say, and I feel bound to say them. When this fund was given the last time the Senator from Ohio will very well recollect that we purposely put in the word "officers" in order to include the heads of bureaus. We came to the conclusion that we could not permanently raise their salaries, but that they ought for that year, and in fact for the year before, to be paid more; their salaries ought to be increased; and for that purpose we resorted to the word "officers," and put it into the appropriation.

The Secretary of the Treasury so understood it, that it was intended that these heads of bureaus should be included. There was a reason for it. I knew very well that if we did not do anything we should lose some of the most valuable officers. Mr. Taylor, who has been spoken of, had given notice that he would not stay in the Department. He is one of the most valuable men connected with the Government. He saves this Government tens of thousands of dollars, I have no doubt, every year. He is a very able man. He would do honor and credit to this Senate if he were a member of it. He is a man of great, known, stern integrity, one of the most valuable men that I know. Well, sir, I know another head of a bureau who was offered not long since $10,000 a year to leave his bureau and go into a firm of claim agents in this city, and just give them his name and information and do nothing. He declined. That is the case with these men, sir; and it will not be a very severe business if they should get for this year a sum up to $4,500 or even $5,000. I have no misgivings about it, and I think they ought to have it.

As to the amounts that were allowed to these gentlemen themselves, I presume they did not fix that; that was fixed by the Secretary. I do not think it was fixed any too high. I think it a little hard that men of their known positions, many of them our friends, known radicals of the sternest sort, who never have compromised their opinions in the slightest possible degree, should be sneered at as if their opinions and statements could be bought for a few hundred dollars. I have not that opinion of any hardly of the Republicans that I know, and I do not believe it even of the Democrats in the Departments.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator from Illinois gave the Senate several examples of heads of bureaus who had voted to themselves certain sums of this contingent fund, as he expressed it, and said no doubt each of those gentlemen thought that that money was well appropriated. The honorable Senator from Maine says, I have no doubt truly, that this money was not voted by those gentlemen to themselves, but it was given them by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury. But if it had been in the line named by the honorable Senator from Illinois, I could give him some other instances of the same character. There are certain officers of the Government who, some months since, received $3,000 compensation a year; they voted to themselves $5,000. Among the gentlemen that gave that vote was the honorable Senator from Illinois and myself, [laughter,] and I suppose we both thought that the money was well voted, and that we were entitled to it when we received it. I thought so at least. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to strike out the last proviso in the joint resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—ayes 24, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Ross, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Wilson, and Yates—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Fogg, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Pomeroy, Sherman, Trumbull, and Williams—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Howe, Kirkwood, Nesmith, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Stewart—18.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I now move to amend the resolution in line eighteen, by inserting after the word "meters" the words "and also to the laborers and employes of the Washington navy-yard."

Mr. RAMSEY. Would you not put in the arsenal?

Mr. WADE. That will follow as a matter of course if this shall be adopted.

Mr. President, early in the evening, when the amendment in regard to the arsenal was under consideration I said about all I wished to say on this subject; but I confess now, with all the light we have had by the debates that have been had, I am not able to see why the class of laborers for whom I am now advocating an increase of pay are not as worthy as any others that you have provided for. I hardly see upon what principle it is that we can select out a certain number of laborers whose labor is not half as onerous and repulsive, if I may so express myself, as the labor of those the increase of whose wages I now stand here to advocate. I say that the hard-hand day-laborer is just as worthy of having his wages enhanced as any man that employs himself in any other way. It is very true that his habits of life are very different from those who receive these higher salaries, and he can make himself comfortable on a very small portion of what they will expend to make them equally so; but I cannot understand why we should entirely overlook their condition and grant these favors to those who have the most, unless you are really proceeding upon what is sometimes called the scriptural rule: "For he that hath, to him shall be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath." I say, again, there is no reason in this limitation.

We have been told that the committee have agreed that they would restrict this increase to the city of Washington. Now, sir, what kind of a principle is that? Does it not cost as much for a man to support himself and his family and to educate his children at the navy-yard down here as it does in the city of Washington? If it does not, there is a reason why you should make the distinction; but unless it can be shown that there is that difference, there is no distinction in principle, and you ought to award this small pittance to these persons as well as to those for whom you have already provided. I hope it will be done.

Mr. WILSON. Be brief. Let us have a vote; it is late.

Mr. WADE. I know it is late, and I know how impatient some gentlemen are when I stand forth here as the advocate of those not very well calculated to advocate their own claims. When Senators were advocating the claims of those who receive four or five thousand dollars a year, that was all very well; you could sit very patiently under their preaching just as long as they pleased to talk; but the moment a man gets up here and demands justice for those who receive but very little consideration at all events, we are called to a halt at once; the time seems very heavy on our hands.

Now, Mr. President, I know that the committee who prepared this resolution have said that it was not the principle on which they graduated it to extend its benefits to this class of employés; but they have entirely failed to inform us why they did not embrace them as well as anybody else. I hope we shall do it. I am in earnest about it, because I feel that they have been overlooked. They are a meritorious class of people; their condition is hard at the best, and the small pittance that they will get under my amendment, as I said before, will go a great way with them and will cost the Government but very little. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I am sorry if I have in any way offended the Senator from Ohio. I have been very anxious for the last hour and a half to come to votes on these questions, and I am ready to vote with the Senator most heartily. But it is now after ten o'clock at night; we are exhausting ourselves here, and are unfitting ourselves for the labors of to-morrow. We have a great amount of labor to do between now and the 4th of March; and I only suggested to the Senator to be brief, because there are several amendments to be offered, and I hope we shall get the votes on them to-night. I voted with the Senator to include the arsenal. I am now ready to vote with him to include the navy-yard. All I want is to get a vote. I think the Senator was a little unkind and a little unjust; but I know his earnest way, and I have no feeling about it.

Mr. WADE. I have no unkind feelings toward the gentleman, nor did I suppose I spoke harshly of him; but I thought it a little extraordinary, after the Senator had been so patient under the long speeches that have been made, that the moment I rose in behalf of these poor people I should be called to a halt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think if these incidental side issues were omitted, and the discussion confined to the questions before the Senate, very much time would be saved. I simply make that suggestion. I think I can give the Senate some information on this subject; otherwise I should not trespass upon its time.

"By the act of July 1852, the wages of the employés in the navy-yards are to conform, as nearly as consistent, with those of private yards in the immediate vicinity of the respective yards. Under this law boards have been appointed at intervals of two months to ascertain the rates of wages paid by private establishments near the yards. By the rates so ascertained the wages of the several classes of workmen in the yards have been regulated. Through this law the rates of wages in the yards have changed or varied to suit those paid outside. They have advanced with the advance of labor in similar departments of private establishments. The mechanics have been vigilant to see that justice was meted to them under the law, and are always ready to demand it if not done."

Now, sir, I have a table here exhibiting the rise in the wages of these persons employed in the Washington navy-yard for a period of six years; and I will give a few specimens to show that great injustice has not been done to these workmen and laborers in the navy-yard. Take, for instance, the carpenters. In 1860 they received from one dollar and eighty cents to two dollars and twenty-five cents per day; in 1861 from two dollars to two dollars and fifty cents; in 1862 from one dollar and seventy-five cents to two dollars and fifty cents; in 1863 from two dollars to two dollars and seventy-five cents; in 1864 from two dollars and fifty cents to three dollars; in 1865 from three dollars and twenty-five cents to three dollars and fifty cents; in 1866 from three dollars and twenty-five cents to three dollars and fifty cents; so that their wages have greatly increased as prices have advanced. And so with the smiths, the joiners, the painters, the machinists, the boiler-makers, the iron-founders, the bricklayers, and the laborers; their wages have doubled since 1860.

There is a reason, notwithstanding what the Senator from Ohio says, why these persons should not be embraced within the provisions of this resolution, and the reason is given in the paper which I have read. There are persons appointed to ascertain if their wages are as high as the wages paid to workmen engaged in private establishments, and if they are found not to be so high, those who have the superintendence of the yard have the power to raise their wages, and they have raised their wages as circumstances have required. If the workmen and laborers in the navy-yard are to be included, then those in the arsenal, those in the Government Printing Office, and those on the Treasury and Capitol extensions must also be included. According to the computation which I have made—of course I cannot be exactly correct—this amendment, if it is carried to its legitimate results, will increase the appropriation made by this resolution nearly half a million dollars simply to add twenty per cent. to the wages of the workmen, laborers, and employés about the city of Washington. There are twelve hundred men employed in the navy-yard; hundreds are employed in the arsenal; hundreds upon the Capitol and Treasury extensions; five or six hundred are employed in the Government Printing Office; and it is very easy to see that this sum would accumulate with great rapidity.

The main reason why they should not be included is that these persons are employed by the Government as they are employed by other persons. Their wages are fixed by those who employ them; and they can be raised whenever the circumstances require it. They are paid the highest wages that are paid to similar workmen anywhere, and the Government is more punctual than any private person in the payment of its debts to them. There is no particular reason why they should be paid this twenty per cent. and their wages thus advanced over those of persons engaged in similar employment in private establishments. Although this resolution does in some cases unavoidably embrace persons whose salaries are not fixed by law, yet the theory upon which it proceeds is that the compensation of the employés in the different Departments has been fixed by law and therefore cannot be changed so as to accommodate the salaries to the change in circumstances and expenses, and for that reason this twenty per cent. is proposed to be paid upon upon their salaries.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 10, noes 21.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend the amendment by inserting in the eighteenth line after the word "meters" the words "the lieutenants, sergeants, and privates of the Metropolitan police;" and I desire to say a word in reference to this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the honorable Senator will allow me to make an explanation, I think I can save time by so doing.

Mr. POLAND. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to say that the Metropolitan police were originally included in this resolution, and the words were taken out at their solicitation, because they proposed to have a separate law passed organizing the Metropolitan police, and a delegate, as he represented himself to me, from the Metropolitan police, one of the officers, came to me and requested that the words be stricken out of the resolution, and in accordance with that request they have been omitted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state further that in a bill that we passed last week we added fifty per cent. to the remuneration of the Metropolitan police on their present pay, to be levied by the authorities of the District. They are taken care of, and have all that they asked.

Mr. POLAND. What the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Maine say is all very well as far as it goes. Who it was that represented the Metropolitan police to the Senator from Oregon I do not know. I move this amendment at the solicitation and upon the representations made to me by several members of the Metropolitan police. I have made some examination in reference to the increase of their pay, and am prepared to state how that matter is, and to show whether it is proper and necessary that this twenty per cent. should be added to their pay or not.

Prior to the last session of Congress the pay of the members of the Metropolitan police was sixty dollars a month, and in addition to that they were provided with two suits of police uniform in each year. During the last session of Congress it was provided that fifty per cent. should be added to the pay of the members of the Metropolitan police; but by the same bill they were deprived of these two suits at the expense of the Government, the result of which was that that act made, in point of fact, but very little addition to the pay they had previously received. It was further provided by the bill that was passed at the last session granting them this fifty per cent., which raised their pay to ninety dollars a month, that the additional thirty dollars a month should be paid by a tax upon the District, upon the cities of Washington and Georgetown. The amount of their pay out of the Treasury of the United States was not increased at all.

Last week we passed another bill making precisely the same provision for the present year, raising their pay to ninety dollars a month, and providing that the additional thirty dollars a month should be paid by the cities of Washington and Georgetown. The amount of their pay from the national Government has not been increased at all, and the increase of thirty dollars a month takes the place of the two suits of police uniform that they previously received. Their pay, then, is ninety dollars a month.

Mr. WILSON. Let us have a vote.

Mr. POLAND. One word more, sir, and I shall not detain the Senator from Massachusetts or anybody else by making a long speech. These men work double the number of hours that the lowest class of clerks in the Departments do, who receive $1,200. The amount that they are paid is less than that of the lowest class of clerks in any of the Departments. They work in the cold and in the heat, in the summer and in the winter, in fair weather and in stormy weather, and certainly they deserve quite as much compensation as the lowest class of clerks in any of the Departments, and the additional payment that has been made to them does not make them up by a considerable sum to that amount. It seems to me but just that they should receive it.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 11, noes 16.

Mr. YATES. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "meters" in the eighteenth line the words "the employés of the Senate and House of Representatives." I have offered this amendment because I cannot see the reason or the propriety of the discrimination against this class of laborers and clerks; I mean the employés of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We increased their pay last year twenty per cent., and it is a standing increase.

Mr. YATES. With the consent of the Senate, I will modify my amendment by moving to insert after the word "meters" in line eighteen the words "the employés of the Senate and House of Representatives whose salaries do not exceed $1,500 per annum."

I offer this amendment because I happen to know personally a good many clerks who have families and who do good service, faithful and efficient services. I think the amendment is entirely proper. I think we ought not to discriminate against this class of men. When you have provided for the laborers and clerks in every other Department, the Navy Department, the War Department, the Paymaster General's office, the Quartermaster General's office, &c., I think this large class of men in the employment of the Senate and House of Representatives should not be overlooked. We have been liberal to ourselves in increasing our own pay; we have been providing for the clerks and laborers in every other Department; and I cannot see why there should be any discrimination against this class. I believe I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon the proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. Every clerk and employé about the Senate and the House receives now twenty per cent. upon his salary, precisely the same amount that we propose to pay to the clerks and employés of the different Departments. This resolution only puts the clerks and employés in the different Departments upon the same footing with the clerks and employés about the Senate and House of Representatives. Now, to add twenty per cent. to those whose salaries are less than $1,500 and exclude those whose salaries exceed $1,500 would be simply passing a law by which those whose responsibilities are the least shall receive the highest compensation, for it would put some of the persons who are engaged in unimportant matters about the Senate above those who have great responsibilities and arduous duties to perform. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Oregon must be aware that there is a precedent for this. We have already under the lead of the committee voted to pay certain employés of the Treasury Department twice, and that is a very good precedent to pay these employés twice. Following that precedent we ought to vote this.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does the Senator from Kansas wish to give any persons forty per cent.?

Mr. POMEROY. To follow the votes of the Senate I must do it to be consistent.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to know if the Senator wants to give any employés forty per cent.?

Mr. POMEROY. Many of the employés of the Treasury Department have forty per cent., and why should not our employés have it also? I did not vote for that; but as the precedent has been established in that case I intend now to vote for this.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAGIN. I propose to amend the amendment in the seventeenth line by inserting after the words "Treasury extension" the words "watchmen employed in the Capitol extension." There are nine of these watchmen. One of them is employed in the architect's office, and is included in this resolution. The other eight have precisely the same duties to perform. Five of them are night watchmen. They receive $250 per day. By the resolution, I say again, the one in the architect's office will receive this twenty per cent. He is a night watchman. There are four others precisely like him, night watchmen, who under the resolution as it stands will not receive the twenty per cent. I think if there are any exceptions made in the resolution this ought to be one. They are men who work about fourteen hours per day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose the same argument that would justify the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire would justify an amendment including all the workmen and laborers employed on the Capitol and Treasury extensions. It is necessary to confine this resolution to those who are employed in the Departments and in the offices. Now, it may so happen (because it is impossible in any bill to specify all the exceptions and provide for every individual case) that by the provisions of this resolution one night watchman is included while others are excluded; but when you depart from the rule that this appropriation shall be confined to the offices, then you go to an extent that will embrace all the workmen and laborers employed in these different kinds of business about the city of Washington. The necessity of the case which compels us to adhere to this rule requires the Senate to oppose this amendment. These watchmen, according to the statement of the Senator, receive the same compensation, or about the same compensation, that the laborers and workmen do upon the Capitol and Treasury extensions, and if they are to be paid the additional compensation, then the amendment of the Senator from Ohio ought to be adopted, and all ought to be included.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I propose to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "meters" in the eighteenth line the words "and the clerks at the Executive Mansion whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,800." I suggest this amendment simply because of the clerks who are employed at the Executive Mansion under the bill which passed at the last session some two or three, perhaps three, were transferred from the Treasury Department. They were clerks in the Treasury Department at $1,800, and they were transferred to the Executive Mansion at the same salary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They were clerks in the Treasury Department, but not at $1,800.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, at $1,800. Mr. Sniffin is one, and I forget the name of the other. They were clerks in the Treasury Department at $1,800, and were transferred to the Executive Mansion at the same salary. If they had remained at the Treasury Department they would have had the benefit of the fund that was appropriated, but by being transferred to the Executive Mansion at least one of them has been cut off from his proportion of the $160,000 that was appropriated last year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state to the Senate what the persons employed about the Executive Mansion receive. The Private Secretary receives $3,500; the assistant, $2,500; the short-hand writer, $2,500; the clerk of pardons, $2,000; three clerks at $1,800; secretary to sign land patents, $1,500; doorkeeper, $1,000; messenger, $900; general service men detailed to the President by the War Department, $80 per month. These salaries, as it will be seen, are large salaries. If there are three clerks employed at the executive department who were employed in the Treasury Department at $1,800 a year, I suppose the greater honor that they enjoy from belonging to the Executive Mansion was sufficient inducement for them to change. I presume the change was voluntary on their part. They left the Treasury Department and went into the employ of the Executive. If they had remained in the Treasury they would have received the twenty per cent., but they now belong to the executive department proper, and perhaps the honor of being in that department is a sufficient equivalent for the twenty per cent. which the Treasury clerks receive. At any rate, I think their salaries are very fair and reasonable and ought not to be increased.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The remarks of the Senator I think are not altogether just and right. I do not propose to increase the salary in any way of those persons whose salary was fixed by the law of last year, who got the salary under that bill for the first time. Now, he has read the salary of one officer at $3,500, another at $2,500, and some at $2,000; but there are three clerks that get $1,800 on this same paper that he read from, and one gets $1,500. Those are all that my amendment would apply to. There is a doorkeeper and also a messenger. The doorkeeper gets $1,000 and the messenger $900. I propose to leave them just where they are. But here are two clerks who get $1,800, and one clerk $1,500; and I want to provide for these two clerks at $1,800, because they were transferred from a Department where they would have had the benefit of this resolution, and at least one of them, with whom I am personally acquainted and whom I esteem very much, was transferred before the law in relation to the officers of the Executive Mansion was passed. He was transferred by the Secretary of the Treasury to assist the President because of the great pressure of business at the Executive Mansion; but he was still a clerk in the Treasury Department. I think when the distinguished Senator from Maine was in the Department perhaps Mr. Sniffin was at the Executive Mansion. I am not sure just at what time he was assigned to do duty there. Now, these three clerks thus going into the Executive Mansion ought not to be deprived of that which they would have received had they remained in their Department. My amendment only applies to those three clerks.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "now" in the fifth line. It reads:

That there shall be allowed and paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following described persons now employed in the civil service at Washington.

This compensation, therefore, is only given to those persons who are now, at the passage of this resolution, in service in these different Departments; but it goes back and reckons this twenty per cent. upon their compensation since the 30th day of June last. A very considerable number of persons have been employed in these different Departments since the 30th of last June who are not now in service there. Suppose that a man was employed for six months following the 30th of June last and was then dismissed from the Department for some reason; another man is employed at the same service and at the same salary during the same six months and he is not dismissed from the service; is there any justice in saying that the one shall receive twenty per cent. upon his salary during that period and the other not?

At some time during the last fall, some months after the 30th of June, there was a very considerable change in the employés in several of these Departments; and I believe it was true, although it was probably accidental, that those men who left the service about that time were men who agreed in politics with the majority of this Congress; and by another singular accident those who took their places did not. That perhaps makes no difference in relation to the application of the rule of justice to the case, but it perhaps would make some difference in the feelings of gentlemen in voting upon it.

But upon the justice of the thing itself, Mr. President, if we go back to those who are now in the service and reckon this twenty per cent. upon their wages from the 30th of June forward, is there any justice in saying that that same per cent. of addition shall not be made to those persons who were in service for some time after the 30th of June and who have been dismissed from the service before this time? I can see no ground to make any distinction. I think it ought to apply to all persons who have been in service during this period of time; and that the man who served a fraction of a year during the first portion of it is just as much entitled to receive his pro rata allowance from this additional compensation that is given as one who has served a fraction of the year during the last half of it. If there is any ground to make any distinction between the two, I presume the gentleman having charge of that resolution can tell us what it is; I am not able to see it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no doubt that the resolution in its present form will operate with hardship in some individual cases. Every gentleman seems to suppose that the resolution must necessarily provide for every individual case within his knowledge. There must be some rule on this subject. This appropriation must be confined to persons now in the employ of the Government, or it must extend to persons who are not in the employ of the Government. It may be if the word "now" is stricken out of the resolution, and it is made applicable to all persons who have been in the employ of the Government since the commencement of the present fiscal year, that some persons who have been discharged for misconduct in office will receive this twenty per cent. upon their salaries. I suppose that some persons have been discharged from the different Departments on account of their political views or opinions, but I am perfectly satisfied that the number is very limited, and that it is not necessary to change this resolution and make it embrace persons who are outside of the city of Washington and elsewhere in the country for the sake of meeting some such cases. It would devolve, it seems to me, great trouble upon the Department to find out where these persons were, and the circumstances under which they were discharged, and when they were discharged. It would tend very much, in my judgment, to embarrass the proceedings under this resolution. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer an amendment, to add as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts heretofore passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to apportion or distribute among the clerks of his Department any sum of money by way of additional pay or compensation, are hereby repealed; and after the passage of this act no money shall be paid to any officer, clerk, or employee of the Treasury Department except such as may be fixed by law.

Mr. CONNESS. I would suggest to the Senator whether it would not be well, if there is a balance of the fund, to provide in this section for its being paid back into the Treasury?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It goes back as a matter of course.

Mr. CONNESS. If it goes back by course of law it is all right.

Mr. HENDERSON. My view in presenting the amendment is this: I believe there were $250,000 appropriated at one session for this purpose and $160,000 at another, making $410,000. I find from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that he has distributed $310,000 of that money, leaving $100,000 yet unused. Now, if we undertake to say what the compensation of the clerks shall be, and fix it by law, I think it is altogether proper that we take the power away from the Secretary of the Treasury to have any charge made against him of favoritism. I make no such charge; but I know perfectly well that if we now fix the compensation, the Secretary of the Treasury may increase it if he sees proper. I think it is proper for us to fix it, now that we have the subject before us, and if the addition now proposed is not sufficient let us increase it to an amount that is sufficient. I think this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope this amendment will be adopted. I voted against the appropriation of $160,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to do what was supposed to be justice to the clerks in his Department. I was satisfied then that one of the purposes for which the money was asked was political. I think the money has not been expended without a view in many cases to that purpose. At all events, as we are now establishing a new rate of compensation for the clerks in the different Departments, I think we may as well repeal that act of 1866 so far as the remaining balance is concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think, if I understood the proposed amendment, there is no objection to it. I should like to hear it read once more.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have some doubt as to whether the last clause had not better be left out. He is obliged to employ additional clerks, and it may apply to them.

Mr. HENDERSON. It does not affect them at all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I had some doubt about it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought of that. I am satisfied that it will not interfere with the additional clerks that may be appointed by the Secretary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let the last clause be read again. I do not think it adds any strength to the section.

The Secretary read the last clause of the amendment, as follows:

And after the passage of this act no money shall be paid to any officer, clerk, or employee of the Treasury Department except such as may be fixed by law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest that the words "as additional compensation," or something of that sort, be inserted. I do not think the last clause necessary. The first portion, repealing this authority, is sufficient.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not particular about the language. The Senator sees what I am aiming at. I think the amendment accomplishes it. If the Secretary appoints an additional clerk he is authorized by law to classify him; he is put either in the first, second, third, or fourth class, and when he is classified his compensation is fixed by law of course.

Mr. HOWARD. This amendment simply takes away from the Secretary the power of granting favors and exercising his discretion in the compensation of his clerks.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all.

Mr. HOWARD. And returns to the Treasury the balance which remains of the appropriation of $160,000. I think it is high time we did as much as that at least.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have another amendment to offer, to come in after "1866," in line twenty-two:

In all cases where said persons now receive an annual compensation or pay of less than $1,800; in cases where they receive not less than $1,800, and not exceeding $2,500, they shall receive an additional compensation of fifteen per cent.; and in cases where they receive more than $2,500 and not exceeding $3,500, they shall receive an additional compensation of ten per cent. as aforesaid.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would not attempt to grade them.

Mr. HENDERSON. I may be wrong in this, but I think not. The first-class clerks receive $1,200; second-class clerks, $1,400; third-class, $1,600; fourth-class, $1,800; chief clerks of bureaus, $2,000; Auditors, $3,000; and assistant heads of Departments, $3,500. If Senators will take up the report which has been referred to by the Senator from Oregon, (House Executive Document No. 20,) they will find that clerks of the first and second classes have had given to them about one hundred dollars extra compensation, and the clerks of the third and fourth class and the chief clerks have received from three hundred to seven hundred and fifty dollars each. The chief clerks, who receive $2,000 salary, have generally received from six hundred and seventy-five to seven hundred and fifty dollars each extra. It may be that they are perfectly entitled to it; it may be altogether right and proper that they should have it; it may have been given entirely on account of merit; but if my amendment be adopted it will work perfect justice, in my judgment, among these clerks, or very nearly so.

Take the head of a bureau who has received an annual compensation of $3,500 and also an extra compensation of $1,000. Under this resolution he will receive $700 more, being twenty per cent. on his salary, making his compensation for the year $5,200, whereas a first-class clerk, who receives $1,200, will get his twenty per cent. making $1,440, a second-class clerk will get his twenty per cent., making him a compensation of $1,680, and a third-class clerk will receive an additional compensation of twenty per cent., giving him $1,920; and these three classes have already received nothing extra except $100, while the gentlemen who received the largest compensation, salaries of from $2,000 to $3,500, have generally received from $450 to $750 extra. They have all received their twenty per cent., and I propose to allow them ten per cent. additional still.

Take the case of a chief clerk with $2,000 annual salary who has received $750 extra compensation. He will get under this resolution $400 more, making his compensation for the year $3,150; whereas a first-class clerk has received but $100 extra, and many of them not a cent, and some of the second-class clerks have received nothing and some only $100. Thus the first and second class clerks will receive very little more than their regular salaries, while the chief clerks will receive $3,150. This may be just, but it does not strike me so. My impression is that inasmuch as the men who get the larger salaries have received the larger portion of the extra compensation fund, we ought to scale the percentage that we grant under the provisions of this resolution. Unless we do so, the result is to give them a very large compensation, larger in my judgment than we ought to give, and larger than we design to give.

I offered my first amendment for the purpose of preventing any charge of favoritism arising hereafter, and really for the purpose of preventing the Secretary of the Treasury from paying to the well-paid clerks a larger compensation, and making the aggregate amount to $5,500 or $6,000, as he might do and probably would do if we were to carry out the same policy adopted last year. I think the amendment I now offer is but just. It is certainly right to those men who scarcely receive compensation enough to support themselves and families that they should get a larger proportion of this fund. I think those individuals who last year received six or seven hundred dollars extra compensation each can very well afford to take the ten per cent. which I propose.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My idea is that we shall only get ourselves into difficulty if we attempt to make any distinctions or grades. The committee went on the idea that it was best to give twenty per cent. to all except those whose offices have been recently created, and whose salaries have lately been increased. The Treasurer, by a recent law, gets $6,500, and the Comptroller of the Currency $5,000. This resolution does not apply to them, but to those who get $3,500 and less. The committee thought it was not worth while to make any distinction between those whom the resolution covers, and that the result of it would be only to get us into difficulty. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that those whose salaries are $3,500, if they get just as much as he says they do, would not be paid more in proportion according to the value of their services, considering what kind of men they are and what they do, than the $1,200 clerks or the $1,400 clerks. You cannot expect to pay a boy what you pay a man.

Mr. HENDERSON. They are not boys.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Many of the $1,200 clerks are boys under age; and they are getting more there than they could get anywhere else. It is true, there are some individuals of that class, men of families, who may not get enough; but as a general rule that class of clerks are paid better, and will be paid better under this resolution in proportion to the service they render than those who get larger salaries. I think I may say I know that. I think we shall only get ourselves into difficulty by attempting to make these different grades of percentage. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the honorable Senator from Missouri has left out of view in this amendment all the Departments except the Treasury Department. It is to be remembered that no fund has been distributed in any Department except the Treasury Department. He proposes here to pay the Assistant Secretary of the Interior ten per cent. additional upon his salary and give a clerk twenty-five per cent., I believe. I think that in the Interior Department and in the Navy Department and in the War Department the assistants and the heads of bureaus should receive twenty per cent. upon their salaries as well as the $1,200 clerks. But the Senate has settled the question as to the Treasury Department; the Senate has refused to strike out the clause which includes the extra compensation in this computation; and now, if this amendment is adopted with a view to the Treasury Department, great injustice is done to the men employed in the other Departments, and I hope for that reason that the amendment will not be adopted.

Why, I will ask, is one man paid in the Interior Department $2,500 and another $1,200? Is it not because one's services are worth $2,500 while the services of the other are only worth $1,200? If you increase the salaries of both you ought to increase them ratably; the increase ought to be in proportion to the salaries which they receive; and there is no reason as it appears to me why you should pay to one who receives $2,500 ten per cent., and to one who receives $1,200 twenty-five per cent., unless it is made to appear that the salaries as they have been established by law are unjust. There must be a gradation in salaries from the Assistant Secretaries down to the lowest class of clerks, and this percentage ought to be in proportion to the salaries.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not very particular about the amendment; but it struck me as being just. I really think that if twenty per cent. is added to salaries from $2,000 to $3,500, a larger percentage should be given to the clerks receiving a smaller compensation. But the Senator from Maine, who certainly understands this subject better than I do, having had experience in the Department himself, who speaks advisedly upon the subject, and who ought certainly to be able to counsel the Senate on such a matter, thinks otherwise. I know there are some first and second class clerks here who are scarcely able to support themselves on their salaries. I do not pretend that the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Oregon are wrong in saying that those who have the higher salaries ought to be increased; but it struck me that a larger percentage of increase should be given to those who receive the smaller salaries. If my amendment be adopted its effect would be to give a first-class clerk for the present year $1,440, a second-class clerk $1,680, a third-class clerk $1,920, a fourth-class clerk $2,070, a chief clerk $2,300, the Auditors $3,300, and the heads of bureaus $3,850. But I shall not take up time on this amendment; I leave it to the Senate to decide.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "annum" in the thirty-second line:

Not to any person so as to increase his compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, beyond the sum of $4,500.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to inquire whether this amendment, if adopted, would not prevent such officers as the First Comptroller and Second Comptroller from receiving more than $4,500?

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the object.

Mr. CONNESS. I think they are worth more.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The proposition is that this twenty per cent. shall not be applied so as to increase the compensation of any of these heads of bureaus beyond the sum of $4,500 for the present fiscal year. Is not that enough? The effect of it will be to prevent them from receiving somewhere between five and six thousand dollars. Their salaries are fixed by law at $3,500. They have already received out of this extra compensation fund various amounts; the precise amounts I cannot state, but some of them as much as $1,000. Those who have had $1,000 have already received $4,500. Then, if you give twenty per cent. additional on the salary, it would be giving them $5,200 for the present year. If the Senate proposes to increase their salaries to $2,500, so be it; but the object of this amendment is to prevent any of them receiving more than $4,500. I do not wish at this hour to take up time. I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. CONNESS. This, it seems to me, is the old proposition that was settled in the Senate awhile ago. As I understand it, it is to prevent men who can go outside and get $10,000 a year from receiving more than $4,500 from the Government, no matter how valuable may be their services.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will not be adopted; it will only apply to some half a dozen men, and it is an invidious discrimination against them.

Mr. TRUMBULL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 10, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalow, Chandler, Howard, Pomerooy, Ramsey, Ross, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Hendricks, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Poland, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Fowley, Frothingham, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Nesmith, Nye, Patterson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, and Stewart—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, as amended, it was agreed to, as follows: strike out all of the original resolution after the resolving clause and insert—

That there shall be allowed and paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following described persons, now employed in the civil service at Washington, as follows: to civil officers, temporary and all other clerks, messengers, and watchmen, including enlisted men detailed as such, to be computed upon the gross amount of the compensation received by them, and employees, male and female, in any of the following named Departments, or any bureau or division thereof, to wit: State, Treasury, War, Navy, Interior, Post Office, Attorney General, Agricultural, and including civil officers, and temporary and all other clerks and employees, male and female, in the offices of the Coast Survey, Naval Observatory, navy-yard, arsenal, Paymaster General, including the divisions of referred claims, Commissary General of Prisoners, Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, Quartermaster's, Capitol and Treasury extension, city post office, and Commissioner of Public Buildings, to the photographer and assistant photographer of the Treasury Department, to the superintendent of meters, an additional compensation of twenty per cent. on their respective salaries as fixed by law, or, where no salary is fixed by law, upon their pay respectively, for one year from and after the 30th day of June, 1866; but when any of said persons is or shall be only entitled to receive salary or pay for a part of said year, the said twenty per cent. shall be computed on the amount such person is so entitled to receive for services in any or all of said Departments or offices within said year: Provided, That the above-named additional compensation to the employees of the Patent Office shall be paid out of the funds of said office: Provided further, That this resolution shall not apply to persons whose salaries as fixed by law exceed $3,500.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That all acts or parts of acts heretofore passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to apportion or distribute among the clerks of his Department any sum of moneys by way of additional pay or compensation are hereby repealed; and after the passage of this resolution no money shall be paid to any officer, clerk, or employee of the Treasury Department, except such as may be fixed by law.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the joint resolution read a third time. The resolution was read the third time, and passed.

[The announcement of the passage of the joint resolution was welcomed with applause in the galleries, which was checked by the President pro tempore.]

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, (at sixteen minutes past eleven o'clock p. m.,) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 12, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

TAX BILL.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House one thousand extra copies of the bill amending the internal revenue laws, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means yesterday.

NEW ORLEANS RIOT.

Mr. LAFLIN also reported, from the same committee, the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That twenty thousand extra copies of the majority and minority reports, and ten thousand copies of the evidence taken by the Committee on the New Orleans Riots, be printed for the use of the members of the House of Representatives.

BOSTON CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. LAFLIN also reported, from the same committee, the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed of the majority and minority reports of the committee on the subject of the Boston custom-house two thousand extra copies for the use of the House, and five hundred extra copies of the evidence.

MINERAL RESOURCES.

Mr. LAFLIN also, from the same committee, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies of the report of J. Ross Browne on the mineral resources, &c., in addition to those already ordered, be printed for the use of members of this House, and that a copy of the rules prepared at the General Land Office, to aid in the disposal of the mineral lands under the law approved February 26, 1866, for that purpose, be added to each copy of such report; and that one thousand copies of the same be for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. LAFLIN, moved to reconsider the vote by which the several resolutions were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. WENTWORTH, by unanimous consent offered the following resolution; which, being a call for executive information, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to this House the ultimate cost under existing laws of the railroads concerning which he made his communication to this House yesterday, so far as the papers in his office will enable him to do so.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAXING POST OFFICE CLERKS, ETC.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which, being a call for executive information, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to inform this House whether the various postmasters throughout the United States are required to account for and pay a salary tax upon the salaries of clerks employed by them, where such salaries are not fixed by law, but are paid out of funds furnished by the Government; also that he be requested to furnish a copy of the regulations and the circulars of said Department, if any such exist, requiring such payment; also whether any such tax is collected or required to be accounted for from clerks of assessors of internal revenue; and if any discrimination is made between said two classes of clerks in respect to said tax, and why such discrimination is made.

MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill in relation to the merchant marine of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' LOST DISCHARGES.

Mr. MILLER, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, asking for the passage of a law allowing pensions to soldiers who have lost their discharges; which were printed, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHANGE OF COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 347, to change certain collection districts in Maryland and Virginia, for the purpose of having it referred.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMMERCIAL MARINE.

Mr. DARLING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas the commercial marine of the United States is reported to be in a languishing condition, and there exists also great depression in the ship-building interest owing to the legislative action of foreign Governments and other causes: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the tariff act by a provision to the effect that all goods imported in American bottoms shall be entitled to a rebate of ten per cent. of the duties imposed by said act.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 908) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1868;

A bill (H. R. No. 918) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government at Washington.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 493) supplementary to an act to establish the Treasury Department, approved the 2d of September, 1789;

An act (S. No. 527) to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 163) to provide in certain cases for the removal of alcohol from bonded warehouses free from internal tax.

FEES OF EXAMINING SURGEONS.

Mr. FERRY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the propriety of increasing the fee now allowed to surgeons for examination of applicants for pensions, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

WASHINGTON CENTRAL MARKET.

On motion of Mr. INGERSOLL, the bill of the House No. 799, to incorporate the Central Market Company in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, heretofore referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, was ordered to be printed.

ACTS OF MISSOURI STATE MILITIA.

Mr. NOELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas it is alleged the Governor of Missouri has sent companies of militia into several counties of that State, which militia has driven out and maltreated officers of the United States, and killed and beaten peaceable citizens without cause or provocation, and has robbed citizens of property and destroyed and burned property and committed other devastations: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed to inquire into said allegations and report to this House.

Mr. GRINNELL. I object.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the gentleman will not object; this is a riot.

Mr. GRINNELL. Yes, a Democratic riot.

Mr. ELIOT. It is too late in the session now to order an investigating committee.

Mr. LE BLOND. It is not too late to do good.

Mr. NOELL. Will my resolution be printed?

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the Globe, in the report of debates and proceedings.

Mr. NOELL. I ask permission to have also printed in the Globe certain documents I have in my possession relating to this subject.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had concurred in the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution No. 99, for the relief of Paul S. Forbes, under his contract with the Navy Department for building and furnishing the steam sloop-of-war Idaho, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I now call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill reported from the select Committee on New Orleans Riots (H. R. No. 1162) for the reestablishment of civil government in the State of Louisiana. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINCK] to lay the bill on the table; upon which motion the gentleman has called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were—ayes thirteen.

Mr. BOYER. I call for tellers.

Mr. FINCK. I withdraw the motion to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

Mr. ELIOT. Upon representations of friends of the bill, I am willing to allow this bill to be amended by striking out the section which provides for the admission into this House of a delegate from Louisiana. I would inquire of the Chair in what way I can accomplish my object?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will withdraw the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, the question will recur upon the motion to reconsider. Should that motion prevail the bill will then be open to amendment.

Mr. ELIOT. I will then withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The question was upon the motion to reconsider; and being taken, it was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT. I now move to amend the bill by striking out the twelfth section.

The section was as follows:

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That until the people of Louisiana shall be admitted to representation in the Congress of the United States under such loyal and republican government as the United States shall recognize and assume to guaranty, such people shall be entitled to one delegate in the House of Representatives, to be elected at the first general election provided for in this act by the qualified electors of the State, as provided in this act. Such delegate must be a person who has the qualifications for and could hold the office of Governor under the provisions of this act, and he shall have the same powers and rights now had by delegates from the Territories of the United States.

Mr. ELIOT. I now call the previous question upon the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT. I now renew the call for the previous question on the bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. We understood on this side of the House that the bill was to be open to debate if we consented to withdraw the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. ELIOT. I do not know upon what ground the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] has proceeded. I am aware of no understanding of that kind upon the subject. I am perfectly willing to state exactly what I should be glad to do if the House will sustain me in it. I have no objection to have this bill debated for one or two hours, if it will accommodate gentlemen upon the other side. I would a great deal rather have such debate as may be satisfactory than to have a renewal of scenes such as were had in this Hall a fortnight or three weeks since. And if it will be in accordance with the general wish of the House I propose that the bill may be discussed, and that the previous question may be seconded in an hour and a half from this time. That is giving as much time as, it seems to me, we can give at this period of the session, and I hope it is as much as gentlemen on the other side will feel disposed to ask.

Mr. STEVENS. As the gentleman does not call the previous question I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] is upon the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, then, I will call for the regular order as soon as the gentleman sits down.

Mr. ELIOT. I do not mean to sit down. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. This bill is the regular order.

Mr. STEVENS. It will not be if the gentleman allows it to be thrust aside.

The SPEAKER. This bill must be disposed of before any other is taken up, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. ELIOT. For what purpose?

Mr. LE BLOND. For an inquiry.

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly.

Mr. LE BLOND. I understand from the gentleman from Massachusetts that he purposes in the course of an hour and a half to put this bill upon its passage and cut off all further debate, intimating that that is sufficient time for the discussion of the bill. Now, sir, I do not pretend to understand what the minority upon this side of the House propose to do. I can speak only for myself in this matter. But when a bill of the magnitude of the one now under consideration is proposed to be put through this House, permitting no more than an hour and a half of debate upon it, it seems to me that it is time for the minority here to assert, to some extent at least, the rights that belong to them.

I am aware that on the other side of the House it is urged as a pretext for hurrying this bill through that we are approaching very near to the close of the session, and that as yet no policy for the reconstruction of the southern States has been adopted. Well, sir, let me say that the minority are free from any blame upon that subject. Immediately on the organization of the Thirty-Ninth Congress the majority here took it upon themselves to establish a Reconstruction Committee and refer to that committee all matters relating to the reconstruction of those States. Thus all propositions looking to a restoration of those States to their rightful places in the Union were swallowed up. There the subject has remained from that day to this, except that now and then there has been reported a bill that was odious even to the majority.

Mr. SPALDING. I rise to a question of order. I do not think that the remarks of my colleague are in the nature of an inquiry to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir; they are not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the right to resume the floor whenever he chooses.

Mr. SPALDING. I appeal to him to resume the floor.

Mr. LE BLOND. Well, it is hardly necessary for my colleague to be quite so sensitive.

Mr. SPALDING. I object to so much "rigging."

Mr. LE BLOND. And let me say there has been little else done in this Congress than "rigging," in which my colleague has performed a very conspicuous part.

Mr. ELIOT. I cannot yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] if he takes this occasion to lecture his colleague.

Mr. LE BLOND. Very well; if the gentleman from Massachusetts will yield to my colleague that he may interpose a proposition of this kind he must expect that I shall reply in the same spirit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] rose to a question of order. He did not appeal to any one except the Chair.

Mr. LE BLOND. The Chair will permit me with all respect to say that my colleague appealed to the gentleman from Massachusetts to cut me off.

But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to continue my statement of the reasons why this bill should not be hurried through. As I was remarking, this Reconstruction Committee has reported no legislation on this subject that has met the approval of the majority of this House. If that committee has been permitted to go on in this way through the last session and the principal part of this without producing anything for the good and harmony of the country, that is no reason, no excuse, no apology to justify the majority, at the very close almost of this Congress, in thrusting upon the House a proposition that ignores States, subverts civil government, and subverts the Constitution. Legislation of this sort cannot be justified or excused on the plea that the session has nearly expired, and that some action is necessary.

Mr. ELIOT. I resume the floor.

Mr. LE BLOND. Very good; then let him move the previous question.

Mr. ELIOT. Mr. Speaker, I have been hoping to hear some suggestion instead of an argument. I am desirous of having this reconciled, and it seems as though I meet with obstacles from one side and the other. Will gentlemen be good enough to say what they want?

Mr. LE BLOND. I will tell the gentleman, and he might have inferred it from what I have said; leave the bill open so there may be reasonable debate on the proposition, before you move the previous question, and thus give the minority a chance.

Mr. ELIOT. I call on the gentleman to state what time he wants. In view of the short existence of the session and the pressure of business, I ask what time they think is required?

Mr. LE BLOND. I will state to the gentleman—

Mr. ELIOT. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. BOYER. I simply desire to suggest to my colleague and to the members of this House, on a matter so important, involving the very existence of a State and the continuance of a State constitution, that we should pause until the reports which have been made by the committee, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts is chairman, have been printed and the House has had an opportunity to read them. I desire to inquire of my colleague how it happens gentlemen on the other side seem to be so well posted in reference to the facts involved in this question and the merits of the government of Louisiana so they are ready without debate to give their decision? I desire to ask whether my colleague knows the testimony taken by the committee in this case has been privately printed and also privately circulated among the Republican members of the House?

Mr. PIKE. No.

Mr. BOYER. Yes, sir; so that they have had an opportunity to "post" themselves and to get the version of facts known to my colleagues on the committee, while my associates on this side have been denied that privilege.

Mr. ELIOT. Let me answer that question right here. No such thing has been done. The gentleman has had all the opportunity any one has had to see all the evidence in print and manuscript. There has been nothing done he is not aware of; nothing taken from the Printing Office except what has gone to him as well as to me.

Mr. BOYER rose.

Mr. ELIOT. I cannot have this kind of interrogation at this stage of the case upon the floor between a member of the committee and myself.

Mr. BOYER. I simply desire to correct my colleague.

Mr. ELIOT. I resume the floor.

Mr. BOYER. My colleague misapprehends me entirely in supposing I sought for any information. I am entirely "posted" in reference to the facts of this case; but I should like to have an opportunity of discussing those facts before the House.

Mr. ELIOT. What time does the gentleman want? I am trying to find out how much time is wanted.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ELIOT. If I can get an answer, with pleasure.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. We do not want unreasonable time to debate this bill. As I understand from those around me we want to debate it fairly and fully, to have a fair and reasonable opportunity to debate.

Mr. ELIOT. How long?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Until the subject seems to have been exhausted. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELIOT. That is altogether too much.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. No one can say exactly how much.

Mr. BOYER. The House will always have within its own control the power to put an end to the debate, and why not then throw the debate open until the House in its judgment shall see fit to close it?

Mr. LE BLOND. I want to say a word.

Mr. ELIOT. If the gentleman will give me an answer I will yield.

Mr. LE BLOND. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania has already said, the majority of this House has the power to close the debate when in their judgment it has progressed a sufficient length of time, and put the bill on its passage. That is sufficient for us on this side to say now. It may take to-day and to-morrow; it may take only to-day; but leave it open and let debate go on until the House in its judgment shall say it has gone far enough and the debate should be closed.

Mr. ELIOT. Mr. Speaker, I have tried to get an answer, but—

Mr. FINCK. I propose to the gentleman that this debate go on till to-morrow at four o'clock, and then close.

Mr. ELIOT. That is utterly out of the question.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman say why it is out of the question?

Mr. ELIOT. Because there is not sufficient time at this stage of the session to do that and do justice to the other business of the House. The state of the business demands more speedy action.

Mr. LE BLOND. That is what the Committee on Reconstruction and the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to have considered long ago.

Mr. ELIOT. Mr. Speaker, having tried in vain to obtain a reasonable proposition from the other side, I will say to the gentlemen that I do not intend to call the previous question for two hours; but at the expiration of two hours I propose to do it. During that time I think gentlemen will find no difficulty, if they will be brief, in expressing all their views for and against the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have it understood that two hours for debate is to be given to those who are opposed to the bill?

Several MEMBERS. Yes, yes.

Mr. ELIOT. I understand it to be the desire on this side of the House that the minority should have the whole of the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr.

BOYER,] the minority of the committee, as entitled to the floor.

Mr. ELIOT. Allow me to ask what will be the effect of a motion to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. It will be to prevent further amendment.

Mr. ELIOT. I now make that motion.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYER] has the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope my colleague [Mr. BOYER] having the floor, will move to postpone this till to-morrow, for the purpose of going on in the mean time with the bill which was unfairly thrust aside to take up this.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYER] yield to allow a suggestion from the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BAKER,] to the chairman of the Committee?

Mr. BOYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to suggest a verbal amendment in the fifth line by inserting the word "provisional" before the word "governor."

Mr. ELIOT. There is no objection to it: I will accept it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make a suggestion about the printing of the bill if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield.

Mr. BOYER. I will do so.

Mr. GARFIELD. The suggestion is this: there have been but some forty copies of this bill printed, and it is not on the desks of more than one third of the members here. Now, I hope we shall not proceed with the discussion of a bill with a proposed amendment to it until every gentleman can have it on his desk; and I trust, by unanimous consent, it will be laid over until that can be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state if this is postponed by unanimous consent, unless other orders are postponed by unanimous consent, it will not be reached during the remainder of the session.

Mr. BOYER. If I understood the suggestion of my colleague he would be willing to accede to a proposition for the postponement of the bill till to-morrow, or until some future day, reserving, however, our rights to debate, and leaving that question to remain as it is. If my colleague desires to make such a motion I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. ELIOT. That is not in accordance with the order of the House. I have yielded for no such purpose. There are two hours given for debate.

The SPEAKER. Such a motion would be in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYER] is on the floor and entitled to move it. The gentleman from Massachusetts has yielded two hours for debate.

Mr. ELIOT. It comes out of the two hours.

Mr. BOYER. I yield to my colleague if he desires to make that motion.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if it is postponed until to-morrow it probably will not be reached at all during the present session.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 40, noes 83.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. BOYER. Would it be in order to move that this, together with all the other special orders, except the bill from the Reconstruction Committee, be postponed until to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It would be by unanimous consent. The Chair stated yesterday that the House had, by unanimous consent, which is the highest form that the action of the House can take, directed that certain bills should be taken up in their order—the military bill, from the Committee on Reconstruction; the indemnity bill, and the bounty bill; and the House cannot, by any lower grade of motion reverse the action so taken.

Mr. BOYER. It is desired by gentlemen near me that I should state that there is no understanding on this side of the House that the debate upon this bill should be confined to two hours, and that then the vote should be taken upon the passage of the bill by common consent.

The gentleman from Massachusetts said that he would not call the previous question until after the expiration of two hours; but I did not understand that there was any arrangement entered into with gentlemen on this side of the House, that at the end of two hours they would interpose no objection to closing the debate. I state this now in order that it may not be hereafter said that there was any misunderstanding or any want of good faith on the part of gentlemen on this side.

Mr. ELIOT. Let me state that it is rather late to interpose that caveat now, after the gentleman has obtained the floor in pursuance of that arrangement.

Mr. BOYER. I certainly did not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer two hours for debate upon this bill as a proposition to be accepted upon conditions by this side of the House; it was an announcement on his part, uncoupled with any conditions; as such I understood it, and as such I believe it has been understood by my associates on this side of this Chamber.

Mr. UPSON. I rise to a point of order: that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYER] is not discussing the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BOYER addressed the House. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have been a somewhat attentive observer of all that has transpired in this House for some six years past. During the war there were many gloomy periods when the friends of the Union seemed to despair. There were certain men who predicted that war never could restore this Union. I was one who thought otherwise. I did hope and believe that when the rebellion in the South was subdued, when there was no longer any armed resistance to be found there, whatever politicians might desire, a public sentiment would come from the North as well as from the South calling for and demanding peace and restoration too strong to be resisted. But, sir, the war is over. There is not to be found anywhere a man in arms against the Government of the United States. Some eighteen months have rolled away since the termination of the war; yet here we are as far from the restoration of the Union as we were at any time during the war, and I fear further. Now, gentlemen may think as they please, but the question before us is one that is worth thinking about. Every man who loves his country, every man who loves the Union of the States, ought to pause and reflect and ask himself whether we are moving toward a restoration of the Union or directly the opposite course. I may be wrong; I hope I am; but to my mind the cause of the Union this day is more hopeless than at any former period. My imagination pictures to me now more danger than at any time during the war.

Now, sir, in regard to these various propositions before the House, the one called the "military bill," with the several amendments coming from different sources, and the one now reported, I care not a fig which of them may pass, if any one must pass. This last bill, the one now before the House, while it shades to some extent the horrid and bloody features of the "military bill" is, in truth, nothing more nor less than the same thing, dressed up and veiled a little to conceal its enormity from public view. To my mind there is one thing very certain, that the temper of the Representatives here as well as of people elsewhere must undergo a great change before there will ever be a restoration of the union of these States. Sir, it is alarming that such a bill as that "military bill" should be seriously considered in this House. It is one of the alarming signs of the times: that such a measure should find support from any quarter whatever; for it proposes to establish a supreme, unlimited, and absolute despotism over nearly one third of the people of this Union; to surrender to the military authorities supreme power; nay, to enthrone despotism here in the United States. I say it is alarming that such a proposition should meet with any sort of favor here; and it is not less startling to hear the utterances and witness the temper with which certain gentlemen have defended this very bill.

For example, let me allude to a remark that was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] in support of this horrid "military bill" at the time when he assumed to "close the door of mercy" and proclaim that the day of grace was passed. I was astonished and alarmed to hear him utter his solemn fiat, his terrible anathema, his withering curse which is to doom forever some eight or ten million people of the South. The inquiry would naturally suggest itself, "Who is this that stands here and lifts up his voice like a trumpet, closing up the day of grace and sealing the doom of eight or ten million human beings?" One would suppose it to be some being that had suddenly made his appearance in the American Congress from some higher and holier sphere, from some sinless clime, one that had never felt the need of mercy, one that knew nothing but stern justice unmingled with mercy, one that having never sinned himself had no sympathy with sinners; one wrapped in immaculate purity and holiness, standing here and proclaiming with trumpet voice to the people of the United States that the day of grace was ended, "the door of mercy closed forever, locked, and the key thrown away." We were naturally shocked and alarmed; but on drawing a little nearer and making closer observation we find that this being is one of us, one of Adam's fallen posterity, one who had been a rebel against the government of Heaven and a sinner all his days.

The alarm was gone, the fright was over, and our shattered nerves became steady again; but we were still amazed and wondered to see a poor, puny mortal—

"Drest in a little brief authority."

"Play such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep."

A MEMBER. Remember he is a preacher.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, that must be a slander. I have heard it before but it must be a mistake. I take up no slanders against any man. It cannot be; no man who ever bore the message of "peace on earth and good will to man," no man who ever expounded the pure and sublime truths of Christianity, could have indulged such feelings and sentiments.

I would like to argue with that gentleman in reference to this matter. I entertain for him, as I do for all men, no unkind feelings. I would if I could reclaim him from the error of his ways. But to what standard am I to appeal that will affect him? You cannot argue a question of the power of Congress with a man who ignores the Constitution. There must be a common recognized standard from which there shall be no appeal.

I do not know even whether the gentleman would recognize the binding validity of the Bible. If I did, then I would take that as the standard of authority and argue with him in reference to that awful anathema he uttered.

You tell me he is a preacher. How can that be, when a man is anathematizing eight or ten millions of his fellow-men? How can he say, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us?" Never. None but merciful men can hope for mercy, for it is written, "He shall have judgment without mercy," who shows no mercy. The gentleman will reflect that at the time he is closing up the door of mercy against his fellow-men he closes it against himself; for the decree has gone forth, "He that shows no mercy shall have judgment without mercy." Why, sir, the gentleman was dependent on mercy, and mercy alone, for the very breath with which he proclaimed in regard to the people of ten States that, "The door of mercy was closed forever, locked, and the key thrown away!" Yes, sir, if the Bible be true, then the gentleman closes the door of mercy against himself unless he withdraws that terrible anathema and changes his temper and feelings.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the constitutionality of the military bill, this pending measure, or any kindred proposition, I will not insult the judgment of legal men by arguing such a question. The man who is prepared to indorse this as constitutional is prepared to vote for anything, and argument, however powerful, would be of no avail. Ten years ago all lawyers here know that any law student would have disgraced himself by contending that Congress has any constitutional power to pass such a bill as this. That side of the House has been schooled and driven up to this bloody military bill. They have been led on from one extreme measure to another until now they seem to be prepared for anything.

Mr. Speaker, there was another gentleman from Ohio—

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a question.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Yes, if it will not come out of my time.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman suggests that this side of the House is unmerciful. I want to ask him if in all the late confederate States not now represented in Congress the rebels themselves are not now in authority, having entire control, and show no mercy to the Union men?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Well, sir, I cannot stop to argue that question, because the facts are assumed to be true. But suppose they are true; suppose there are rebels who do these things, if you refuse to show mercy are you any better than they? There is no argument in anything of that sort, and yet if I have time I will consider these stories that are told about crimes that prevail in the South. I admit that the fact is so to some extent, but it is quite as true in regard to the North as the South. But, sir, there is nothing in these reports that should mislead or deceive a ten-year old boy. Why should you be gathering up such reports from one section of the country and making a great parade about them, overlooking the same kind of outrages that occur in another section?

But, sir, I was about to refer to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM,] with a part of whose speech here the other day I was well pleased. He broke out here the other evening in true loyal style, declaring that there never had been a time during the war when any of the southern States was out of the Union; that never had "one rood" of any of them become foreign territory. It was very true. Moreover, he went on to repeat some six or seven statutes that had been passed, all of which clearly recognized the stubborn fact that these were States in the Union during the war, and were still in the Union. He went even so far as to refer to various bills that gentleman had voted for, and coming down to the Freedmen's Bureau bill, he said that every man who voted for that bill had declared two things on oath: first, that the insurgent States were States in the Union; and secondly, that the people inhabiting them were citizens of the United States. I was glad to hear that from the gentleman from Ohio. I was glad to see the gentleman—better late than never—stand up for the Constitution and remind gentlemen of the oath to support it. He also said the idea that these States are out of the Union he "repudiated with scorn and contempt." I sympathized with him in that also.

But, sir, I confess I was a little surprised when I found him a few moments afterward making certain admissions which knocked his previous argument all into pi, as the printers say. [Laughter.] If the gentleman had stopped right there his argument would have been all sound and truthful; but the mischievous gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] kept interposing and asking questions, such as, "If these States are in the Union how, under the Constitution, do you reconcile to yourself the establishment of military despotism over them?" And, then, the gentleman suddenly fell into one of his radical spells, the monomania of radicalism came over him, and he was gone in a moment, and declared that he "embraced the general purpose of the bill with all his heart." Then the gentleman from Wisconsin pressed upon him the question, "How do you reconcile your views of the Constitution with the establishment of a military despotism?" and the gentleman from Ohio answered, "Why, by the unlimited powers of the Constitution for the common defense." A clause in the Constitution to which my attention had never before been called as proof to support such a position! Turning to the Constitution we find a clause which provides that Congress shall have power to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. How? By laying and collecting taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

That was the clause I suppose the gentleman intended to refer to: strange proof for such a purpose! If the gentleman will look a little further he will find another clause which provides that Congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." This would have suited his purpose fully as well; it is just as clearly in point as the first, because neither of the clauses can possibly be so tortured as to have the remotest bearing or lend the least support to his position.

Now, sir, I do not know whether it was a mock fight or not. But while the gentleman from Ohio was ready to embrace most heartily this bloody monster of a bill, he would yet veil it a little in the preamble; he would have the words "so-called" stricken out. Denying that the loyal citizens of the South were a conquered people or had ever forfeited any of their rights, he is yet ready to establish an absolute despotism over loyal and disloyal alike, as this bill does.

He quarrels with the preamble—with the shadow—yet embraces the substance. If that scene in which the gentleman figured was but a mock fight for the leadership of that side of the House, then if I had a vote in the matter I should say, let the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] continue in the leadership, because he is more open and undisguised; he seeks no concealment; he does not veil from the public gaze a proposition, however monstrous, which he is ready to embrace, nor will you ever hear him argue that the power is derived from the Constitution to pass such a bill as this. Not at all. He takes the ground now that he took some two or three years ago, that "all compacts between the North and South were abrogated and destroyed, and that thenceforth the fate of each section depended upon the will of the conqueror, under the laws of war and the laws of nations." Grant him his premises and he is always consistent in his conclusions; and certainly he will always contend boldly for his premises, whether you grant them or not. I think that they are all wrong; I am sure they are; but, as I have just said, the gentleman is too good a lawyer to claim power under the Constitution to pass such a bill. He claims it outside of the Constitution, from the laws of war and conquest.

I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to two predictions made by two great men—men great, however, in very different ways. All who were here during the period of which I speak will remember that from 1861 all through the war it was proclaimed publicly by the President over and over again, and by all his most distinguished supporters, that the Union was and must be perpetual; that it could not be dissolved or destroyed except by successful revolution. They all stood together upon that platform, and claimed and seemed to be Union men. But I recollect very distinctly that some two or three years ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] rose and repudiated the whole of that theory, and announced the doctrine "that all previously-existing compacts between the North and the South were abrogated and destroyed; and that thenceforth the doom of either section depended upon the result of the armed conflict; that if the South was conquered it would be subject to the absolute will of the conqueror!" and if the North should be conquered it would in like manner be subject to the South. That utterance called out quite a number of assailants, and members on that side of the House, from Massachusetts and elsewhere, combated his theory as ruinous and false. A fierce debate upon that theory sprung up at the time, and it found no favor from any quarter; but the gentleman poised himself and remarked that "he was generally a little in advance," that he was regarded as a pioneer; "but," said he, "after awhile you will all be with me." Two or three years have elapsed—that prediction is verified; and to-day these gentlemen are all with him, all ready to proclaim the same disunion doctrine.

The other prediction I wish to recall is that of another great man, from a different section of the country, and, as I have said, great in a very different way—a man who loved his country above all things else, a man who looked into the future with almost the vision of a prophet—Daniel Webster. He is reported to have exclaimed on one occasion—

"Let these infernal fanatics get control of the Government and they will treat the decisions of the Supreme Court with contempt; they will make laws to suit themselves; they will lay violent hands on all who oppose them; they will bankrupt the country, and finally deluge it with blood."

Now look at what has been done. That very party obtained control of the Government. There has been war; that war is over, but the Union is not restored, and at this very moment the public debt, mountain high, is casting its deadly and blighting shadow of bankruptcy over the whole country. We are literally bankrupt to-day; and generations to come must be ground to the earth under the crushing weight of this monstrous debt. Has not the land been deluged in blood, been literally reddened all over with the blood of half a million men?

And last, has not the Supreme Court been treated with contempt here in this very Hall? Yes, sir, we have seen here the attempt to bring into ridicule and contempt the last refuge of liberty for the oppressed. The only hope that now lights up the darkness of the horizon is that court; and that court has been rudely assailed here in this Hall, and why? Because it proclaimed a truth known to every lawyer who has read at all. That truth was that a "military commission taking charge of a citizen not connected with the Army or the Navy, and trying and executing him is guilty of murder." That is the whole of it. And I aver now that whenever a civilian, not connected with the Army or the Navy, is tried by a military commission, sentenced and executed, that is an act of cold-blooded murder; and there is not a lawyer in the United States who can frame even a plausible defense for such an act. And for declaring that truth the Supreme Court of the United States has been assailed and everywhere treated with contempt. And now, right in the face of that decision of the highest judicial tribunal of this country, it is proposed to reenact and sanction these bloody military commissions.

Now, as I said before, if any of these bills is to pass, I care not which it is. The one coming from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] is only veiled and concealed a little. It provides for military rule, for a brigadier general who is to command in Louisiana, and to have all the force he desires to carry out his will. There is the absolute control, the bloody despotism of military power; though kept a little in the background, it is not a whit better than the other bill.

Now, I again call on gentlemen who deny that the Union has been dissolved, for I suppose this military bill is to pass if any does, to pause before they take this last and final step. What does this bill do? It proclaims the Union dissolved; it declares that ten States are out of the Union; and if ten States are out all are out; the Constitution holds and binds all together or it holds none. It proclaims that the Union is dissolved; that the experiment of man's capacity for self-government is a failure. This is the last struggle, and I fear its result will be as sad and melancholy as that of former republics. All along the stream of time you can see the wrecks of departed republics.

The last experiment is now being made in this country. And yet gentlemen are disposed to rush madly upon the passage of a bill declaring in substance that the Union is dissolved, establishing an absolute military despotism over ten States with a population of eight or ten million people, giving to the military commander unlimited and absolute power over life, liberty, property, and all things else. True, it is said—and it is all the more humiliating that it is said—that when a military commission shall try and pass sentence of death upon a citizen, he shall not be executed until the brigadier general commanding shall approve the sentence. That is, a man is not to lose his head until there is time to prepare an ax and block.

And, then, another provision of the bill is still more humiliating; that while the writ of habeas corpus is suspended everywhere in the southern States it is placed under the absolute control of military officers, and a commissioned officer, a colonel in the Army, may, as an act of sovereign grace and mercy, give authority to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to issue a writ of habeas corpus. Now, how humiliating it is to talk about passing a bill that puts the judicial power of the United States, with all laws, constitutions, and courts, absolutely under the feet of military power!

And yet as an act of mere grace you say to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, if a colonel in the Army shall write giving you permission to do so, you may issue a writ of habeas corpus, but not otherwise.

Now, sir, it would be folly to inquire whether a bill like this finds any favor in the Constitution. That is a question which does not deserve argument. Every man who gives the subject impartial consideration must know that there is not a shadow of constitutional authority for it. Let me remind you, sir, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] does not pretend to claim constitutional authority for it. Why, sir, when West Virginia was erected into a State that gentleman himself declared that there was no constitutional authority for that step, and that he found no warrant for it in the Constitution, and that he voted for it on other grounds.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to state that what I said on that occasion was this: that I did not vote for the erection of that State under any provision of the Constitution giving us authority. My idea was that to call on Virginia as then organized to give consent to the formation of the State of West Virginia was absurd. I held, although all my friends on the other side of the House did not all coincide with me, that as part of the conquered territory of the nation, we had a right to deal with that State as we pleased. I voted for the bill on that ground.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I understood it so, precisely. But in that case, as in others, the gentleman from Pennsylvania was a pioneer. The gentleman on the other side have all adopted his doctrine, at least enough of them to sustain him in contending that the Union was dissolved and that the Constitution was no longer applicable to the question. I say it to the credit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he is always logical and consistent in his argument, though his premises on these questions are, as I think, always wrong; but grant his premises and you cannot combat his argument. He never held that there was any authority in the Constitution for the bill creating the State of West Virginia, nor does he take the ground that there is any authority in the Constitution for this military bill. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania is now in his seat I will repeat a remark which I made a short time ago when he was absent. I said that he was the first to make the startling announcement here in this House a few years ago, "That all compacts between the North and the South were abrogated, and that the laws of nations and of war thenceforward controlled the destinies of each party in the conflict then pending." That is his ground. He is too good a lawyer ever to claim that there is any warrant in the Constitution for this bill. He will not do it. Yet gentlemen on that side of the House who pretend to repudiate his doctrine follow him in the support of this measure.

If they had taken his ground they would at least have made a show of consistency. When he made the announcement to which I refer I was a little startled, and I remember that two or three gentlemen whom I see here sprang upon their feet and drew him into a sharp debate. But he said that he was a pioneer. The idea then occurred to me that with a sort of mischievous foresight he was looking forward to the termination of the war. He saw that this Union platform would only bear their expenses to the close of the war, and anticipating, what now occurs, that when the war was over and the rebellion suppressed, and these States being States in the Union there would be no constitutional ground for keeping them out. Hence he took the ground that he did, two or three years ago, looking forward with a degree of foresight that seemed to belong to none other of his party to the time when the States in rebellion should be conquered—the time when the war would have ceased. Hence he took the ground that the Union was dissolved, and all compacts between the North and the South abrogated, that the conquered would be subject to the will of the conqueror. Having taken that ground two or three years ago he now feels that he can consistently occupy it when the war is over.

At that time the doctrine of the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not find a single indorser. Yet he declared to those of his own party who took issue with him that he was a pioneer, and that they would all in due time come forward and occupy his ground. This has come to pass, and it seems to me that the whole host of that party are now madly rushing this Government headlong to destruction. Without stopping to argue in reference to this bill, I ask gentlemen who love republican government whether they are not alarmed at the idea that such a measure as this should find any favor here?

Think of the idea of establishing and enthroning a supreme, absolute despotism over eight or ten million people in the ten States of the South! Think of surrendering up every power into the hands of the military! But a few months ago you were alarmed at the mere shadow of monarchy in Mexico. The Monroe doctrine was urged against tolerating monarchy anywhere upon this continent, and yet gentlemen seem to have forgotten all that; they are now ready to establish and enthrone an absolute military despotism over ten States of the Union.

How long do you suppose there will be any respect felt for republican government in any part of the country? When the Supreme Court of the United States and the Chief Executive of the nation are denounced, when both are ridiculed and brought into contempt, when one third of our whole territory is surrendered up and passes into the hands of a bloody despotism, how long will the people revere the Constitution? How long will these military men in the South be satisfied with this power, with absolute and supreme power over one third of the Union? Does any man suppose they will be content with that? How long will it be before that despotism will extend and enlarge itself until it covers the whole Union?

Mr. Speaker, those military men who receive these appointments, who are to be intrusted with this absolute power of life and death over loyal and disloyal must of necessity have the spirit of tyrants. It is utterly impossible it can be otherwise. No matter what is intended, such is the result. You are going to place absolute power in the hands of the worst men to be found in the United States. There is no true patriot, no friend of his country, who will ever aid in subverting and destroying its liberty. In other words there is no man who will consent to do the work of a tyrant who is not a traitor and a tyrant himself. I say it boldly whenever you pass this bill, any man—I do not care what his fame may have been before—who accepts an office like this of absolute power of life and death over one third of the whole country must necessarily be a tyrant and traitor.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, no man who is not a tyrant himself can fill the office and do the work of a tyrant. You are, then, proposing to establish an absolute despotism without any hope that any other than a tyrant will fill the office. You cannot escape this conclusion; and I ask the House to mark it well.

Now, sir, we have been told the South have forfeited their rights. If they have, do you acquire constitutional power by reason of that forfeiture? Such has been the strange argument we have heard upon this floor, that we have the power to do this, that, and the other thing to establish a despotism over ten States of this Union. And why? Because they have forfeited their rights. Does any lawyer here contend that a forfeiture of rights enlarges the constitutional power of Congress? Do you acquire power in that way? No man who has a reputation as a lawyer can successfully uphold any such doctrine.

Let us look at it a little further. Gentlemen admit that there are loyal men in those States and loyal men have been there during the whole war, but loyalty it seems is to go for nothing under this bill. This military despotism is to press alike upon the loyal and the disloyal. It is therefore a cruel mockery to talk about the loyal people in the South when you establish a military despotism like this over loyal as well as disloyal. Loyal as well as disloyal, aged men and women, infants in the cradle, all alike to be crushed under this despotism!

Ah, but most of them are disloyal, you say. Are they? Does any man in his sober senses believe it is the right way to make them loyal to tax them without representation and treat them as slaves? Will they learn to love and reverence a Government when they are visited by nothing but its merciless cruelty and oppression?

And now, sir, in regard to all these stories of crime in the South that we have heard again and again until we are weary of their repetition. I do not pretend to say but what there are outrages in the South in almost every county, and possibly even in every neighborhood. But what of it? Suppose a record had been made up of the horrid crimes and barbarous cruelties that have occurred in any section of the North; is there a child that need be misled by it? The truth probably is, that the whole community in the North, South, East, and West has become to some extent demoralized. They have been accustomed to look upon the shedding of human blood with less horror than formerly. The whole land has been deluged as it were in blood. A terrible war has prevailed for four years, and the natural result is demoralization, and I apprehend there is quite as much of it, if not more, in the eastern States as anywhere else.

Let me cite a few examples. Only a few days ago we read an account of two aged females, (white women, one aged sixty and the other seventy,) living in a quiet, secluded place in the State of Maine, whose house was entered by ruffians, who first brutally violated their persons and then murdered them. You may look long before finding in the dark catalogue of crime a more brutal and savage outrage.

Mr. PERHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I cannot do so just now.

Mr. PERHAM. I wished to state a fact which may not be known to the country in connection with that outrage.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Another case is reported as occurring in the State of Ohio quite recently. A lieutenant in the Federal Army, named Blackburn, after serving in the war, married a widow, who had a child (a little daughter) seven years of age. They had not been married but a short time until these monsters conspired together, by a systematic course of fiendish cruelty, to murder and put this child out of the way. They beat and abused her from day to day, and when she complained of the bruises and pains in her limbs they thrust her arms upon a red-hot stove and roasted them until they were black and charred to the bone.

Another case, not quite so recent, occurred in the State of New York, where a clergyman named Lindsley whipped to death his own little boy, three or four years old, because, as it was first stated, the child would not say his prayers. The clergyman was tried the other day, convicted and sentenced for manslaughter. This was a white boy.

Then there was another case that I know more about, where a white man rushed upon a free woman and cut her throat without provocation. Her daughter and son rushed to her relief; he attempted to murder them and they narrowly escaped. But this free woman was white and her husband was the murderer, and all the murdered victims I have mentioned were white persons, and hence we have had no strolling vagabond committees prowling over the country to hunt up and report the facts.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The perpetrators were all arrested.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. How do you know that? [Laughter.] I could gather up from any section of the country cases enough of brutal outrages by husbands upon their wives and embody them in a document that would seem to be alarming. But what would it all amount to in the estimation of any sensible man? And this is what has been done in regard to cases in the South. It was narrated and published all through the land some time ago that some ten or fifteen negroes had been beaten almost to death, and were found congregated in the streets of Lexington, Kentucky, in a most pitiable condition. General Fisk was reported to have published this case in a speech at Cincinnati. The Legislature of Kentucky promptly ordered a committee of investigation; General Fisk was notified to attend. The investigation was made, and it was established by irrefragable proof that the whole story was a sheer fabrication. Well, the general may have thought so; he may have thought it was true. But we all know that those stories are very much exaggerated; and after all, you may go to the South and gather up all the worst cases you can hear of, yet the picture will not be so bad as that presented in the New England States—in Massachusetts or in Maine.

As to these stories of the South, is it not well known that during the last session of Congress letter-writers were sent all through the South to gather up such stories and send them home to the North? Why was it done? Because these radical politicians wanted a fiery, burning, sectional sentiment at home in the North to sustain them, and they sent out their agents to find or manufacture stories and send home to feed and fan it and keep it alive and burning.

Mr. PERHAM. I wish to say, by way of explanation, that the horrid murder referred to, which was committed in the State of Maine, was committed in my own district; and in justice to my constituents I must add that the man, who has been arrested, and who has confessed his guilt, has also confessed that he was formerly in the rebel army; so that he is one of the very kind of men that we propose to take care of by this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Well, would it have been any better if he had been in the Federal Army? Blackburn, the man in Ohio, had been in the Federal Army, and yet he helped to roast his step-child over a red-hot stove. A man is neither better nor worse for having been in the Army. The crime, the murder, is neither aggravated nor extenuated because the criminal has been in any army, north or South.

Why, sir, the returns from all the eastern States show an increase of crime there. The number of white children who are flogged there almost to death is quite alarming. Then there was that Philadelphia case, of which I am just reminded, where a whole family were cut up. But what of all these things? Every sensible man knows that such instances can be multiplied to any desired extent by whoever will take the trouble to collect all the cases of crime occurring in any one section of the country, especially now when crime has been so much increased by the presence in the community of returned soldiers from the armies. [Laughter.] Yes, sir, that is true; and it is perfectly natural that it should be so. Because while it is certainly true that large numbers of good and patriotic men went into the Army, it is equally true that the drift-wood floated in too. When war comes it is unavoidable that, however many good men may go into it, the lawless, violent, and reckless will certainly go too; and when peace comes and these reckless men are thrown back into the community, an increase of violence and crime is the certain result.

Well, here we are. And what has this Reconstruction Committee done? Formed in spite of all that could be said against it, and clothed with almost absolute power, that committee has "investigated" and reported, and reported, and reported, until now it is manifest it has become entirely demoralized, and unless some wholesome reconstruction process is speedily applied to it the Republican party is gone. [Laughter.] Now, some friends of that party ought to interpose. Gentlemen of the Republican party, you are in an emergency; your Reconstruction Committee is demoralized; its members are at war with each other, and cannot agree upon anything; and you ought to confer upon the Speaker power to disband and discharge them from the service. They have certainly done enough for their country, and it would be very cruel and hard to insist upon their continued service. Therefore I say the Speaker ought to have power to discharge them and appoint a new committee; having due regard, of course, to the Constitution, taking care to select men good and true, without regard to race or color, [laughter,] and then something might be done. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINCK.]

Mr. FINCK. How much time will there be for me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, [Mr. BROMWELL.] The gentleman will have eight minutes.

Mr. FINCK. It will be impossible for me in the course of the few minutes allowed me to enter fully upon any argument in regard to this measure. What is the particular question involved? It is no less a question, than that of the power of Congress to upset and overturn a State government, and to substitute a government of its own in its place. This bill, Mr. Speaker, proposes by its first section that there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Governor for the State of Louisiana. Here is a proposition for the appointment of a Governor of a State to be made by Federal authority—a Governor to be so appointed for a State in the Union, having all its courts and its legislative and executive departments organized and in full operation. This bill goes upon the theory that Louisiana is one of the States of this Union; because it is described in this bill as "the State of Louisiana." The first section provides—

That the President of the United States shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a Governor for the State of Louisiana, who shall hold his office for one year, unless sooner removed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or unless sooner superseded by a successor elected under the provisions of this act. Such Governor so appointed shall have attained the age of thirty years, shall be a citizen of the United States and of the State of Louisiana.

The second section provides—

That the President shall forthwith nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a provisional council, consisting of nine persons, who shall have the same qualifications as are herein prescribed for the office of Governor, and who, before being confirmed by the Senate, shall on oath make, sign, and file with said Secretary the same oath as is prescribed for the Governor. Such councilors shall continue to hold their office, unless sooner removed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until a Legislature shall be duly elected and qualified under the provisions of this act. Such provisional council shall, with the Governor, have all legislative power in such State.

Now, here is involved in this bill the important propositions of the power of the Federal Government to make the Governor and the Legislature for a sovereign State of this Union. Where do you get your power to do that? I deny at the outset that there is any power under our Constitution for the Federal Government to appoint the Governor for the people of the State of Louisiana, or to intervene and select a Legislature for that State. What is the Federal Government and what are the powers conferred upon the legislative branch of the Federal Government? It is a Government created by a written Constitution, enjoying and exercising certain fixed and limited powers. And by a provision of that Constitution it is prohibited from the exercise of any power which has not been conferred upon it by the Constitution of the United States. And no such power as is assumed by this bill is conferred either upon the General Government or any department of it.

You might as well invade the jurisdiction of the State of New York, depose its Governor, set aside its Legislature, and appoint a new Governor and a new Legislature for the people of that great State, because that power is assumed by the provisions of this bill. Sir, I deny any such power. From the earliest records of our history, from the first settlement of the American colonies by our ancestors, the people of each of the colonies and each of the States have exercised the right of regulating their own internal concerns. These are rights that belong to a free people. Now, by this revolutionary legislation you seek to overthrow these first principles of government, to ignore the great doctrines which were established by our fathers, and which are written down not only in our past history, but in the constitutions of the several States and in the Constitution of the Federal Government. You not only propose to do that by this bill, but you propose to do more.

You propose by this bill to exercise the right of declaring who shall be the electors in the States of the South, or at least who shall be the electors in the State of Louisiana. From whence do you obtain that power? Is it contained within the Constitution of the United States? Have you a right to go into the State of Ohio, or into the State of North Carolina, and declare who shall there exercise the right of suffrage? If you cannot do it in Ohio, you cannot do it in Louisiana, because it is one of the States of this Union, equal in all its rights and dignities with the other States of the Union.

Now, I utterly deny the doctrine of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SEVENS] that Louisiana is held as a conquered territory. I hold, as this bill declares, that Louisiana is today one of the States of the Union. And being one of the States of the Union, you have no power whatever to invade its jurisdiction, and appoint its Governor and Legislature. And why do you propose to do it? Is Louisiana to-day in a state of rebellion against the Government of the United States? Not a word of evidence to that effect is before this House. Is her government not republican in form? We have no allegation in this bill to the contrary, and every man knows that her government is republican in form.

And by what arguments do you propose to support this bill? The only argument I have heard, is that in July last a riot took place in the city of New Orleans. Is it upon that ground that this bill is to be passed into a law? A riot did, indeed, take place there, most shocking and terrible, and a disgrace to all those who united to bring it about or to carry it on. But the fact of that riot does not add a particle to the constitutional power of Congress to invade that State and frame a government and appoint a Governor and Legislature for its people.

The SPEAKER. The hour allowed to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] has expired. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FINCK. Will not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] allow me ten minutes longer?

Mr. ELIOT. Will it not answer the purpose of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINCK] if I allow him ten minutes of my time after the previous question has been seconded? I have no objection to allowing him ten minutes then if that will satisfy him.

Mr. ROSS. I would like to inquire of the chair by what authority the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] has the floor at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will explain to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] and to the House. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HARDING,] who obtained the floor for the second hour of debate yielded by the gentleman from Massachusetts, gave up the remainder of the hour, at the conclusion of his remarks, to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINCK.] The gentleman from Ohio inquired of the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BROMWELL] how much time there remained to him, and was informed that there were eight minutes remaining. Those eight minutes have now expired, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] having reported the bill, now resumes the floor.

Mr. ELIOT. Mr. Speaker, after the previous question is seconded, if the gentleman from Ohio desires ten minutes more I will give it to him with pleasure. I withdraw the motion to recommit, and call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] is entitled to the floor to close the debate.

Mr. ELIOT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINCK.]

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Speaker, is there a state of war existing in this country? because it is upon this assumption, as I understand, that the legislation of this Congress in regard to the southern States is to be based. I deny that there is a state of war existing within the Union. There is not in any one of these States a single arm upraised against the just authority and jurisdiction of the United States. We are in a state of peace. The people of the State of Louisiana are in a state of peace. There is within that State no resistance to the Federal Government. There would be no difficulty about the restoration of these States to their just and rightful relations to the Federal Government but for the attempt of the majority of this Congress to perpetuate their power in defiance of the will of a majority of the people of the thirty-six States of this Union. The purpose is to compel these States to indorse the policy of these Radicals, whose doctrines, if carried out successfully, would subvert the Constitution and disrupt the Union.

Sir, these men are not the friends of the union of these States under the Constitution. By their legislation they have committed themselves in favor of a dissolution of the Union. They are not the friends of the Union, because the very effect of this bill and kindred measures before the House is to prevent the union of the States and to strike down the great right of local government in the States. For, sir, if you may put the State of Louisiana under this kind of government to be organized by Congress, and deprive her people of the free exercise of their constitutional rights, exclude their Senators and Representatives from Congress until such time as it may please a majority of this House and the Senate to admit them, you may by the same exercise of power invade the rights of any other State and thus effectually subvert the constitutional rights of the people of any of the States and destroy their governments.

Mr. Speaker, the voice of the people of the United States is not fairly represented on this floor. Not only are ten of the States utterly ignored and denied all representation in either House of Congress, but even the people of the States which are represented have not their fair proportion of power here. Look at my own State, for I cannot go into an examination of all the States. Look at Ohio, with her two hundred and thirteen thousand Democratic voters and her two hundred and fifty-six thousand Republican voters at the last election. What is her representation upon this floor? That State has nineteen Representatives in this House, seventeen of those represent the Republican element in Ohio; two represent the Democratic and Conservative element of that State. Two hundred and thirteen thousand voters are represented by two members on this floor, one hundred and six thousand five hundred to each member! Two hundred and fifty-six thousand voters are represented on this floor by seventeen members. It therefore requires nearly one hundred and seven thousand of the Democratic voters of Ohio to exercise one vote here on this side of the House, while each fifteen thousand Republican voters of that State have one vote on the other side of the House. So that in effect it takes seven Democratic voters of Ohio to equal one Republican voter in that State in the power of representation on this floor; and this gross inequality, I believe, exists almost to the same extent in some of the other States, while the Democratic element of the six New England States have not a single voice in the legislation of this House.

I repeat it, therefore, the voice of the people is not fairly represented upon this floor. It is a struggle on the part of those who have power here to maintain that power, in my judgment, against the will of the actual majority of the people of these thirty-six States.

When I denounce this measure, as I have already done, as revolutionary in its character I say but what is the truth. If you have the power under the Constitution to make governments for those States, not only to dictate their governments, but also to dictate who shall be their executive, legislative, and judicial officers, then you have the power to destroy all government within the States. It is an attempt, sir, not only to overthrow a government existing in one of the States, but it is an attempt to control that government, to take it out of the hands of your own race and to confer power upon another race who have heretofore been the servants of the white race of Louisiana.

You propose by this bill to exclude and disfranchise the white citizens of Louisiana, and to enfranchise the negroes of that State so that they may have the power and control of the government of that State. And where do you get that power to do all this? Anywhere in the Constitution? You look in vain for any such authority in that instrument. Yet you assume it, and by what authority? By the law of nations and the law of war? They, Mr. Speaker, have no application to this case. You cannot rightfully to-day exercise any jurisdiction over these States by the law of nations; the only warrant you have for authority in the exercise of jurisdiction is the Constitution of the United States, and that confers none which authorizes this bill.

But, sir, I cannot in the few minutes allowed to me enter into any detailed examination of the provisions of this bill. Indeed, this monstrous measure is proposed to be pushed upon the House without any information or statement of facts why it should be passed. Your committee sent out to investigate the riot at New Orleans have made a report, and yet, before that report has been printed and before we can examine the facts gathered by the committee, we are called upon to vote upon a measure like this, which is revolutionary; which overturns one government and establishes another in its stead over seven hundred thousand people in the State of Louisiana. The gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, whose magnanimity went so far as to yield two hours for debate, was kind enough to say that these two hours were to be used by this side of the House, and he did not even in the opening of this debate venture upon any statement in justification of this revolutionary measure of deposing a State government by an act of Congress and creating another by the same assumed power.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, this is not so startling a proposition as the one we had up the other day, because this affects but one State while that affects ten. But the doctrine is still the same. Both invade the rights of the people; both usurp power; both are revolutionary in their purposes; both are unwarranted by the Constitution; both postpone indefinitely the restoration to the people of these States their just rights and relations with the Federal Union; both invade the foundation upon which this Government rests, that all Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.

Mr. ELIOT resumed the floor.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I understand the report which the committee have made to charge, in substance, the President of the United States at least countenanced and encouraged this New Orleans riot. It is apparent that he is wedded to these rebel governments of the South. I desire, therefore, to ask the chairman of the committee whether he thinks it is safe to vest in the President the power to appoint the provisional governor and the other officers contemplated by this bill, to which the President is opposed? And I ask further whether there is any warrant in the Constitution to confer this power on the head of the War Department whom we know to be loyal and true and sound upon this question? Will he not yield to me to propose an amendment to that effect?

Mr. ELIOT. Mr. Speaker, of course I cannot yield to my friend for any such purpose. The question of safety is always embarrassing. Sometimes it may be safer to do a thing which at other times would be very dangerous. We have examined with a great deal of care the question which the gentleman from New York has suggested, and I am free to say, as I understand the provisions of the Constitution, it would not be right for us to legislate so as to give the power of appointment elsewhere than as provided by this bill. But the power is guarded very carefully, and the gentleman will find upon examination of the provisions of the bill that before any officer contemplated by the first and second sections can enter upon his duties he has not only to take the oath and produce the proof called for, but to obtain the action of the Senate confirming the action of the President. If it should so happen, which I trust will not be the case, that a nomination should be made of men who, having power, would use it against the Union men who have already suffered from men in power there, it is my belief that the power of the Senate under the Constitution will be sufficient to restrain that action.

Mr. WARD, of New York. A single other question. Does the gentleman think this power could not be constitutionally vested in the Secretary of War, the head of the Department which is called upon more than any other to execute this law? Why could you not vest the power in a friend of the law?

Mr. ELIOT. It is very manifest if the power should be conferred upon the Secretary of War it would in substance and effect be conferred upon the President, for the Secretary of War is one of the servants of the President, and may be removed without notice. There is no provision that I am aware of by which we could obtain the action of the Senate except through a nomination by the Executive. There have been various propositions urged by different members of the House, and upon the whole it has seemed to me and to the committee that the safest course to recommend is that which has been embodied in this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the committee have reported this bill upon the order of the House. They have done so upon facts examined into. In the judgment of a majority of the committee it was the bounden duty of this House, if in point of fact there is an obligation resting upon the Government to support, defend, and protect its own constant efforts against men who through the rebellion have been its constant enemies, that there should be action in this direction.

Now, sir, I do not remember since I have held a seat on this floor that I have ever been unwilling to forego the pleasure of speaking for the sake of voting. I should be glad to defend the provisions of this bill, but in point of fact there has not been one provision of it attacked. The gentleman who has just resumed his seat [Mr. FINCK] was the only one on the other side, if I am not mistaken, who thought it worth while to discuss in any respect the provisions of the bill. Those who preceded him have used up the time by—

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman yield to me for about five minutes? I wish to call his attention to some of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. I cannot say no to that appeal. I will yield five minutes if he will give us his help to pass the bill when his time has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. LE BLOND. Of course we on this side will do what is right, but I will not agree to vote with the gentleman. [Laughter.] The gentleman says no member on this side has attacked the provisions of the bill. Sir, it is not necessary that it should be attacked. The whole theory of the bill is radically wrong when you take into consideration the fact that we have a Constitution that we have sworn to support and to be governed by. But, sir, the other side of the House has ignored the Constitution.

And here let me say that in the conflict of opinion on that side of the House there is no one who foresaw the difficulties that we were to encounter so well as the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] At an early period in this contest he foresaw where we were drifting, and for the purpose of meeting it he at once took the position that these States were conquered provinces, whose people were mere subjects to be dealt with according to the will of the majority of Congress. But who does not remember that when he proclaimed that doctrine in this House there were not within these walls ten men who approved it? Since that period a change has come over the spirit, the dreams of the other side, and we now find them, if not yielding themselves willing subjects to his doctrine, at least willing to vote for provisions quite as bad and quite as revolutionary as any that have been indicated by that gentleman.

Now, sir, as to the provisions of this bill in its detail. Here you will find in the fifth section of this act that they have provided that any man who has lived in the State of Louisiana one year, though it may have been twenty years ago, may return to that State and vote for the men who are to be elected to the convention to frame a constitution. I will call the gentleman's attention directly to that provision. The fifth section says that—electors and entitled to vote at all elections held under the provisions of this act, namely: every male citizen of the United States, without distinction of race or color, who has attained to the age of twenty-one years and has resided in Louisiana one year, and who has never borne arms against the United States.

So that you propose by this bill to let in men who have resided in that State at any time for one year go down there and control the elections, even against the will of the men whom you claim to be the exclusively loyal citizens of that State.

If that is not your intention, why not say that those who shall have resided in the State for one year next preceding the election shall be allowed to vote? But it seems to me that that was intentionally omitted, so that even the "loyal" citizens of that State might be controlled and that no constitution might be framed that would not meet the views of the party in power.

Turn to another section, the ninth. There you give to the military authorities power to take a man out of the hands of the civil authorities and retain him, without limit as to time. Why make that provision? Why not provide a legal remedy in such cases, and let the civil authorities dispose of them? This gives to any military officer there, under certain circumstances, a right to arrest a man, and fixes no time when he shall be required to release him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. ELIOT. I was in the middle of a sentence when the gentleman from Ohio interrupted me, and now I have absolutely forgotten what the beginning of it was about, and I will not ask the reporter to let me know what it was. I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read a portion of a letter which I received yesterday from a citizen of New Orleans, Julian Neville, a grandson of General Neville, of revolutionary memory, and a great-great-grandson of General Daniel Morgan, whose name and character are known to most of the members of this House. Now, sir, let the letter speak for itself. I ask the Clerk to read the portions that I have indicated by lines in the margin.

The Clerk then read a portion of the letter, as follows:

"Can nothing be done to relieve us of this incubus, this misrule? There is no doubt that the quiet, peaceable citizens, planters included, would hail with joy a government, military or otherwise, that would protect them from this infernal tyranny under which we now exist. It is composed of the same parties who forced the State into rebellion, who are active, vigilant, and unscrupulous.

"Cannot patriots do something for our relief? Are something must be done soon or we shall be so far in the 'slough of despond' that it will be impossible to drag through. Oh, my friend, I never despaired before, and myself and friends are now resisting, and will do so as long as we are able. The Governor stands up to the line of battle firmly, refusing to give an inch, but he requires encouragement from your body, and for the sake of loyalty and for the sake of God extend a helping hand to us, or the Union men of the South will become scape-goats of the party and carry all the sins on our back and eventually be compelled to leave our homes; it will be impossible to exist.

"Very truly, yours, with great respect and consideration, JULIAN NEVILLE."

Mr. ELIOT. Now I desire to have read by the Clerk certain resolutions which were adopted last night by the southern loyalists, now in this city, representing the various States named in the document.

The Clerk read the following:

OFFICE OF SOUTHERN REPUBLICAN ASSOCIATION,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1867.

At a meeting of the Southern Republican Association this evening, the following resolutions were adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That this association, having carefully considered the principles and details of the bill for the reconstruction of civil government in Louisiana, introduced this day into the House of Representatives by Hon. THOMAS D. ELIOT, chairman of the committee to investigate the New Orleans riots, heartily indorse the same, and request Congress to pass it; and also request Congress to pass a similar bill for the reorganization of the other unconquered States on the same principle.

Resolved, That members of this association sign the foregoing resolution, specifying the State to which they respectively belong, and that the president cause a certified copy to be placed in the hands of Mr. ELIOT, to be by him communicated to Congress.

D. H. BINGHAM, Secretary.

Mr. BOYER. Will my colleague on the committee [Mr. ELIOT] allow me to state the antecedents of some of those gentlemen who have signed the paper just read in behalf of the Union men of Louisiana?

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly not.

Mr. BOYER. It would not be suitable.

Mr. ELIOT. I now propose to yield a portion of my time to—

Mr. NOELL. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] to yield to me for a half an hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELIOT. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has thirty minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. ELIOT. Of course the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NOELL] will perceive that I could hardly yield him all the time I have left. I will yield him ten minutes.

Mr. NOELL. Then I will take the ten minutes.

Mr. ELIOT. And after that I will yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.]

Mr. NOELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill which is now under consideration contains in it features diametrically opposed to the whole policy of the party that is pressing it at this time. Living in the State of Missouri for some years past, I and others there have had a taste of the kind of government that is attempted to be set up by this bill in the State of Louisiana.

Now, ignoring the question of the constitutionality of the provisions of this bill, I shall proceed to address myself to the political results which will naturally follow the adoption of this measure. By it the whole theory of our Government is attempted to be changed. That theory is that the Government derives its powers from the consent of the governed. We are now to start a new theory, that the people of the States derive their power from the people of some other portion of the Union, and that a majority of a fraction of the Union shall control the whole nation. Following up that theory a government is to be imposed upon, and a constitution is to be prescribed—mark the word, "prescribed"—which shall be adopted by the people of that State.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will my colleague [Mr. NOELL] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NOELL. Very well.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether when he speaks about the people of Missouri having had a taste of what this government will be he meant the fruits of his victory when he was first elected to Congress, and if the taste of that fruit gathered on that occasion is not yet vividly upon his tongue?

Mr. NOELL. I cannot perceive that the question has any pertinence to the subject before us; and I have no time to address myself to mere personalities.

The constitution which is prescribed by this bill for the State of Louisiana is not republican in form; but it is the same thing which was foreshadowed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] in his amendment proposed to the military bill reported from the joint Committee on Reconstruction a few days ago. I do not know whether he attempted to anticipate and steal the thunder of the gentleman who reported this bill, or whether the one who reported this bill was trying to steal the thunder of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Now, here is a bill by which the Secretary of War, known to be in the interests of a partisan faction in this country, is to appoint officers for the State of Louisiana. The Governor and Legislature of Louisiana are to be appointed by the Federal power. The government of Louisiana is to be set up by the power of a government to be perpetuated in the hands of such men as the Secretary of War shall designate.

Now, I ask what is the difference in the appointment of men for Governor and the Legislature and the appointment of the voters who shall elect those men? Allow me to designate who shall vote and to strike off from the register those who are politically opposed to me, and I will control the action of any State in the Union. By this bill civil government is attempted to be followed up by a system of militia to be established upon the same qualifications that are prescribed for voters. The militia of the State is to be composed of men who are qualified voters under this act. We have already had introduced here a bill for the establishment of a great "national guard," to extend all over this country, and to exercise supreme military control. And by its provisions all other military and police organizations are to be disbanded and the members of such organizations punished.

We are coming upon the times when this country can no longer trust to the devotion of the people for its support, but like an eastern prince it must trust to the power of armed janizaries to uphold its power. The Secretary of War, a man altogether loyal, is to designate the voters and the registering officers and prescribe rules and regulations for the government of the citizens of Louisiana. The gentleman from Massachusetts described the situation of the State of Louisiana as the great heart of loyalty, through whose great rivers and channels of commerce the great arteries of loyalty extend into all the country. In establishing this heart of loyalty it is the object of the gentleman to make it as black as possible.

In the bill under consideration it is proposed that the President of the United States shall appoint these officers by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. From the threats which are thrown out here it is very clear that if the President does not appoint men who will carry out the partisan ends of those who desire this measure, they will then, in the language of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS], "drop legislation and proceed to consider the condition of the country."

It has been said of old, "accursed is the nation whose prince is illegitimate," for when the prince or Government devotes its time to keeping itself safe by armed force, there is no time to administer the Government for the good of the people. When we in a republican form of government attempt to prescribe constitutions and designate portions of the people of any State who are to possess all authority in that State, we must neglect the interests of the people to uphold our authority. Not only have we presented to us a proposition under which a fraction of the people of the South are to carry out the revolutionary scheme of subordinating the white race to the control of the negroes, but this is coupled with threats of confiscation, which clearly mean that the property of those people is to be confiscated on the pretext of giving negroes social power, and thrown into the hands of political speculators.

The gentleman from Massachusetts said on Saturday last that the duty of Congress was embraced in three words—liberty, emigration, census.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NOELL. I have some documents which I desire to have printed as a portion of my remarks.

No objection was made, and leave to print was accordingly granted.

The documents are as follows:

To his Excellency the President of the United States:

The undersigned, as United States assessor for the sixth collection district of Missouri, would respectfully submit to your Excellency the following statement in regard to the unfortunate and disturbed condition of things in the county of La Fayette, my residence:

1. Martial law has been proclaimed by the Governor in said county, as he avers "he is satisfied that ordinary process cannot be executed, and a sufficient posse will not respond to the call of the officer for that purpose." It is not alleged that civil process has been resisted or that the citizens have been called upon by the proper officer and refused to respond, which alone could, under the Constitution of the United States, authorize the placing of the county under martial law and the calling out of the militia of the State. The facts are that no process has ever been resisted in the county; that the citizens have never failed or refused to respond to the call of the civil officers; that the great mass of the citizens of the county are ready and willing at any and all times, if needed or called upon, to aid the civil officers in the enforcement of the laws against all offenders; that the civil officers of the county stand ready at all times to execute the laws, and say they need no military aid in doing so; and it is not at their request nor by their desire that martial law has been proclaimed and troops quartered upon the people of the county, and there is no necessity whatever to justify such interposition of the Governor.

2. Since such quartering of militia from other counties they have by their lawlessness and violence interrupted the execution of the civil laws and also the revenue laws of the United States by driving out the sheriff and his deputies, and the United States assessor and collector of said district, whose lives are threatened if they return. They have taken the United States assistant assessor a prisoner.

3. They are committing such acts of violence upon the citizens of said county as to cause many of them to flee from their homes and business, and to cause a complete suspension of business in said county. For the further information of your Excellency we enumerate the following among the many acts of bloodshed and violence perpetrated by said militia, who are in the main composed of desperate men, some of whom were known during the late war as Confederate bushwhackers. William H. Bowen, county clerk for the county, was attacked and beaten by them and driven from his office and his life threatened. Alexander Mitchell, a prominent Union man and banker, was stopped upon the street by one of the militia, a revolver presented to his head, and he compelled to remain quiet while he was robbed. Next morning, in company with Major Kelly, of General Hancock's staff, he called upon Major Montgomery, the commander of the militia, and pointed out the man who robbed him. Some of the stolen property was found in his possession. The life of Mr. Mitchell was then threatened and he was compelled to flee the county. On the same night Mr. Mansfield, a gentleman from Michigan, and four other gentlemen were robbed and beaten in the streets. Three went to the residence of John Aull, county treasurer, drew their revolvers, and threatened to shoot his wife. A squad of them attacked Major John E. Ryland, who was during the war in the United States military service, and were about to maltreat him when Major Montgomery coming up compelled them to desist, telling them to have no controversies with citizens on the streets, but if any citizen insulted them to shoot him down at once.

There was a citizen named Richardson shot on the streets and killed since they have been in the city. The murderer has not yet been identified. The United States Express has been robbed by them. A quiet and peaceful citizen named Mason was shot by them and dangerously wounded. A large number of Union citizens, among whom we name James M. Poole, the sheriff of the county, and who was in the United States service during the entire war; his deputy, Jacob A. Price, a prominent Union man, and his two sons; Z. Ryland, who also served during the war in the United States service; the county attorney for the county, H. Beverly Vaughan; the United States assistant assessor, and who was during the war also in the United States military service, and many others overtaken by the militia and held as prisoners, and some of them badly beaten and otherwise maltreated, and when discharged were told by the commander that if any of his men were hurt or injured, that no matter who did it they should be held responsible. The commander of the militia threatened to set fire to the City Hotel, and ordered turpentine for the purpose, but was prevailed upon to desist. If fired it would have burned the most valuable business square in the city. Squads were searching for the United States assessor for the district, threatening his life. All the roads leading out of the city were guarded by them, and I escaped by the ferry over the river, which a few minutes afterward was also guarded by them. The lives, liberty, and property of the citizens are at the mercy of these desperate and lawless men, sent into the county, it is said, by order of the Governor, some two weeks before the issuing of his proclamation, which is herewith inclosed, and they are now being reinforced by large numbers of the most desperate men in the State, under the call of the Governor for troops. A statement of the facts, signed by leading citizens of the county, was laid before the Governor, and he was solicited to remove them or protect the citizens, assured of the ability of the civil officers to enforce the laws if the militia were withdrawn, and of the willingness of the citizens to aid them in doing so. The only response to that application was forwarded by the Governor to the commander of the militia at Lexington, who, with a squad of his men, mobbed Colonel Casper Gruber, a leading Union citizen, because he had aided in having the application or statement made to the Governor.

The United States revenue laws cannot be executed in the district while this lamentable condition of things exists. The United States assistant assessor for Ray county is also made a prisoner by the militia.

In view of the interruption to the United States laws in said district, and the fact that civil officers of the United States cannot remain in said district without protection against the violence of these lawless men, who are now in possession of the county, we respectfully solicit the interposition of your Excellency to protect us in the discharge of our duties as assessor in said district, and that your Excellency will take such steps as will lead to a full and complete investigation of the outrages perpetrated upon a loyal and peaceful people under this unfounded and false pretext, that the law cannot be executed in said county.

RICHARD C. VAUGHAN,

United States Assessor, Sixth District, Missouri.

We, the undersigned, citizens of Lexington and county of La Fayette, state that we know the foregoing recital of some of the outrages perpetrated upon the people of La Fayette county, as set forth by the United States Assessor, R. C. Vaughan, to be true, and they can be established by the concurrent testimony of the great mass of the people of the county, including the civil officers. And we most earnestly and respectfully unite in the prayer of said petition for protection, under the laws of the United States, to our lives and property, and that an investigation may be instituted at the earliest period practicable.

A. GREEN.

ALEXANDER MITCHELL.

THOMAS B. WALLACE.

United States Marshal, Western District of Missouri.

JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI, December 12.

The Governor has issued the following supplemental proclamation:

To the citizens of La Fayette and Jackson counties:

Having become satisfied that the ordinary process of law cannot be executed in your counties, and that a sufficient posse will not respond to the call of an officer for that purpose, I have, by authority of the act of the General Assembly of the 14th of March, 1866, entitled "An act to provide for the enforcement of the civil law" &c., called into active service twenty-four companies of cavalry and ten companies of infantry for duty in the counties of La Fayette and Jackson, which counties will be required to raise by taxation the amount necessary to pay said force. Whenever I am satisfied that the people of the counties named will enforce the law against all men who have violated it, as they can and ought to do, and shall, by their support of civil authority, give the usual legal protection to the law-abiding citizens, and each civil-doer has a proper fear of the punishments of the law, the troops ordered there will be withdrawn.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State of Missouri. Done at the city of Jefferson, this 12th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1866, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-first, and of the State of Missouri the forty-seventh.

THOMAS C. FLETCHER.

By the Governor:

FRANCIS RODMAN, Secretary of State.

ST. LOUIS, December 21, 1866.

I have the honor to state that during nearly two years of the past war I was in command of the United States forces in the district of country herein referred to. That I am personally and intimately acquainted with the signers of this petition and statement, and know that they were original Union men and have ever been such, and that they are men of unblemished reputation and character. I also say that I am personally acquainted with the men who have been sent by the Governor to La Fayette county as militiamen, either personally or by their general reputation, and know them to be men of bad character, a portion of whom were dishonorably dismissed the service for bad conduct, and some of them have the reputation of having been rebel bushwhackers.

E. B. BROWN,

Late Brigadier General Volunteers.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI, December 20, 1866.

To the President of the United States;

The undersigned, citizens of the State of Missouri, respectfully represent that they are well acquainted with Messrs. R. C. Vaughan, Amos Green, A. Mitchell, and Thomas B. Wallace, who have signed the accompanying statement in relation to the deplorable condition of affairs in the city of Lexington, and county of La Fayette, in this State. They are gentlemen of unblemished private character and of well-known loyalty. Mr. Vaughan was among the first to take arms for the Government during the late rebellion, and was made prisoner by the rebels at the time of the capture of Colonel Mulligan, and served subsequently until near the close of the war, with the rank of brigadier general in the service of the State.

Mr. Green is a lawyer of high character and social position in Lexington, and known to the whole community as a firm and decided Union man. Mr. Mitchell was also in the service during the war as a quartermaster, with the rank of major. Mr. Wallace was appointed United States marshal for the western district of Missouri by Mr. Lincoln at the beginning of his Administration, and has been reappointed to that position by your Excellency.

The undersigned, therefore, do not hesitate to indorse fully the statement of these gentlemen and call upon your Excellency to exert the power of the Government to arrest and punish the outrages which have been, and are now being committed upon an unoffending and unresisting community, whom the Executive of this State, in violation of law and without any justifiable pretext, has made the victims of robbery and murder.

The extraordinary occurrences detailed in the statement of Messrs. Vaughan and others would naturally excite incredulity, if the history of this State for the past few years had not prepared most men of intelligence and observation to expect such a catastrophe.

The government of the State of Missouri has long since ceased to be republican except in its mere name. The present Governor of the State and State officers were elected in the midst of the recent war. At the same time a constitutional convention was called to consider amendments to our constitution. At that time the great body of patriotic citizens of our State who were exerting themselves to put down the rebellion were absent from the State serving as soldiers in the armies of the United States; war was flagrant in almost every county of the State, and in many places the polls surrounded by armed men from other States and the militia of our own State.

The result was the success of those who clamored most loudly against the rebellion, but whose conduct in remaining at home during the war showed a keener appetite for civil office, as a means of its overthrow, than for the hardship and danger of service in the field. The constitutional convention thus elected passed an ordinance vacating almost all the civil offices in the State, even those elected at the same time and by the same votes by which their own power was conferred, and gave to the Governor of the State the power of appointment to all the offices thus vacated. The Governor, under this authority, reappointed such as were his friends and partisans, and filled the other vacancies from the same class of persons. The convention then made a new constitution which was not submitted to the people of the State for ratification, but to those of the people only who would take an oath which the convention had prescribed, which oath is believed to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and which thousands of our most loyal citizens could not conscientiously take, and least of all those who favored the oath and forced it upon the people of the State.

The result was that eighty-five thousand votes only were cast at the election upon the ratification of the constitution, less by some twenty thousand than the number of soldiers contributed by the State to the armies of the Union, and only one half of the number of votes polled in this State at the presidential election of 1860. The new constitution was proclaimed to be ratified by eighteen hundred majority; some of the strongest Union counties at the first outbreak of the war giving the heaviest majorities against it, and some of the strongest secession counties in the State at that period giving majorities for it. Thus at an election in which more than one half of the people were disfranchised by an unconstitutional test oath, many thousands of those thus disfranchised being in the service as soldiers of the Republic, by a minority vote of the people this new constitution was fastened upon the State as its fundamental law. The constitution required a registry law to be put in force and one was enacted, born of the spirit which made the constitution and intended to retain the power of the State in the hands of the minority who had made it.

This registration law gave the Governor the authority to appoint a supervisor who was to appoint the registrars for every county in the State, and the registrars thus appointed had the power substantially to appoint the voters. They could with or without evidence reject the vote of any one or admit to the franchise whomsoever they pleased. The judges of election were appointed by the judges of the county courts, all of whom were appointed by the Governor and the clerk of the county court, whose duty it was to give the certificate of election to the successful candidates, was also appointed by the Governor. No single link of the chain of despotism by which the absolute control of the elections was given to the Governor will be found wanting in this elaborately contrived plan. So shameless and careless even of appearances were the contrivers of this palpable fraud that at the last election in this State a large number of the registrars and supervisors were themselves candidates for the most lucrative offices in the several counties while making out the lists of qualified voters.

The result of the election, if that can be called an election in which one political party had the power to disfranchise its political antagonists, was, as it was intended it should be, to confirm the power of the minority and retain its leaders in office. The majority of the people of the State, disfranchised by their political antagonists, have nevertheless submitted peacefully and quietly in the hope and expectation that their constitutional right of suffrage would be restored to them by an appeal to the judiciary of the United States, and that with its restoration the State would again resume its republican character, in fact as well as in name, and that the fundamental principles of liberty would be vindicated and enforced.

It is not to be supposed that those who have committed such crimes against popular liberty would hesitate to commit further and greater crimes to retain the power they have usurped. Nor is it to be supposed that these crimes have been perpetrated for the mere purpose of possessing themselves of the modest emoluments of office prescribed during the days of our former republican frugality and simplicity; nor has the honor which attended these positions, as attesting the confidence of our fellow-citizens, much attraction for those who no longer seek them through the consent of the people. These men have been actuated by other motives; the manner in which their usurped power has been used will disclose the objects for which they have committed so many crimes in its pursuit.

The declaration of war by the Governor of this State upon the people of Jackson and La Fayette counties, and the unprovoked robbery and murder of their citizens is but the continuation of similar acts of violence by many citizens of this State have been stripped of their property and lives by the direct sanction and connivance of the authorities whose appointment and power emanated from the Governor. Preachers of the Gospel have in many parts of this State been dragged from their pulpits, not alone by the officers of the law under the barbarous provisions of the new constitution, but also by armed mobs of lawless ruffians. One preacher, at least, if not more, Rev. Mr. Headlee, was taken from "the horns of the altar" and brutally shot and killed by a band of armed outlaws, and no effort of any kind has been made by the authorities of the State to arrest or punish the perpetrators of these crimes. Many men have been murdered, in some instances by persons claiming authority under the Governor, under the pretense that they were or had been rebels or sympathizers, and that while the courts of law were open for their trial and punishment, and no attempt has been made by the State authorities to prevent or punish these crimes; but on the contrary the perpetrators (as in the instance of a man by the name of Babcock) have by such acts atoned for a long life of infamy and crime and become the familiars and favorites of our Governor.

The more possession of property in some parts of the State has afforded sufficient cause for a notice to quit the country under pain of death in case of refusal, and always under circumstances involving the sacrifice of the property, which usually falls into the hands of the patriots most active in ridding the country of such obnoxious characters.

Nor has this spirit been content with the spoliation of private property. The railroads, public works, and other valuable property of the State to which our creditors looked for reimbursement, and our tax-burdened people for relief, have been wickedly and corruptly sacrificed for sums of money absolutely trifling in comparison with their cost or value, and that, too, when in some instances double the amount, and in every instance much larger amounts were offered for the same property than was accepted from the political partisans to whom this property was sold. We challenge the record of any civilized State to show a more shameless and profligate spoliation of public property, to gratify and enrich partisans and favorites than that furnished by the sale (so called) of the Iron Mountain railroad and the Southwest Branch of the Pacific railroad. Such transactions by which the property of the State was disposed of for sums of money so inadequate, when a larger amount was offered for the same property by parties of greater pecuniary responsibility, brings us irresistibly to the conclusion that the officials who sanctioned them must have shared in the plunder.

The declaration of war upon the counties of La Fayette and Jackson is the continuation and development into a system of the spirit by which Missouri has been governed during the last few years under the usurped rule of a minority. It will last as long as the rule of the minority continues. It foreshadows the fate of every county in the State which has sufficient wealth to tempt the plunderer. The object seems to be to drive the people by violence and intimidation to abandon their homes and lands and then to purchase them from the banished proprietors at a nominal price or at tax sales under laws passed for that purpose.

Under these painful and threatening circumstances the undersigned feel themselves compelled to appeal to your Excellency, and through you to the Congress of the United States, for protection against the outrages of which our fellow-citizens in almost every county of the State, and especially those of the counties of La Fayette and Jackson, have been made the victims. In this State the executive functionaries, as well as the legislative and the judicial, are almost all the creatures of a minority, and the equal instruments of the oppression of the people whom they have wronged, whom they consequently fear and hate.

We invite from Congress a scrutiny and investigation of the facts alleged and the charges we have made. If Congress fails to perform the duty which it owes to our people, if it fails to investigate the charges we make and to interpose the authority of the Government to protect peaceful, loyal, and law-abiding citizens from oppressions which have become unendurable, then will Congress make itself responsible for the consequences which may follow.

Respectfully,

The SPEAKER. The ten minutes of the gentleman from Missouri have expired.

Mr. ELIOT. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] my colleague on the committee.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Speaker, this important bill is precisely what its title indicates, one "to provide a civil government for Louisiana." The bill assumes as the truth upon which it is based a proposition that was uttered by him who administered the Government before the present acting President of the United States came into power, and which was repeated by the latter, that these revolted States have lost their civil governments. It assumes nothing beyond that. It does not touch what has been, to some extent, the controverted question whether their condition is exactly analogous to Territories or not. It simply attempts to restore to those States civil governments; nothing more, nothing less.

Now, let me remind gentlemen on the other side, who have asserted so earnestly that this bill is unprecedented in its legal aspects, that they forget that the Supreme Court of the United States, in a well considered case, and by an opinion which according to my present recollection was unanimous, decided that the Government of the United States in its Congress has the identical power upon which this bill proceeds, to wit: the power to decide whether the government in a given State is republican or not, and if it be found to be not of that character, to set it aside.

That was decided in the celebrated Rhode Island case, so perfectly familiar to every gentleman of the House who is at all versed in these legal questions. Gentlemen, therefore, must not come to us with the charge there is anything startling in this bill. My learned colleague who spoke a moment ago ought not to forget the very horn-books of his law when he makes a speech to this House on constitutional questions. The Constitution itself speaks about a State being a State notwithstanding it may have lost its republican government. He upbraids this bill because it speaks of Louisiana as a State. So does your Constitution speak of States as things which may be States and yet not have republican governments, because it assumes that it is possible a State in the constitutional sense may be a State and yet have lost its republican government. Is not that alphabetical constitutional law? Do you not find it on the very face of the instrument, and why do gentlemen seek to startle themselves about a question of this kind?

Mr. ELDRIDGE rose.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I cannot yield, as my time is too short.

Mr. Speaker, there is another thing to which I wish to call my colleague's attention as well as that of the other side of the House. He speaks of the people of Louisiana. Now, the electors, the rebel element of Louisiana, have again and again dealt with this identical government to which we now hear peans sung, and that it is sacrilege to put our hands upon it. Why, sir, they treated it as no government at all. I hold in my hand an act passed by an overwhelming vote through one branch of the Legislature last winter, and which was only prevented from being passed by the other by the interference of the President of the United States, the preamble to which declares that the constitution of 1864 was the creature of fraud and violence and not in any sense the expression of the will of the people.

Mr. BOYER rose.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I cannot be interrupted. Let me say to gentlemen on the other side of this Hall that last winter, in that act to which I have alluded, this disloyal element of Louisiana proposed to destroy that government in a method not provided for by, but in contravention of the principles of that constitution and the mode prescribed for its own amendment. That act got through one House, and was only prevented from going through the other by the interference of the President of the United States. Let me remind my colleague further, that it is only a day or two since the telegraph brought an announcement that in defiance of the provisions of that constitution which they say has no sanction from the people, but is the creature of fraud and violence, that in defiance of that constitution they are to-day passing a law, which we are told will pass over the veto of Governor Wells, destroying that government in a method not provided for in the Constitution itself.

Now, keep these facts, my fellow-members, before your minds, and remember that you are the Representatives of this mighty nation; that here the voice of the American people speaks in execution of that provision of your Constitution which says you shall guaranty to the States a republican form of government. After this can any gentleman hesitate to carry out the obligation and to fulfill the duty imposed upon Congress, that we shall see to it that these States are republican?

Mr. BOYER. I ask my colleague to yield to me merely for a question.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I would yield to my friend under other circumstances; but surely he will not deprive me of any portion of my poor twenty minutes.

Now, that is the point where this bill and every other bill proposing to reconstruct the States South must rest. It rests upon the right and the duty of this part of the Government to see there is kept in each State a republican form of government. This bill says we will neither have nor guaranty the government which is there now and which rests on a disloyal basis, so far as it has any basis at all.

Mr. BOYER. As the gentleman is pausing now, will he allow me to put my interrogatory?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I am only pausing in order to get another start. [Laughter.] I will now, Mr. Speaker, proceed to give the substance of the bill. It is as follows:

Its first section requires the President, with the assent of the Senate, to appoint a citizen of Louisiana, who never in any way favored secession or rebellion, and who shall file an oath in the United States Senate to that effect, provisional governor, to hold his office until a successor shall be elected next June.

Its second section requires the President and Senate, in the same way and from the same description of loyal citizens, to appoint a legislative council of nine, a majority being a quorum, who remain in office and in session until June next; and this legislative council make the laws of the State. And the Governor, with the assent of this council, appoint from strictly defined loyal men all the other State officers known to the present law; who also hold office until the election of successors in June.

Its third section requires the Governor to see that all laws of State and United States are executed, and that archives and State property are taken possession of.

Its fourth section requires that the electors qualified to vote by the terms of the act shall, on the first Tuesday of June next, elect from them who have ever been truly loyal, as defined by the bill, all these officers of the State so as above stated appointed in the first instance.

Its fifth section makes them alone electors, without distinction of race, who are male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old, and one year resident of Louisiana, who have never voluntarily favored rebellion or secession; but it permits them who have never in any manner favored rebellion otherwise than as private soldiers in civilized modes of war, and that not voluntarily, after 4th March, 1864, to prove these facts in a United States court by the evidence of persons who have ever been loyal. And on such proof and subscribing on the court records an oath to that effect such private soldier is entitled to a certificate entitling him to vote.

The seventh section requires the Secretary of War to cause a complete registration of such electors to be made, and a week before each general election published, and this to be done by qualified electors.

The eighth section authorizes these same electors upon the third Tuesday of October, 1867, unless Congress should otherwise provide, to elect from persons eligible for Governor a convention to frame a permanent constitution for Louisiana, which must contain the three irreversible provisions:

1. That the United States shall enforce the perpetual union of the States;
2. That no distinction in the rights of men shall be permitted on account of race; and
3. That no rebel debt nor pension nor gratuity shall be paid by the State.

And this constitution may be presented to Congress for approval and admission of representation, but on such terms as Congress may prescribe.

The eleventh section requires all the laws passed by any provisional Legislature to be, as soon as possible, presented to Congress for approval; and makes them void from date of the receipt of the disapproval at supreme court of Louisiana.

The tenth section creates the militia out of them who are electors, requires them to be organized and equipped; and, during the provisional government, puts them under the paramount control of the United States commander for Louisiana.

The sixth section makes every act of disloyalty prima facie voluntary; and to avoid the resulting disqualification to vote or hold office permits it to be shown by testimony of them who have always borne true allegiance to the United States that it was involuntary.

The thirteenth section keeps in force, until modified or repealed, all the present laws of Louisiana which are not inconsistent with this act nor with the Constitution nor any other law of the United States.

And the ninth section provides that whenever from any cause the civil authority shall fail promptly to enforce, in favor of all men, the criminal and other laws of both State and United States, including all election laws there, the United States military forces (to be stationed by the President in Louisiana for the purpose under a United States officer not below brigadier general) shall arrest and hold offenders until prosecuted by civil courts; and shall, so far as requisite to insure full execution of the laws, give support and aid to the civil authorities.

Such is the exact substance of this entire bill. I wish to state a few things with regard, first to the legal right, and second in relation to the duty of Congress to pass this or some similar bill.

I shall confine what I say touching the power of Congress to pass the bill principally to our power to employ the military forces for the purpose of enforcing order and law, as this bill and the one reported by the Reconstruction Committee do; because, as the greater includes the less, if it shall appear that we can use the military force as provided by the bill, a fortiori we can the civil authority also.

Are, then, this State of Louisiana and its people in that condition and state of fact which under our Government make it legal to control them by military force? As I said the other day, this is a question of law dependent for its answer upon a state of fact. That question of fact is exactly this: is there in Louisiana such a remaining state of hostility, insubordination, and rebellion to and against the authority of the United States as that the courts cannot or will not redress personal grievances nor protect the loyal people? Now, before inquiring how this fact is, let me allude to some general principles of public and of constitutional law which belong to and control the powers of our own and all other free Governments in those conditions of society which I shall seek to show are now upon Louisiana.

And first of all it must be ever remembered that the laws of nations, including the laws of war, are part of both our Constitution and of our common law as one of the family of civilized nations. This is so expressly written in our Constitution (article one, section eight, clause eleven) where it assumes that, in absence of any statute or constitution, an act in violation of the law of nations will be an "offense," and that all that Congress need be empowered to do is "to define and punish" these "offenses."

Chancellor Kent, the foremost jurist of this age, in the opening sentence of the greatest work upon the law produced in our age, declares that—

"When the United States ceased to be a part of the British empire, and assumed the character of an independent nation, they became subject to that system of rules which reason, morality, and custom among the civilized nations of Europe, as their public law."

Next, it must be borne in mind that the great body of the citizens of Louisiana have for four years been engaged in the most fierce, huge, and bloody war for the destruction of the Government which is known to human history, and that most of their arms-bearing white men are to-day prisoners of war.

Next, it must be remembered that the flagrant war is only just ended, and that not by any voluntary surrender or upon professions of changed views, of purposes, or of sorrow; but only by reason of a crushing defeat in war.

These things being kept in mind, let us approach this inquiry: whether over this people, in such condition, the United States may exert military and other police force for the enforcement of the law, when the fact is found to be that the spirit of the rebellion remains so strong and insubordinate as to prevent the courts from enforcing the law and from protecting the lives, property, and other rights of the friends and citizens of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to ask such a question in an assembly of men supposed to be above idiocy seems like an insult, and to answer it is like mockery. Why, sir, in the name of all the gods at once, has it come to that? Must a Government which can expend four billions of treasure, an ocean of tears such as would almost float your navies, of blood that would turn all your rivers into crimson, lives that would people and enrich an empire, must a Government that can do all this for the crushing out of a rebellion against its life stop short at the moment of overthrow of hostile armies and let every man, woman, and child in one half of the Republic—and who would not fight it—be either assassinated or banished on account of their invincible love of country, and all this be suffered because the rebel assassin is not doing his work while drawn up in the lines of armies or in martial array?

Why, sir, is it so that there can be no rebellion, no absence of public safety, except when war is flagrant and armies are in the field and the glare of battle lights up your valleys? Neither reason nor law nor history permits but one answer to this. There is no Government, and there can be no Government long which applies such a rule to the defense of its citizens and its own life in time of great public danger and disorder.

When they were arranging in your country the terms of your Constitution upon this subject they were enacting in France the terms of her constitution under which the state of siege might be declared in which the empire of the law is suspended; and this is arranged to be exactly like your own when invasion or rebellion brings "imminent peril to the public security." And under these terms of French statutes the emperor, as well as the governors of provinces and commanders of posts, have been permitted to declare a state of siege as well where there was no flagrant war as where there was.

With a provision in the English Constitution that the privileges of this writ of habeas corpus shall ever be had by all the people, the Parliament has suspended the writ "when for whatever cause the ordinary administration of justice has been arrested in any part of Great Britain." (Wheaton, 520.) And English history is full of examples of the enforcement of martial law in times of profound peace, of which we have had an example, I believe, within a few months in Ireland. I allude to these foreign examples only to show what all good and free Governments deem to be requisite for the preservation of government.

But the powers of your own Government in this regard are not to be learned alone from the practices of other Governments, but are settled by your own authorities.

Now, what by your own authority is that state of public danger in which this writ may be suspended in the United States? Must war be actually flagrant? or is it enough that the courts are so obstructed by a foreign or a domestic enemy of the United States as that they cannot protect the citizens nor overcome the unfriendly force which hinders the execution of the laws? It is most manifestly, as well in the latter as in the former state of insurrection and danger, that the United States may suspend the writ. This is virtually and almost expressly declared by Chief Justice Marshall in ex parte Bailman, (4 Cranch, 75.) Let it be remembered that this case arose out of an arrest and suspension of the writ during Burr's conspiracy in 1807. Then there was no war, no battles, no armies, and it is to-day a matter unsettled by your history whether there was even any conspiracy unfriendly to your Government.

And yet, in that state of things, not only did Mr. Jefferson seek to suspend the writ, not only did the Senate unanimously order the writ suspended, (in which the House did not, however, concur,) but it was in, and as to, that state of the country that Chief Justice Marshall uses the following words:

"If at any time the public safety should require the suspension of the powers vested by this act [Judiciary act of 1789] in the courts of the United States, it is for the Legislature to say so. The question depends on political considerations, on which the Legislature is to decide. Until the legislative will be expressed this court can only see its duty and must obey the laws."

Now, I do not allude to this language, nor to this alleged conspiracy of Burr, to say that the country was in fact in such a state of danger as to demand the suspension of the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus, nor to show that Judge Marshall so decided. But I do allude to it to show that nobody then pretended that an actual conflict of arms or array of armies was requisite to authorize the writ to be suspended by Congress. I allude to it to show that both Jefferson and the entire Senate did deem that to be a time when the writ should be suspended. But especially and above all I allude to this language of Marshall to show that he deemed the country even then to be in such a state of danger, though there was neither a flagrant war or rebellion, nor any battles, nor armies, nor possibly even conspirators as that it was then competent for the Legislature to "say that the public safety required the suspension of the powers vested in the courts."

Mr. Lawrence in his Notes to Wheaton (page 517) quotes with apparent approval the following words from a speech by Mr. Bayard, in United States Senate of 28th January, 1862:

"But I deny, unless you mean to abrogate the Constitution entirely, that such a principle can apply to any portion of the territory of the United States in which the laws are not suspended in consequence of its being in the possession of either a domestic or foreign enemy, or in consequence of the courts not being open for the redress of personal grievances."

Now, neither Mr. Lawrence nor Mr. Bayard can be accused of showing an excess of favor to a liberal use of war powers against this rebellion; and yet here these men expressly admit that this military power may be exer-oised even where the country is not in the open or armed possession of a domestic or foreign enemy, and where the laws are suspended only "in consequence of the courts not being open for the redress of personal grievances." And, sir, I cannot for want of time stop here to show what I think is most evident indeed, that there is another principle of public and constitutional law upon which can be most securely rested the power of the United States to enforce, in Louisiana, through its military forces, law, order, and civil government, subject all the while to the controlling duty and obligation to make all this exercise of temporary power only provisional and in aid of the duty to guaranty as soon as may be to Louisiana a republican government.

That principle is that the people of Louisiana have just been conquered in war, and as such can be governed by military force so long as the conqueror may find the military power necessary to completely subdue and overcome the rebellious spirit of the people. In California, as conqueror, you established a civil government, imposed duties on imports and tonnage, and exercised all necessary control over the people, and all this organized and enforced by pure military command; and yet of these military governments so established over what had then by conquest come to be your own territory the Supreme Court of the United States say, in Cross et al. vs. Harrison, (16 Howard, 190,) that—"No one can doubt that these orders of the President, and the action of our Army and Navy commanders in California in accordance with them, were according to the law of arms."

I am not saying that we may continue military sway over them of Louisiana and omit to restore and guaranty to them a republican government as long or to the same extent that we could over a mere Territory; but I do say that if the United States has the right to overthrow a rebellion by war at all, its war powers cannot be arrested and at an end the moment that arms are wrested from the public enemy and organized war is crushed, but continues until all such hostility to the United States is annihilated as is too strong to be controlled by courts and constables. If this be not so, then it is absolutely self-evident that the United States has no power to put down rebellion at all, for then the Government is obliged to cease exerting the only power that is sufficient to attain the ends of the war before the actual resistance of the rebellion to the law is ended. And the rebellion is thus permitted to assert its constitutional rights in such a way as to destroy the Constitution.

But, sir, this is not all. In his message vetoing the Freedmen's Bureau bill the President sustained that veto by the argument that that bill would remain operative for one year. And yet this law commits the absolute and complete control of all subjects relating to refugees and freedmen to the Army, under control of the War Department. Here, then, the control of civil affairs and the enforcement of law are, by a law approved by the President, continued in force for more than one year after flagrant war is ended.

I will now in the few minutes that I have left say a few words in regard to the condition of Louisiana, and let us see if there is that state of subordination that requires and justifies this law and the interposition of the military authority of this Government. I will not run through, as I cannot, the horrid details of what has occurred and what is being brought before the country from ten thousand sources of reliable testimony. It is enough that I should point to one single, strange, and startling fact, which taken by itself is utterly overwhelming and conclusive, and that is, that on the 30th day of July last at high noon, by prearranged plan—the proof of prearrangement being absolutely conclusive and overwhelming—the police, with officers and citizens of New Orleans organized, a part of them constituting what was called the Hayes brigade, for the purpose of slaughter, and did then and there, with shouts and hurrahs for Jefferson Davis and Andrew Johnson mingling with their infernal orgies, execute some two hundred murders in the streets.

The names of a majority, if not all, of those murderers are known to the people of New Orleans. The names are in the reports before this House; and yet with these facts before the authorities of the State, and written down in its history, not even an attempt has been made at prosecution against a single one of the offenders, the only prosecution that has been attempted being against the victims of the wrong. Gentlemen on the other side get up here and tell us the courts are open. Ah, gentlemen, the courts are, indeed, open there, but under rebel control, in rebel sympathy for the purpose of protecting—and I declaim not now, but talk cautiously by the book—rather of protecting and shielding than for the punishment of crime when that crime is of a political character and is committed against the loyal people of Louisiana.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LE BLOND. How do we know that? Your report has never been published, and we are groping here in the dark.

Mr. BOYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the statement just made by my colleague on the committee is not the fact. [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered; the pending question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BAKER,] to insert in line five before the word "Governor" the word "provisional." The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BOYER. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The Clerk read the engrossed copy of the bill.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 113, nays 47, not voting 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Culom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Hulbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McNair, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spaulding, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—113.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Bingham, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Leitwisch, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Silwell, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Thornton, Andrew H. Ward, and Whaley—47.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Benjamin, Bergen, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Conkling, Culver, Deffrees, Dodge, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Jones, Kasson, McKee, Phelps, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Schenck, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—30.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MERCUR. I desire to state that the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. KASSON, is absent by leave of the House on business relating to the committee of which he is a member.

Mr. DEMING. I desire to say on behalf of my colleague, Mr. BRANDEGEE, that he is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. BERGEN, upon all questions relating to the subject of reconstruction. I desire also to say on behalf of the gentleman from New York, Mr. GRISWOLD, that he is called away by imperative business.

Mr. HILL. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. H. D. WASHBURN, is paired with Mr. WINFIELD, of New York.

Mr. DARLING. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. HART, is unavoidably absent. If he were present he would vote for this bill.

Mr. KETCHAM. I desire to state that my colleagues, Mr. POMEROY and Mr. JONES, are paired. If Mr. POMEROY were present he would vote for this bill.

The result of the vote being announced as above recorded,

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution No. 99, for the relief of Paul Forbes, under his contract with the Navy Department for building and furnishing the steam sloop of war Idaho, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House take a recess from half past four o'clock till half past seven this evening.

Mr. BINGHAM. To go on with the regular business?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LE BLOND. What will the regular business be?

The SPEAKER. The next business in order will be the bill reported from the joint Committee on Reconstruction for the military government of the insurrectionary States, which is open to debate.

Mr. DAWSON. Is it expected that a vote will be taken this evening?

The SPEAKER. Probably not.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes ninety-four, noes not counted.

So the order for a recess was adopted.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 247) for the relief of James Keenan; when the Speaker signed the same.

CREDENTIALS—SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. CHANLER. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to present the credentials of Hon. William Aiken, claiming to be entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative from the first congressional district of South Carolina.

The credentials were received, and referred under the rule to the joint Committee on Reconstruction.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bill of the House No. 1053, granting an increase of pension to John J. Sohan.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The House resumed as the next business in order the consideration of House bill No. 1143, to provide a more efficient government for the States lately in insurrection; upon which Mr. KELLEY was entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Will my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] yield to me for a moment, for some business that will occupy no time?

Mr. KELLEY. Certainly.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and have referred to the Committee on Appropriations the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 918, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

No objection was made, and the reference was accordingly made.

PENSION APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. STEVENS. I also ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 903, making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1868.

No objection was made, and the reference was accordingly made.

Mr. RADFORD. I move that the House now take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

HENRY E. EARLE.

Mr. LYNCH asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers in the case of Henry E. Earle.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. I ask unanimous consent to present, have printed in the Globe, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, the following petition of citizens of Oberlin, Ohio, upon the subject of capital and labor.

No objection was made.

The petition is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, inhabitants of Oberlin, Ohio, respectfully represent to your honorable body that the masses of laborers in the United States are yet uninformed on the subject of national finance, or the proper institution of money, and therefore not prepared to act in the premises. Their ignorance as to the power of capital over their liberties and lives is second only to that of the slave, and they have been too willingly left so by the owners of capital for similar reasons to those which kept the slave in ignorance and under the lash. Our papers are as silent concerning the curses of the present system as were ever the southern sheets concerning the abominable iniquities of slavery. These are under the control of the money power; those were under control of the slavery power.

We therefore pray you that all important action on this subject may be deferred until sufficient time and opportunity have been given the people for discussion, for the interests it involves are vital to liberty. The masses are beginning to get awake to this matter, and they should have time to deliberate, and to give their voice before anything is done by which the nation shall be expected permanently to abide. If this time is not given it will only lead to greater complication in the final settlement of the question, when the masses have considered and decided it.

Capitalists have done nothing by which they are entitled to double interest on their bonds from the hands of loyal laborers.

Laborers fought the battles against treason. The rebels fought the battle against liberty, or labor in the front, and capitalists fought us in our rear and right in our lines.

We therefore pray you that nothing may be done by your honorable body by means of which the heavy burdens now imposed upon the laboring masses shall be sought to be made permanent.

But if action now is unavoidable we pray you to act in behalf of the masses, in behalf of liberty and of labor; for such action must be had if the perpetuity of the nation is secured; and we would respectfully suggest that the only safe method of doing this is to "abolish the present national banking system," and resort to the issue of legal-tender Treasury notes only for a system of national currency. The people are satisfied with these, and only with these.

We want a currency which has for a basis nothing less than the assets of the entire nation and the perpetuity of our republican institutions, and in the safety and perpetuity of which every individual in the nation is personally interested.

MISS SUE MURPHY.

On motion of Mr. MAYNARD, the bill of the Senate, No. 418, for the relief of Miss Sue Murphy, of Decatur, Alabama, was taken from the table and referred to the Committee of the Whole, and placed upon the Private Calendar.

CALIFORNIA CENSUS MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of a resolution referred to them, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims. The resolution was one directing the Committee on Appropriations to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the payment of census marshals for taking the eighth census in California of the amount or balance remaining due, $9,460 48; also, an appropriation for the payment of outstanding California war bonds, $10,188 63.

The motion was agreed to.

PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT JUDGE.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am also instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of a petition of members of the Philadelphia bar, asking an increase of the salary of the United States district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. GLORVINA FORT.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am also instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the petition of Mrs. Glorvina Fort, praying an appropriation to her of the sum of $2,934 07, the amount awarded to her father by the United States district court of New York on June 26, 1793, for loss of the cargo of the brig Catharine, captured by the French frigate L'Embuscade, be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. McCLURG asked and obtained leave of absence for the remainder of the week for his colleague, Mr. BENJAMIN.

SALE OF GOLD.

Mr. STARR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of prohibiting by law the sale of gold by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States; and also by the national banks; and to report by bill or otherwise.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. STARR also submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of exempting from State or other local taxation that portion of the capital of the national banks invested in United States loans; and to report by bill or otherwise.

NEW MEXICO—LINCOLN.

Mr. DARLING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Territories be requested to inquire into the propriety of changing the name of the Territory of New Mexico to that of Lincoln; and to report by bill or otherwise.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed House bill No. 593, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

It also requested the return of House bill No. 269, for the relief of certain officers of volunteers, yesterday postponed indefinitely in the Senate.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, on which Mr. KELLEY was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, by leave of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY], I desire to make a statement to the House; and after making that statement, to ask consent that the amendments which I have offered may be published in the Globe, together with the bill reported by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS], so that to-morrow members may be able to understand exactly the effect of the amendments.

By an inadvertence the Public Printer in publishing my amendments has preceded it by the words "strike out the parts within brackets," instead of saying "insert the parts within brackets." All that is not included in brackets is the original bill, word for word, as it was reported from the committee by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania. The portions marked in brackets are what I wish to incorporate in the bill. In order that members may fully understand the issue between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself I ask consent of the House that my amendments, together with the bill, be published in the Globe.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this error occurred in the public Printing Office; that the document was correct as it was sent from this House.

Mr. BINGHAM. I know that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio; [Mr. BINGHAM], together with the original bill, will be published in the Globe.

There was no objection.

The bill as proposed to be amended by Mr. BINGHAM is as follows, the amendments being included within brackets:

Whereas the pretended State governments of the late so-called confederate States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas, were set up without the authority of Congress and without the sanction of the people; and whereas said pretended governments afford no adequate protection for life or property, but countenance and encourage lawlessness and crime; and whereas it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said so-called States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established; [whereas it is expedient that the said States lately in insurrection should, at the earliest day consistent with the future peace and safety of the Union, be restored to full participation in all political rights; and whereas the Congress did, by joint resolution, propose for ratification to the Legislatures of the several States, as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, an article in the following words, to wit:

SEC. 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

SEC. 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Sec. 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Sec. 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Now, therefore:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever the above-recited amendment shall have become part of the Constitution of the United States, and any State aforesaid lately in insurrection shall have ratified the same, and shall have modified its constitution and laws in conformity therewith, and shall have presented to Congress a constitution of government republican in form and not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and which shall secure equal and impartial suffrage to the male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years of age, resident therein, without distinction of race or color, and which shall have been approved by Congress, the Senators and Representatives from such State, if found duly elected and qualified, may, after having taken the required oaths of office, be admitted into Congress as such.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That when any State lately in insurrection as aforesaid shall have ratified the foregoing amendment to the Constitution, any part of the direct tax under the act of August 6, 1861, which may remain due and unpaid in such State, may be assumed and paid by such State; and the payment thereof, upon proper assurances from such State to be given to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, may be postponed for a period not exceeding ten years from and after the passage of this act.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That until said so-called States shall be admitted to representation in Congress as herein provided, the said so-called States shall be divided into military districts and made subject to the military authority of the United States as hereinafter prescribed, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district; North Carolina and South Carolina the second district; Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, the third district; Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district; and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the General of the Army to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the regular Army, not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, anything in the constitution and laws of the said so-called States to the contrary notwithstanding; and all legislative or judicial proceedings, or processes to prevent or control the proceedings of said military tribunals, and all interference by said pretended State governments with the exercise of military authority under this act, shall be void and of no effect.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That courts and judicial officers of the United States shall not issue writs of habeas corpus in behalf of persons in military custody, [except in cases in which the person is held to answer only for a crime or crimes exclusively within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, within said military districts, and indictable therein,] or unless some commissioned officer on duty in the district wherein the person is detained shall indorse upon said petition a statement certifying, upon honor, that he has knowledge or information as to the cause and circumstances of the alleged detention, and that he believes the same to be wrongful; and further, that he believes that the indorsed petition is preferred in good faith and in furtherance of justice, and not to hinder or delay the punishment of crime. All persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized affecting the life or liberty of any person shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district; and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express the hope that the House will adopt the bill under consideration as reported by the committee without amendment. Considerable dissent has been manifested, and the House refused by a very decided vote to order the previous question when called by the chairman of the committee. Yet, after the ample discussion the bill has had, and especially after the incidents of yesterday and to-day connected with the Louisiana bill, I indulge the hope that when the final vote is ordered the House will adopt the bill.

Unanimity cannot be expected among a numerous body of gentlemen like those who wield the power of this House. They represent intelligent and thoughtful constituencies, and it has never been my privilege to mingle with a body of men among whom there was so much well defined individuality of character as in the controlling party of this House. It is impossible, therefore, that we should obtain entire unanimity of judgment on important measures. There has been on almost every important law enacted concession, I may say—much as I have come to despise the word—compromise, as to detail and language. A gentleman suggests to me the word “cooperation.” I accept it as a better word, which more accurately expresses my sense of our duty.

Some days since, when first entitled to the floor on this question, I went to the Clerk's desk and found that already six amendments to the bill had been printed. I had in my mind one which I would gladly have offered. I found it in direct hostility to the purpose of several of those that were in print. It was brief, but I then thought it essential. It was to insert in line three, immediately after the word “that,” the words, “such pretended governments are hereby declared void and set aside, and that.”

Since then we have had the substitute submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS;] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KELSO] has one which I regret has not found its way into print, for if any were to be adopted it would command my preference.

Under these circumstances we cannot hope to frame a bill on a subject of such primary importance that will meet the unqualified approval of every Republican member. All we can expect to do is to frame one in harmony with and support of that which we passed to-day, which all must agree is as a whole, though not in my judgment perfect in detail, a wholesome and needed measure. I apprehend that a large part of the dissent from this bill arises from the fact that gentlemen have not understood the limitations of its scope and purpose, and have regarded it as a reconstruction bill.

Let us recall the history of the constitutional amendment now pending. Supposing that it was proposed as a finality, almost every gentleman on this side of the House dissented from and sneered at it, yet we all voted for it; and when it came to be considered by the people it met with an approving response such as few measures have ever received. I remember, sir, that when it first came to the House I asserted that my opposition to one of its provisions was irrevocable. Nor was that a passionate exclamation. It was deliberate; for in other connections I had considered the point. Yet after due consideration of the measure as a whole, and ascertaining its limitations, I voted for it. We were ready to reject it because we supposed it was brought to us as a finality, as a conclusive measure. As such it could not have been adopted, I think; and the people responded to it enthusiastically as they did because they had learned that it was but one of several measures essential to the preservation of the country. They saw, as we had done before we passed it, that it was simply a measure to protect forever the country and the people against the dangers which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] still seems to apprehend as imminent. It protects the sanctity of the national debt.

It secures the citizenship of the people of the American Union throughout its limits, be they natives of what State or country they may, and protects them and the Government against claims for damages done during the war, property seized by our Army, or for slaves made free by proclamation or the act of war; it establishes the political equality of men whether they dwell in the cold North or the sunny South, and provides for the repudiation of the rebel debts and the sanctity of the debt of the nation. These were its purposes, and these it performs.

The work of reconstruction will be provided for by other bills than the one now under consideration. This, sir, I may say, is little more than a mere police bill. The necessity for it arises from the perfidy of the President of the United States. Had he been true to the duties of his high office and his public and repeated pledges there would have been no necessity for considering such a bill. It does but propose to enable the General commanding the Army of the United States to execute the dying purpose of Abraham Lincoln, and, if we may accept as evidence, his oft-repeated assurances the early presidential purpose of Andrew Johnson. Its object is to maintain peace throughout the insurrectionary districts, the people of which, as the President has asserted in a dozen solemn proclamations, have by revolutionary violence been deprived of all civil government. It proposes to give peace and safety to every man within the limits of that extended district, irrespective of the tint of his complexion, or whether he fought against or for his country's flag. Its object is to preserve peace and vindicate the sanctity of human life.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] said that at first it was his purpose to sustain the bill, but that he had concluded to oppose it as he did in a lengthened speech. In assigning reasons for this change of opinion, he said:

“It made a frame of civil government to be administered by the regular Army without any restriction or limitation of power except the discretion of the regular Army. The regular Army, in administering that power, was to be without responsibility to the Constitution, to the Congress, or to the people of the country, but was to be responsible only to the commander of the Army.”

Sir, the bill does in this respect what the law of nations and his oath of office justified Abraham Lincoln in doing and required his successor, Andrew Johnson, to do; that is, to administer under the military power such laws as should give security to property, person, and life in districts the civil government of which had been overthrown, and to continue such administration until the law-making power could establish civil governments and codes of law for the people. It proposes to enable Grant to do throughout that confederacy, whose armies he crushed, what Scott did in conquered Mexico and what Butler and BANKS did in that part of Louisiana in which by the aid of the Navy our Army established itself. They protected life and property and maintained peace while awaiting the action of that branch of the Government which had the right to make terms with the conquered or to frame laws for their government.

That is what this bill proposes to do. It abrogates the results of Executive usurpation by ignoring the existence of the illegal and anomalous governments established by the Commander-in-Chief of our armies and Navy. In the establishment of these “so-called” or “pretended” States he usurped a greater power than any that is proposed to be ordained by this bill. Who made the “so-called” government of North Carolina? Andrew Johnson. By what power? By virtue of the fact that he was Commander-in-Chief of the armies and Navy of the nation. And by virtue of that same power, enforced by the persuasive influence of the pardoning power, he arrogates to himself and exercises the right to supervise, control, and govern those governments. He told their conventions what they must and what they might not do, and those so-called sovereign bodies obeyed his commands. Through the officers of the Army he suspends or enforces the enactments of their so-called Legislatures as pleases his whim, so that their laws depend upon his temper or the state of his digestion. There are no States there; and to speak of these organizations as such is an abuse of language. There are pretended States, “so-called” States; States whose nominal Legislatures and Executives are not at liberty to deny that they are subservient to the will and orders of the acting President of the United States. They are not such republican governments as Congress can recognize. They are known to Congress and to the people to be the offspring of executive usurpation and instruments of power in the hands of a usurper, and must be declared void and set aside.

But gentlemen cry, "That will produce anarchy; we must not leave the people without government and law." No such consequence will ensue. When we brush away these foul usurpations the law will arise that was in force when Lee and Johnston surrendered. The difficulty is that the false man upon whom crime devolved the presidency will not execute that law. He has given us his construction of it, and we have the results before us. I shall attempt to depict those results as I proceed, though conscious that my poor effort will sadly lack color and effect. It is important, therefore, that we embody that law, coming to us as it does through the progress of civilization from its dawn to the close of the last war, in statutory provisions, and hold him responsible, under our power of impeachment, for the faithful execution of every clause we enact.

Gentlemen will not deny that we have that power if war still exists. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] whose views on that point I accept, says that we are not now engaged in war flagrante; that it is war cessante. And what is war cessante? It is when two armies rest under stipulations of armistice or temporary treaty; that no life shall be taken and no position changed during a given interval. Our condition is nominally that of war cessante; but it is war flagrante on the part of the rebellious people of the so-called or pretended States, for they give neither justice nor safety to the friends of the Union. They slay them by night and by day, sleeping or waking; giving to quasi war horrors that do not belong to it within entrenchments or on tented field.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] defining our condition, said: "It was not peace, it was not war; it was a state of siege." Sir, I would like to know whether he regards a state of siege as a condition of war or peace? Does he think the people of Leyden and Utrecht heard the drowsy hum of peace during the siege which they endured; and that the tender women and children who cowered in caves during the siege of Vicksburg were vexed by doubt as to whether peace or war prevailed? Was Valdez in doubt on that point when he demanded the surrender of Leyden, and received from Dousa the reply that "When provisions failed the people of that city would devour their left hand, reserving their right to defend their liberty?" Sir, when the people of that city, gathering around the good burgomaster Vandenwerf, presented their wasted forms and cried for bread, he knew they were suffering war's most agonizing horrors, and, like a true soldier, replied: "Bread I have none; but if my death can afford you relief tear my body in pieces and let those who are most hungry devour it!"

Sir, when the gentleman said our condition was that of a state of siege, he declared it to be that most ruthless form of war which knows not sex or age. What man in all Protestant Christendom has not thrilled at the horrors of war, and at its glories, too; at the burst of pride with which Walker welcomed those citizens of Londonderry, who had searched his cellar to find whether he had food to sustain him in uttering such brave words of resistance, and came to tell him that there was nothing within his premises for the sustenance of wife or child.

But who, sir, are the besieged; who are the starvelings of this state of siege which is not war? Who exist furtively upon the bleak mountain side or bury themselves in the miasmatic swamps? They are Union men, our friends, the companions in arms of the soldiers who, carrying our flag, broke the military power of the rebellion, and who, if we will but protect them, will break its spirit and curb even its proud leaders and make of them at least passably good citizens. If there be a siege they are its victims, and this bill will enable their fellow-soldiers, those who stood beside them in the battle-field, to restore them to their homes and shield and protect them.

The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND,] more logical by far than the gentleman from Massachusetts, asserts that the old States still exist, and says that we should not expect—

"That perfect peace would prevail throughout those States as soon as the war ended. It was in the nature of things there would be lawless conduct on the part of many citizens."

But he also asserts that—

"The civil authorities there have been using the power they have to keep down this lawlessness and to punish men for the commission of offenses."

Sir, had the latter assertion been well founded, the Thirty-Ninth Congress might possibly have adjourned without enacting such a bill, and escaped the reproaches of our constituents and the hissing curses of southern Union men. War, while it calls forth the noblest attributes of individuals and communities, is, and must ever be, a great demoralizer. We therefore do not hold the people of the South responsible for individual acts of violence. We have felt the demoralizing effects of the late war all over the North. Crimes of unusual magnitude and turpitude have been committed in almost every city of the North. But the treatment of their perpetrators in contrast with that of murderers of Union men at the South serves to distinguish between a state of war and peace. This contrast shows that in passing such a bill as this we will not be legislating to meet individual cases of violence, but to restrain a community that is at war with the Government and all who sustain the Government. At the North perpetrators of great crimes have been pursued and brought to trial and punishment. Their forms have graced the gibbet and admonished those who would offend in like degree that they are in a land of law.

But will gentlemen who deny the existence of war tell me what one murderer of a Union soldier has been brought to trial and punished by the civil authorities of these pretended States? The military arrested some few murderers and tried and convicted them, but through the machinations of Andrew Johnson, the present leader of the rebellion, they have been turned loose and have received the welcome of their fellow-citizens, "Well done, good and faithful servant." Thus the crimes of individuals are assumed by the communities of which they are members, and in the crimes and their assumption by the community we find a reply to the question whether the gentleman's state of siege be war or peace. Sir, if the present condition of the Union men of the South be peace, may God pity the most courageous and hardy of those whose country is at war! Let us in mercy assume that it is not peace, but war, and arm the Union men for their defense of home, family, and life. The bloody barbarities of the rebel captors at Fort Pillow disgrace the annals of civilized warfare; but atrocious as they were they are exceeded by the horrors inflicted by the so-called civil authorities of New Orleans upon the unarmed members of the constitutional convention and its friends gathered around it in that city. And, sir, the loathsome details of the sacking of Badajos are exceeded by the atrocities reported to us by the committee to inquire into what gentlemen on the other side of the House mildly term the "Memphis riots." Our abhorrence of the atrocities at Badajos is mitigated by the fact mentioned by Napier, that hundreds of soldiers attempted, and many lost their lives in the attempt, to stay the outrages. There is no mitigating fact of that kind in the report of the "Memphis riots" committee.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] has given us a picture of the condition of the Union men, soldiers and citizens, white and black, of South Carolina; and the report of the committee of which he is chairman contains, I am told, much more than we have yet heard. I beg leave to turn to the State of North Carolina for a few illustrations of their condition throughout the South generally. I select it, not because I regard North Carolina as the worst of these so-called States, but because, with the single exception perhaps Florida, a Union man is as safe in North Carolina as elsewhere in the insurrectionary district.

I remember, sir, that more than a year ago three friends of mine from New England, one of whom must be known to gentlemen from Massachusetts—Mr. Thomas Drew, of Boston, formerly editor of the Massachusetts Plowman—returned to this city from North Carolina. They had gone thither to invest capital in renting or purchasing a plantation. They proposed to carry capital, seeds, and implements and New England culture and thrift to the people of that State and to settle among them. But they had made no settlement. They were returning to cold and sterile Massachusetts. Do gentlemen ask why? It was because when they were about making a contract of lease or purchase for a property one Roddick Carney and his father had notified the owner of the property that if he rented to the "Yankees" they would burn his dwelling and outbuildings, and with the same frank amiability notified my friends that if they purchased every freedman they employed or "Yankee" they brought there to work should be murdered. "But did you believe them?" said I. "Oh, yes," said Mr. Drew, "for Roddick Carney had but a few days before, as he said for fun, shot two negro boys to show how good a marksman he was."

Some few weeks ago a discreet and courageous friend from another quarter of the country was going into the same State, and I begged him to let me hear his views of the condition of the people. I received a lengthy communication from him last Saturday. I will offer some extracts from his interesting letter, from which it appears that Roddick Carney would probably have executed his threats had my friends persisted in their patriotic and philanthropic enterprise. The writer says:

"Some fourteen months since one Roddick Carney with a few friends committed a number of outrages upon the loyal citizens of Beaufort and Pitt counties, and in mere wantonness shot and killed two negro boys. The civil authorities, neglecting or refusing to take any measures to arrest and punish these murderers, a lieutenant with a squad of men was sent to arrest them. While they were endeavoring to arrest him Carney shot and killed the lieutenant. Another unsuccessful attempt to arrest him was made by the military, and he is now living undisturbed in Beaufort county."

"This murderer, Carney, has in his possession a colored boy, named Joseph Wiggins, the son of a respectable negro man, and he refuses to give him up. The civil authorities profess that they are afraid to arrest him or have anything to do with Carney for the relief of the enslaved negro."

Fourteen months ago this man Roddick Carney perpetrated two unprovoked murders. Nearly fourteen months since he murdered a lieutenant of your Army engaged in the performance of duty; and if the civil authorities are discharging their duties, and if there be peace there, why in the name of law and justice is he living unmolested and respected in the community in which he dwells?

But let me read another extract from this same communication:

"Near Hillsborough, in Orange county, in November of 1866, a freedman who had raised a small quantity of corn invited a few of his friends to assist him in shucking it. In the evening while the party were singing and dancing, a rebel named C— heard them, armed himself with a gun, went to the freedman's house, and with oaths and curses demanded to know what they were doing. The freedmen, frightened, attempted to escape, when he deliberately shot one of their number, killing him almost instantly. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of 'accidental homicide,' and there the matter rests."

Do not these statements portray a capital state of peace?

My informant is a cool, courageous, business man, a man of veracity, upon whose statement and judgment I confidently rely. He indicates the reason for these crimes and this impunity in a brief passage, as follows:

"It must be understood that four fifths of the white population are fanatically devoted to the cause of the rebellion, that the present so-called State government is composed entirely of men who have, in one form or another, proved their devotion to secession and rebellion, and in whose creed the cardinal plank is contempt for Yankees and 'niggers' and hate for the Government of the United States. The 'Howard amendment' stood, from the first, no chance of acceptance by a Legislature, most of the members of which were elected on their rebel war record, after much ranting declamation in which the candidates boasted of having carried the rebel flag in triumph from Big Bethel to Bentonville, vying with each other in vaunting what they had done to destroy the national Government and drench the country with blood.

"As a matter of form the courts are open; as a matter of fact there is no such thing as an impartial administration of justice by the courts between whites and blacks, rebels and Union men; the prejudice of the judges, justices, the lawyers, and of the juries in favor of the rebel white and against the Union men and the negroes forbid it."

Mr. Speaker, I cannot better illustrate the power and efficiency of civil authorities so eulogized by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] than by asking the Clerk to read a short extract from the same letter of my correspondent. It relates to the Governor of one of the pretended States.

The Clerk read as follows:

"As a sample of the carelessness of Governor Worth in his official statements I may mention the laws governing the apprenticing of children in North Carolina. In his message to the General Assembly at the commencement of the session, (November 19, 1866,) he admits that in the matter of apprenticing there is a distinction made by the law of the State between white and black children, or rather between children of purely white parents and children having some faint trace of negro blood, for many who were two years ago slaves are as white as their former owners.

"One month later (the 19th December) he tells the President and General Howard that the law of North Carolina makes no distinction on account of color or race in the apprenticing of children.

"And still another month later, (the 29th of January, 1867,) when the cry of parents whose children had been torn from them and bound to cruel and hard taskmasters became so loud that the authorities could not shut their ears, and when the children, thus ruthlessly thrust into a slavery worse than that of other years, starving, freezing, sickening, and dying under the cruel treatment of their chivalrous masters and high-born mistresses, at last escaping told their piteous stories to officers of the Freedmen's Bureau, then, and not until then, the General Assembly of North Carolina passed an act to amend the fifth chapter of the revised code, entitled 'apprentices,' which act purports to repeal all laws discriminating between whites and blacks in the apprenticing of children; yet this same act in substance declares that the indentures of all children heretofore illegally apprenticed shall be declared legal and valid; and this when it must be well known to the members of the General Assembly of North Carolina that all the children illegally bound were the children of negro parents.

"Grant that the laws make no discrimination between whites and blacks, no one who is familiar with the action of the courts in the rebel States can for a moment suppose that there will not be, in the future as in the past, a discrimination made against the negroes.

"There is scarcely a single case of apprenticing of negro children in this State during the past eight months in which the State laws protecting the children have been respected by the courts.

"There are hundreds of cases which might be cited to prove all that I have asserted concerning the action of the courts in this matter of apprenticing negro children. I will mention one or two, which will serve as examples.

"Near Tarboro' two children, girls, one eleven and the other thirteen years of age, were last summer apprenticed to their former owner. The girls' mother had formerly been whipped to death under the orders of the wife of the man to whom they are now apprenticed, then the master and owner of the murdered woman. Recent information shows that these children, who are still held as apprentices, are nearly starved and not half clad; the only garment they wore, while picking cotton in the inclement weather of December, was a straight gown, short in the skirt, and with short sleeves, with neither shoes, stockings, nor bonnets.

"The father and two brothers of these girls are laboring for a gentleman from the North who is engaged in planting, and together earn about sixty dollars per month and their rations. The girls were apprenticed without the consent of their father, who has made repeated efforts to recover his daughters that he might send them to school, but thus far his efforts have been vain; and the girls are now held in a condition of slavery much worse than that in which they formerly lived. The younger of the two sons, now nearly eighteen years of age, and who has during the past year been earning twenty dollars per month and his rations, was last fall apprenticed to the man to whom his sisters are apprenticed, who has sued his former employer for the wages of the boy for the past year."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, from the same source I draw one more illustration of the ridiculousness of the position assumed by those who claim that we are in a state of peace, and that the President of the United States ought not, therefore, to protect the Union men and other citizens by the military power of the Government. My correspondent says:

"In 1865 a freedman named Lewis Warren was arrested in Sampson county, on a criminal charge, imprisoned, tried, and acquitted. He was confined in jail nearly five months. The charge of jail fees, and the cost of the suit, ($125,) were charged to him after he had been proven innocent before the court and acquitted; and to pay these costs he was sold by the sheriff, upon the order of the court, for three years to one Simon Peter Hobbs, of Sampson county, for whom he labored faithfully for thirteen months and eighteen days. He then escaped, and is believed now to be concealed by certain well-known Union men in Johnson county, who, at their own peril, are preserving the liberty of a man whose innocence has been vindicated even before a rebel court."

Mr. Speaker, in taking leave of North Carolina I turn to Texas. I have a picture of things in that State taken from the New York Tribune of last Friday morning. It presents a condition of things quite as bad as that in South Carolina, as reported by the committee over which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] presides, quite as bad as that reported as existing in Louisiana by the committee whose bill we passed to-day. When gentlemen shall have heard they will be able to judge whether Texas is at peace or war or in a state of siege. It is as follows:

"One of the first acts of the Legislature was to abolish the judicial districts in which Union men had been elected judges: the administration of the law was restored entirely to rebels. Large grants of lands and money were made to rebel soldiers. The bodies of rebels were brought from other States for reinterment, and an act passed to remove the bodies of Union soldiers from the State cemetery. Congressional districts were created by which counties thirty miles apart were placed in the same district for the purpose of preventing the election of any man to Congress who could take the test oath. In rejecting the constitutional amendment, October 13, the Legislature adopted a report which declared the action of Congress to be 'a nefarious conspiracy,' 'crafty and iniquitous legislation,' 'degrading and malignant.' Labor laws were framed which practically reduced the freedmen to slavery, and were found so monstrous that the Freedmen's Bureau refused to admit their authority. In brief, the Legislature of Texas, animated by the old spirit of slavery and rebellion, did nothing for loyalty and order, but directly encouraged that reign of violence which is now driving Union men from the State and making the negroes serfs. The United States military force in Texas is small, and outside of its immediate protection Union men and freedmen are at the mercy of rebels. Hundreds of cases of outrage have been published recently; of these we will quote a few furnished by unquestionable authority.

"In the spring of 1866 a son of Jonathan Lindley was murdered in Bell county; his murderers were arrested by the military, and in attempting to escape two of them were killed, it is said by Major Carpenter, commanding the troops, and Mr. Lindley. In November Lindley was arrested for murder and placed in jail. Through his counsel he applied to General Heintzelman for protection, affirming that his life was in danger because of his Union principles. General Heintzelman laid the facts before Governor Throckmorton, who replied, November 17: 'I apprehend that Mr. Lindley is in no danger from rash violence in Bell county. I shall write to the authorities of that county on the subject, and impress the necessity of a strict compliance with the law and the confidence expressed by Major General Heintzelman in their regard for law.' Solemn assurances were given by the authorities of Bell county that Lindley should be dealt with justly. Near the end of November the troops in the neighborhood were sent to the frontier to protect the people of Texas from Indians, and on the night of December 3 a mob of about thirty entered the jail, murdered old Mr. Lindley, his son, and another inmate of the jail who was an entire stranger to the Lindleys. In this case not even the interference of Governor Throckmorton was a protection. It is an instance of the cruelty of trusting to the civil courts the lives of Union men; the folly of believing that Texas rebels respect any authority but that of the bayonet.

"We believe that for almost every day of the past six months a murder of a Union man or a negro might be cited. But the cases which we quote are sufficient to show the condition of the State. On the 21st of October, in Grayson county, four men rode up to the house of a freedman named Daniel Wheat, arrested him for some pretended offense, and shot him before his own door. The murderers were not arrested. In Sumpter, Trinity county, a freedman was burned alive in December, and several killed. In Chambers county, in the same month, a Union man was beaten by two men till he was senseless, and his house robbed. An order for the warrant from the sheriff, tore it to pieces, and defied his power. Edmund Parsons and Mat. Howlin, two freedmen, were shot in Travis county in December, by white men, apparently from mere wantonness. Their murderers were not arrested. At Prairie Lea, December 8, a negro was publicly whipped for calling a young rebel Thomas, instead of Master Thomas. On the 15th, at the same place, a bottle of whisky was demanded of a negro, and upon his refusal to give it he was shot. The murderers were known, but the civil authorities refused to arrest them. Prairie Lea is forty miles from any military post, and it is the common amusement of the rebels, mounted on horses, to chase the freedmen through the streets and shoot at them with revolvers.

"Never," says a trustworthy correspondent of the Freedmen's Bureau, presenting the case of a Union man, 'in the days of slavery has there been known the wrongs, the outrage, the oppression that now exist in the northeastern counties of Texas toward the poor negroes. They are now more downtrodden and brutally treated than he has ever known them during his residence here, which has been ever since 1833. They have no rights whatever that are respected; and he has related to me instances of cruelty, wrong, and violation of all law toward them which would make your heart bleed. His own freed negroes have returned to him and besought him to receive them to his care as his slaves, that they might have some protection. He says that the lash is now more cruelly administered than it ever was; that negroes who have cultivated lands rented from some of the white men, after growing fine crops and having them laid by for the harvest, have been deprived of everything upon some pretext sought by the landlord to engage in quarrel, which would terminate in the most brutal punishment of the negro and his dismissal without a dollar for the labor he had bestowed upon the crop. I could not pretend to attempt a description of outrages, from cold-blooded murder down; and there is not an agent of your bureau or an officer to whom these people can appeal for redress.'

"This description correctly applies to every district in Texas of which the United States troops have not control. In Harrison county bands of organized robbers plunder whites and blacks alike, and in twenty-seven other counties in that district there is no safety for negroes or loyal men. From the northern part of Texas we have testimony that the freedmen are not paid for their labor, and remain in actual slavery. Freedmen who dare to bring suits to recover wages due are frequently whipped, and many of those who at the close of the year were paid were afterwards robbed. 'Unless protection can be afforded from the military,' writes a Union man in Caldwell county, 'assassination will soon become the order of the day.' Panola county was in November, probably is controlled by organized robbers whom the civil authorities dared not attempt to arrest. Thus the catalogue of crime continues; but we have said enough. If these were exceptional cases we should have said nothing; but they are the rule; and though we have few reports from Texas during the month of January we believe that the number of murders is not diminishing, and the condition of the State probably growing worse."

Mr. Speaker, the condition of things I have thus fully attempted to portray prevails in a greater or less degree throughout the whole district in which civil government was overthrown. It is to remedy it that we propose to pass this bill and divide it into five military districts. If we have no right to redress such wrongs and establish government where none exists the bill should fail. If we are thus powerless there is an end of the matter, and we ought to proceed to other business.

Upon what theory is our right and power to do this denied? It is said ten States exist there and that we have no right to interfere thus within the limits of States. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] said:

"He believed that the States lately in rebellion were still States. They had been made States by the action of the people and of the General Government, and they could never cease to be States until the General Government had consented to that condition. That consent had never been given."

I am never surprised to hear such assertions from the other side of the House, but when Massachusetts raises her voice in behalf of the doctrine of State rights and asserts that a State is immortal or indestructible, and that the States of the Union are still States of the Union, wherefore we have no right to interfere for the protection of Union men within their limits, I feel called to make my protest.

Sir, a State is not immortal. It may be dissolved by a sovereign convention of the people called together to modify the constitution, but which should refuse to adopt any, and the people accept the result. The people of a State, and with the people its organization, may be swept away by the act of God. A conqueror may crush out a State and annex or absorb its territory. The history of nations, from the dawn of civilization till to-day, shows that empires, kingdoms, and States are as evanescent as human life. States of the Union are destructible, and the confusion on this point, as to whether certain States are in the Union or out of it, arises from the fact that gentlemen consider that which is a complex question as a simple one. A State consists of territory, people, and political organism. The territory of Texas belongs to the United States; the territory of Louisiana and of Florida belongs to the United States. It was all acquired by purchase. We paid for them out of the common Treasury. Florida we bought of Spain, Louisiana of France, and Texas we bought with the gold and blood of a war with Mexico. The soil belongs to the United States, and the people who are on it owe their allegiance to the Government which exists in conformity to the Constitution of the United States, which has been decreed to be the supreme law of the land.

The territory could be taken from us but by successful war. Passing by the right of conquest, the allegiance of the people might be transferred with the soil. But those who attempted to transfer this territory to a foreign confederacy failed. The soil belongs to our country and the allegiance of the people is due to our Government. In so far they are still in the Union.

But there was, as I have said, another thing that entered into the organization of a State. Over the soil and over the people was a thing known as a constitution; in one instance of Texas, in another of Louisiana, and in a third of Florida. Those constitutions contained ligaments binding them to the Union. The fourth and sixth articles of the Constitution of the United States show how States are bound to the Union and interwoven with each other. We are to surrender fugitives from justice, and public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of each State are to be accredited in all others. There are many provisions by which the States are bound together in a Union. They have direct relations to the Union through the courts, the custom-houses, the postal system, and in divers other ways.

The insurgent States were overthrown, and if they were not out of the Union, to borrow a figure from that distinguished son of Maryland, Fred Douglass, they had got the Union pretty thoroughly out of them. There were within the limits no United States courts, the judges of their courts took no oath to support the Constitution of the United States as it provides, no United States laws were in force there, and judgments in favor of our fellow-citizens were of no effect. Fugitives from our justice, after poisoning our wells and disseminating disease among us, flew among them, and our indictments against them were not recognized by any of their Governors.

There were no States then known or related to the Union, nor are there any there now. The territory is ours, and the rebellious people having been conquered by our armies are subject to our control. We are bound to guaranty them a republican form of government. There are no States there, and if we would execute the law which this House adopted to-day we must pass this bill providing for a military government over them, so that our Army may give safety to the agents designated by that bill, to those who through the long period of the war cherished a love for the Union, when they dared not avow it, and to those who, loving the Union, followed its flag and periled their lives on bloody fields in its behalf.

Sir, this was in accordance with the views of Abraham Lincoln. General Weitzel made an arrangement by which the members of the Virginia Legislature were to meet at Richmond, and got Mr. Lincoln's consent to their visiting that city. But when it came to the President's ears that they were not to go there as private citizens but as legislators he canceled his order and prohibited the assemblage. It was the view of Andrew Johnson, expressed in my hearing and in a conversation in which I participated, to General Gantt, of Arkansas. He then rejoiced that eight months must elapse before Congress was to come together, as during that time it would be his duty simply to secure peace and order through the military power to the people of that broad district then embracing Tennessee, and that during those eight months, while they would have no civil government, they would ascertain the end and true foundation of government and come to understand the people of the North; while the people of the North would come to know them better, and we would all be better able to estimate the capacity of the negro for freedom and our duty to him.

This was immediately after Wilkes Booth had invested him with the presidential office, before he had yet entered the Presidential Mansion as an occupant, and while he was yet the guest of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hooper] and holding executive levees in the Treasury building. Then, if his words might be believed, he had no thought save that the Government having crushed the armies of a powerful belligerent, it was his duty as its executive head and Commander-in-Chief to hold the territory until the law-making or treaty-making power could exercise its functions and determine what should be the future condition of the conquered territory.

It continued to be his view until a later day. When General Sherman made his ill-advised peace with General Johnston he renounced it. On the 22d of April, the day on which the terms of that arrangement were brought to the President, he, after consulting his Cabinet, set the agreement aside, assigning nine reasons therefor. Those reasons were utterly inconsistent with the idea that there were or could be States in that territory until the law-making power, which is Congress, should have exercised its functions. Some of those reasons are as follows:

"3. It undertook to reestablish the rebel State governments that had been overthrown at the sacrifice of many thousand loyal lives and immense treasure, and placed the arms and munitions of war in the hands of the rebels at their respective capitals, which might be used as soon as the armies of the United States were disbanded, and used to conquer and subdue the loyal States.

"4. By the restoration of rebel authority in their respective States they would be enabled to reestablish slavery."

"5. It formed no basis of true and lasting peace, but relieved the rebels from the pressure of our victories and left them in condition to renew their efforts to overthrow the United States Government and subdue the loyal States whenever their strength was recruited and any opportunity should offer.

Mr. Speaker, I might add to these the clause in the proclamation establishing the so-called civil governments in North Carolina, in which he declared that all civil government had been overthrown by the violent revolutionary force of the people. But, sir, my hour is almost spent, and I must hasten to a conclusion. And in doing so I ask gentlemen not to regard this as a measure of reconstruction, but as a measure essential to the execution of the bill we passed to-day, and of similar bills for other parts of the insurrectionary district. I appeal to them by the adoption of this bill, pure and simple as it came to us, with the sanction of the committee of fifteen, to give security to every Union man in the South or avenge his wrongs, and to allow those who now are held in constrained hostility to the Government of their fathers to avow a desire for peace at the end of a long and disastrous war. Not alone do I make this appeal; from thousands of graves come ghostly voices chiding us with having invoked men to our aid and then shamelessly and pitilessly handing them over to the unrestrained malice of revengeful enemies whom they had aided us to conquer. The widow and the orphan cry to us not to disgrace their country and the Thirty-Ninth Congress by leaving them unprotected in communities which exult in the fact that it has taken the lives of their husbands and fathers for their devotion to our country and cause.

The passage of this bill or its equivalent is required by the manhood of this Congress to save it from the hissing scorn and reproach of every southern man who has been compelled to seek a home in the by-ways of the North, from every homeless widow and orphan of a Union soldier in the South who should have been protected by the Government, and who despite widowhood or orphanage would have exulted in the power of our country had it not been for the treachery of Andrew Johnson. In God's name, men of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, do not interweave your names ignominiously with his by betraying the Union men of the South and surrendering nearly one half of the country to rebels whose power your armies crushed.

Mr. ALLISON obtained the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that that body had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 840) for the relief of James Pollock, late receiver at Crawfordsville, Indiana; and

An act (H. R. No. 813) for the relief of Rufus C. Spalding, paymaster in the United States Navy.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 160) for the relief of Dempsey Reece, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

RELIEF OF VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 12, 1867.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the joint resolution No. 269, for the relief of certain officers of volunteers, yesterday postponed indefinitely by the Senate and returned to the House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this bill will be returned to the Senate as requested.

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to yield twenty minutes of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] and will do so now.

Mr. MAYNARD addressed the House. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Speaker, when the question of the reorganization of these States, known as House bill No. 543, was under consideration a few days ago in this House, I voted with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who at the last session reported the bill from the Reconstruction Committee, in favor of seconding the previous question and against the reference of the bill to the joint committee upon that subject, for the reason that I believed it to be the duty of this Congress at the present session to present to the country some plan whereby the insurrectionary States could be restored upon the basis of loyalty to this Government. We have been told that that bill, by its reference to the committee, has been consigned to "the tomb of the Capulets." Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I rejoice that this day there is another bill affecting, temporarily at least, this question of reorganization. For one, I am in favor of this bill, either as reported by the committee or with any reasonable modification that may be made to it in this House securing the adoption of a general plan of reorganization upon the basis of loyalty and justice.

There is, in my judgment, necessity for immediate action on this general question; and I think the action of the House to-day has shown manifest progress. By our legislation to-day we have declared to the country and to the people of these ten States that the legislative body of this nation, representing its sovereignty, repudiates and ignores the action of the President of the United States in establishing governments for those ten States. We have declared by our action to-day that this Congress has supreme control over this question; and we have brushed away by a single vote the question whether or not these are States within the meaning of the Constitution and entitled to any or all of the privileges and rights of a State.

We have taken full and complete control of the State of Louisiana by the bill passed to-day, and decided that Louisiana can exercise no functions whatever except as authorized by act of Congress. I have had no difficulty for myself upon this question of the status of the rebellious States, and have always believed that they were under the complete dominion of Congress and subject to its sovereign will and power.

Now, sir, the President of the United States has a plan of reorganization. His plan has been before the country, and has been repudiated by the people of the loyal States of this nation, as it has been indorsed by the rebels who now control these ten States. It is a plan whereby the rebels are to hold supremacy. Opposed to it is the plan of the people of this country, who desire us to declare by our action here that those governments shall be placed in the hands of loyal men. If we do not, by our action here and now, place the control of those States in the hands of loyal men we shall be derelict to our duty, and shall have forfeited the pledges which we made to our constituents during the last year, and upon which they acted at the polls, deciding by unprecedented majorities against the policy of the President and in favor of the policy that "loyal men should govern a preserved Republic."

I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] wherein he tells us that for two years and a half we cannot restore these States upon a loyal basis against the will of the President, much less do I believe that we have within two or three days reached the happy moment when the President will place himself in accord with the views of Congress and the people upon this momentous question. I have no faith, Mr. Speaker, that the President has any intention of yielding, in fact, one iota of the plan he has marked out for the reorganization of the States in rebellion. As I said before, his plan is to place the rebels in supreme power there, and anything which will contribute to that object will meet his approval, and whatever will defeat it will not be sanctioned by him, but opposed with all the power he possesses. But let him pursue that plan as he will, if we have the wisdom and the nerve to enact laws, as we are authorized to do, placing the power and control in the hands of the loyal men, the President is powerless unless he refuses to execute these laws in good faith; and if he chooses the latter, we can then, if not before, "take into consideration the state of the country," as mildly expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

I know of but one way to surely and certainly place this control in the hands of loyal men, namely, to treat as utterly void the governments organized by the President in those States. I am not aware that Congress has in any manner recognized these governments. But it has acted as though they were usurping governments without authority or sanction of law. We have certainly this day, in most emphatic terms, so declared in relation to the existing pretended government of Louisiana. I so voted to-day and shall continue so to vote as often as opportunity is presented. This being done, we have only to authorize the loyal men of those States, without distinction of race or color, to organize new governments upon the basis of loyalty and justice. This should be done without limitation and without qualification. I want no property qualification, no qualification of intelligence in the enjoyment of the elective franchise. Let intelligence follow, as it surely will, the enjoyment of this great privilege of voting for those who shall govern. If we thus place the ballot in the hands of the loyal men I believe they have within themselves the power to control and direct affairs in all those States. Especially will this be so if leading and influential rebels are denied suffrage, even for a limited time. I have no fear but that now there can be found intelligence enough among the blacks to prudently and properly exercise the franchise.

I believe the hope of restoration of republican governments in those States rests in the masses of the people, the uneducated, the poor, and now powerless masses. Certainly not in the aristocratic few, who, though vanquished by our arms, are still wedded to the idea that the strong should govern the weak at their own pleasure and will without the consent of the governed. Therefore I believe to stop short of manhood suffrage in our legislation is to trifle with the great subject, and render us ridiculous in the eyes of all those who respect popular government based on the will and judgment of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that there is now any party in this country that arrays itself directly against this principle of manhood suffrage. The leaders of the Opposition out of this House, if not in it, recognize the justness of the principle. The leading journal of the Democratic party in the West urges its adoption as the only feasible solution of our national difficulties; and even the New York World, in a recent article, recognizes its justice and the policy of adopting it in a modified form, and in the debate to-day I heard no one of the Opposition oppose the Louisiana bill because it provides for suffrage without reference to color. If this Congress shall adopt it as an indispensable condition of restoration, I venture to predict that no party in this country would be found assailing it, unless possibly a few of our Kentucky friends on this floor might see in its adoption the overthrow of free government. But no one will be alarmed at their position, as that State is always slow to adopt views consistent with our advancing civilization. I believe this, and such other conditions as the judgment of this Congress may indicate, should at once be presented to the people of the rebel States, in order that they may know what we expect of them, and that they may no longer rest under the delusion that restoration will follow their clinging to the repudiated theories of an Executive who has abandoned the principles upon which he was elected and betrayed the party that placed him in power.

To them anything is better than unrest and uncertainty; like the criminal in the box, no moments are to them so long as those between the verdict of the jury and the sentence of the court.

Mr. Speaker, I have but one word to add in reference to the bill before the House. It is denounced as a measure of despotism, placing in the hands of the military absolute power over eight or ten million people. I admit that it is a bill strong in its provisions. I am for one as desirous of preserving the sacred rights of the citizen as any other man in this House can be. I believe the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus should be held sacred and inviolate as far as it can be. It has been held sacred for too many centuries to be trifled with lightly at this time. But, Mr. Speaker, we are told, and from the overwhelming evidence adduced we are compelled to believe, that in these ten insurgent States life, liberty, and property are unsafe. The civil governments organized there manifest their hostility to this Government and to loyalty as much now as during the war. It is therefore the bounden duty of the Federal Government, at all cost, to protect the life, liberty, and property of its citizens; and until we can do that by the organization of loyal civil governments we are recreant to our duty, to them, and to ourselves if we do not place over them the strong hand of military power. The concurrent testimony, so far as I have been able to read the letters and examine the reports, is that in those States neither the life, liberty, nor property of loyal men is safe. Now, if that be true, inasmuch as they have no civil governments in those States recognized by the law-making power of the nation, we have the right, and it is our duty, to place over them temporary military governments.

Gentlemen who are supporters of the President need not be so much alarmed at this military rule in the southern States. Until the 1st day of August, 1866, all of those States were virtually controlled by the military power of this Government. They do not know that long after the surrender of the rebel army in 1865, along through the early part of 1866, even up to August, the generals of our Army were issuing orders contravening the enactments of the Legislatures of these southern States, expressly declaring by general orders that the processes and mandates of this Government should be obeyed as against the laws of those States and the judgments of their courts. General Grant himself, I believe, on the 1st of July, 1866, issued a general order to all his military commanders in those States to arrest and hold men who had been charged with crime in all cases where the civil courts either neglected or refused to punish them. General Sickles in 1866, in South Carolina, and General Terry, in Virginia, each set aside statutes of those States by general orders, which orders were indorsed at the time by the President, and that long after the pretended governments were organized by the President and in full operation.

This military law is no new thing to these rebel States. They have only been relieved from it five or six months, and these have been sad months to the Union men of that country. Who in this House, on this side or the other, believes that if military law had been in force in New Orleans on the 30th of July, 1866, they would have had that scene of wholesale murder that transpired on that day? Who believes that had it not been for the telegraphic dispatch sent by Andrew Johnson to Lieutenant Governor Voorhees on the 28th of July, those murders would have been committed by rebel officers? By that dispatch he declared that the military power of the Government should be used for the purpose of enforcing the decrees and mandates of the rebel civil authorities in that city, and with that encouragement those murders were committed.

Now, I desire to say that it is because of the interference of the President of the United States with the military law which exists in those States that this bill is rendered necessary. In my judgment if we had to-day an Executive who was desirous of enforcing the laws of the United States to protect loyal men in those States, instead of defending the rebel element, this bill would not be needed. Those people are yet in a state of quasi rebellion at least. It is true, they have laid down their arms; but they have no civil government that is worthy of recognition anywhere as such. As was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] the President of the United States himself has declared that those governments are of no binding force upon the people of the country until they are recognized by the law-making power of the country, the Congress of the United States. Such assent has not yet been given, and I trust it will never be given, to a single one of these governments organized in the interest of the rebellion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, believing as I do that this measure is essential to the preservation of the Union men of these States, and believing that their lives, property, and liberties cannot be secured except through a military law, I am for this bill. But I say now frankly to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has charge of it, that I hope something may be devised and added to it whereby the loyal people in the southern States may divest themselves of this military law by organizing civil governments that shall be republican in form and in fact, and that shall recognize the manhood of all men in these States. Let there be such an enabling act as will secure to loyalty and loyal men the control and direction of affairs, and then relieve them from the temporary power of the military authority of this Government, as provided in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, we have but a few days more in which to pass this bill or any measure affecting this subject and have it become a law over the apprehended veto of the President. Hence, I regret that I have occupied even so much of the time of the House as I have upon this subject.

It is important, in my judgment, that this should pass, because if it does not I do not see how it is possible for us consistently to pass any measure before the beginning of the second session of the ensuing Congress, which will be in December next. We ought not to legislate upon a matter of such vital importance to the country with any of the loyal States unrepresented on this floor. Therefore, it is of the utmost importance that we should now have such legislation as will protect these people, not only temporarily, but such as will give them at least an opportunity of returning again to the Union with all the rights of representation in both Houses. Let us discharge our duty here fearlessly and firmly, and leave the consequences, whatever they may be, to those who would embarrass restoration upon the principles of liberty and justice, in order that rebels may yet for a time hold sway over conquered States. I now yield a few minutes of my time to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

Mr. BLAINE. My purpose in taking the floor at this time is to say very briefly that whether amended or not I shall vote for this bill; but at the same time to express the earnest hope that it may be amended in one important feature. I hold in my hand a provision which I trust may be incorporated in it, and I appeal to my distinguished and venerable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to allow us at least the privilege of a vote upon it. I propose it as an additional section to the pending bill, and I ask the attention of the House while I read it, as follows:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States by the ratification of three fourths of the States now represented in Congress, and when any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects; and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed equally and impartially by all male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion; and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined, for ratification or rejection; and when the constitution, if ratified by the popular vote, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

Now, I ask what more does the bill passed to-day in regard to the civil government of Louisiana demand of that State than this demand of all the States? That applies to only one State; you have said nothing of the kind to the other nine; you propose no civil government for them. You do not know what may be the fate of that bill. If you incorporate this amendment in this bill and send it to the Senate, whichever bill the Senate may adopt we shall have achieved something as a basis of reconstruction, and we bring Congress up to the declaration of making equal suffrage a condition precedent to admission. We have never done that yet, and for lack of that declaration we are weak before the country to-day.

It happened, Mr. Speaker, possibly by mere accident, that I was the first member of this House who spoke in Committee of the Whole on the President's message at the opening of this session. I then stated that I believed the true interpretation of the elections of 1866 was that, in addition to the proposed constitutional amendment, universal, or at least impartial suffrage should be the basis of restoration. Why not declare it so? Why not, when you send out this military police authority to the lately rebellious States, send with it that impressive declaration? This amendment does not in the least conflict with the bill for the civil government of Louisiana which we passed to-day. It need not conflict with any enabling act you may pass in regard to the other nine States. If you choose you may follow up this action at the opening of the Fortieth Congress by passing enabling acts for the other nine States. A declaration of this kind attached to this bill will, it seems to me, have great weight and peculiar significance. It announces to these States what it is important for them to know, and what alone the Congress of the United States can authoritatively declare.

In the first place, it specifically declares the doctrine that three fourths of the States now represented in Congress have the power to adopt the constitutional amendment, and it does not even by implication give them to understand that their assent or ratification is necessary to its becoming a part of the Constitution. It implies that their assent to it is a qualification for themselves; merely an evidence both moral and legal of good faith and loyalty on their part. We specially provide against their drawing the slightest inference in favor of their being a party in any degree essential to the valid ratification of that amendment.

Mr. RAYMOND. Will it interrupt you if I ask you a question?

Mr. BLAINE. Not at all.

Mr. RAYMOND. With the gentleman's consent I would like to ask him a question, mainly for the sake of information to myself, and possibly to the House. He stated that at the outset of this session, during the debate on the President's message, he made a speech in which he took the ground that the real interpretation of the verdict of the last fall elections was, that in addition to the constitutional amendment, impartial suffrage would also be required as a condition for admitting the southern States.

I desire to know from him, if he will be good enough to explain, on what ground he makes this declaration? So far as I observed the elections of last fall they turned clearly and distinctly upon the constitutional amendment. I should be glad to know from him whether in the State conventions or in any authorized declarations of the Union party in the States he has good warrant for saying that the voice of that party declared that in addition to the constitutional amendment there should be the further requisition of suffrage as a condition of admission on the part of the southern States?

Mr. HIGBY. I desire to suggest whether the taking of the constitutional amendment as the platform was not confined to the State of New York?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, I will say that, with the exception of the State of New York, I do not now recall a single State convention or a single congressional convention within any loyal State that made the declaration that on the adoption of the constitutional amendment the southern States should be admitted to representation here. On the contrary, I recall numerous declarations in State and district and county conventions—through all the organized exponents that give voice to the policy of a party—that the adoption of the constitutional amendment should not be the sole condition of readmission.

Now, sir, I ask the gentleman from New York a question in turn. When these numerous conventions, the exponents of party policy, negated the presumption that the constitutional amendment was to be the basis of readmission, what did they imply should be the additional requirement? What was that additional requirement if it was not suffrage? The idea that the adoption of the constitutional amendment was to be alone sufficient was distinctly negated. Now, I repeat my inquiry, and I ask the gentleman from New York to tell me and to tell the House what was fairly implied by that negative?

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I understand that at the last session of Congress we adopted the constitutional amendment as the basis of reconstruction. We certainly adopted no other. That was the basis, the only basis, which this Congress put forth to the country. Now, although in the fall elections each State and each district and each county did not specifically say in so many words that this should be the only requirement made as the basis of restoration, yet, in the absence of any other provision, I submit to the gentleman from Maine that it is fair to assume that the country accepted the provision which Congress had presented as that upon which they intended to restore the Union, especially as the issue was made distinctly between the policy of the President and the policy of Congress.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that he ignores one very important fact of the last session. The Reconstruction Committee, so far as their action could go, attempted to make a basis such as he speaks of. They reported the bill distinctly, declaring that on the adoption of the constitutional amendment by any of the rebellious States, such State should be readmitted. But that bill did not rise to the dignity of being rejected in Congress. It never received a hearing. It was absolutely kicked under the table in both branches. It was so far scouted that it never had a third reading at the Clerk's desk. And when Tennessee was admitted there was no possible implication in the act or joint resolution admitting her that the adoption of the constitutional amendment was the sole basis on which she was admitted. In proof of this I beg to read the preamble to the Tennessee resolution. It is as follows:

"Whereas in the year 1861 the government of the State of Tennessee was seized upon and taken possession of by persons in hostility to the United States, and the inhabitants of said State, in pursuance of an act of Congress, were declared to be in a state of insurrection against the United States; and whereas said State government can only be restored to its former political relations in the Union by the consent of the law-making power of the United States; and whereas the people of said State did, on the 22d day of February, 1865, by a large popular vote, adopt and ratify a constitution of government whereby slavery was abolished and all ordinances and laws of secession and debts contracted under the same were declared void; and whereas a State government has been organized under said constitution which has ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery, also the amendment proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and has done other acts proclaiming and denoting loyalty," &c.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this recital distinctly shows that the constitutional amendment was very far from being the sole basis on which Tennessee was admitted to representation here. It was the last, if not the least, of the many reasons that made Tennessee exceptional and peculiar and secured her recognition here in advance of her sisters in rebellion.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RAYMOND. I ask the gentleman to allow me one minute of reply.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope by unanimous consent the gentleman from Maine will have a few minutes more.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Maine want?

Mr. BLAINE. Fifteen minutes, and I will share it with the gentleman from New York.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire, Mr. Speaker, even if it subject me to the charge of repetition, to say that the action of the Thirty-Ninth Congress at its first session, so far as it indicated any policy, did refuse to make the constitutional amendment the sole requirement of restoration to the rebel States. The resolution readmitting Tennessee, almost the closing act of the first session, especially and significantly ignored it. Political conventions in the ensuing campaign equally ignored it as a final basis, and throughout the whole loyal North I do not recall more than one State that took a contrary position. If I mistake not, the gentleman's own State was the only one that did put that as the distinct issue in the platform of the Union party, and I believe the author of that platform found his political death during the present session of the New York Legislature in his contest for the United States Senatorship principally by reason of holding that position. Am I right?

Mr. RAYMOND. Does the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAYMOND. I think my friend from Maine deals somewhat in rhetorical statements when he says the proposition submitted at the last session of Congress to move a constitutional amendment as the basis of reconstruction was "kicked under the table" and treated with scorn and contempt. I can understand other reasons why it was not adopted without resorting to a supposition so extremely disrespectful to the Reconstruction Committee of Congress.

Mr. BLAINE. They helped to "kick it under the table." [Laughter.]

Mr. RAYMOND. Then, sir, if they did that after reporting it themselves, after spending six months of time upon it, after submitting it to Congress, if they, in general terms, "helped to kick it," they are guilty of more disrespect and faithlessness than I ever ventured to charge them with, and that is saying a good deal. [Laughter.]

I will say, Mr. Speaker, there is a sort of fair dealing in this matter, aside from technical objections, from legal quibbles, from mere words and phrases, upon which we base such an inference. We are acting here as the Congress of the United States. We lay down the basis of reconstruction for restoring this Union. The last Congress did that. The Reconstruction Committee, appointed at the last session by joint action of the two Houses of Congress, laid down a basis of reconstruction. Well, sir, we adopted that constitutional amendment, and held it forth to the country as the basis of restoring the Union; and it was fairly presumed that if it should be accepted by the southern States it should be conclusive. Objections having arisen to its adoption in terms, men holding exactly opposite views joining in opposition to it, it was laid aside; but not twenty men in this House voted against it on the ground that it did not provide for universal suffrage in addition to the constitutional amendment.

Now, I again ask the gentleman from Maine to point me to a single State that added suffrage distinctly as an additional requirement for the restoration of the southern States.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the gentleman this question—

Mr. RAYMOND. Let me first finish what I have to say on this point.

I say that the joint Committee on Reconstruction submitted to Congress and to the country the constitutional amendment, which was acquiesced in by the country with the understanding that it was to be regarded as the basis of reconstruction. It is possible they have concluded to lay that aside, for I admit that the changes of public opinion in this House are about as frequent as the changes of the moon.

Mr. BLAINE. Do I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] to maintain that the Thirty-Ninth Congress adjourned at the close of the first session submitting to the people of the United States the constitutional amendment as, in the opinion of that Congress, the basis on which the disloyal States should be received to representation here?

Mr. RAYMOND. The gentleman uses epithets; he speaks of "the disloyal States."

Mr. BLAINE. Well, I will say the late insurrectionary States. The gentleman knows what I mean.

Mr. RAYMOND. I say that the Thirty-Ninth Congress adjourned last session, having proposed an amendment to the Constitution; and that they appealed to the people of the United States at the polls with the constitutional amendment as the only basis for reconstruction; that reconstruction must be on that basis, if on any. The Congress had made no other provision; they had laid down no other basis; they had specified no other programme. Now, what I wish to know is, can the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] name to me some one State, or some two States, or any number of States, which added to that basis suffrage or any other distinct and specific terms such as would require any additional measures?

Mr. BLAINE. I again call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] to the preamble of the joint resolution for the readmission of Tennessee, which has already been read. The passage of that joint resolution was, I repeat, about the last act in reference to reconstruction which the Thirty-Ninth Congress performed at its last session.

Mr. RAYMOND. Exactly; that is what I have said: "ratified the amendment proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress."

Mr. BLAINE. But that is not all; the preamble further says, "and has done other acts proclaiming and denoting loyalty." Now, the very last of these "acts proclaiming and denoting loyalty" was the one ratifying the amendment proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. RAYMOND. That was the last thing required of them by Congress; and there was no requirement of suffrage embraced.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no.

Mr. McKEE. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. McKEE. I desire to ask him this question: If the State of Tennessee had refused to adopt or ratify that constitutional amendment, would he have voted for her admission, even though she had done all the other acts recited in the preamble which he has read?

Mr. BLAINE. Before I answer that question I desire to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] that he can show only one State, his own, that ever accepted the constitutional amendment proposed by Congress as the only basis to be required for reconstruction. And I submit that however great New York is, however overshadowing are her numbers, she cannot in that respect give law to the great Union party of the loyal States.

Mr. RAYMOND. Is it not true, and does the gentleman not know it to be true, that we admitted Tennessee into this Congress upon a telegraphic announcement that she had adopted the constitutional amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. That Tennessee had done that among other acts. And now I will say, and that will answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE,] that if Tennessee had not adopted that constitutional amendment she could not have been admitted. But the gentleman takes the negative for the affirmative. That of itself would not have been sufficient; without it she could not have been admitted; nor could she have been admitted with that ratification unless she had accomplished certain other acts.

Mr. RAYMOND. That ratification was what we waited for.

Mr. BLAINE. Because it was the last in the order of the acts which distinguished Tennessee from the other ten States. That, with other things, is what the other ten States lack, and that is the reason why they are to-day not represented here.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to yield the remainder of my hour to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] But before doing so I wish to inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] that the Republican party of the State of Iowa, in its platform during the last canvass, distinctly enunciated as one of its planks a proposition in favor of universal suffrage.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I would not ask the further attention of the House upon this subject were it not that I find myself very seriously misrepresented here and elsewhere in reference to the remarks I made on this bill on Friday last.

I would not have the worst rebel in the world suppose me capable of anything like malignity toward even him. I therefore take this occasion to contradict the representation made to-day by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HARDING,] as I am informed for I did not hear him myself, that I had declared that though I had hitherto been in favor of magnanimity toward the people of the South, I was now in favor of enforcing a blood-thirsty policy against them. I have never uttered such a sentiment. All that I did say was said directly and explicitly upon the single question of the constitutional amendment as a basis of restoration.

I did say the other day, and I say now, that if the amendment proposed at the last session of Congress had been ratified by all the States lately in rebellion in the same way that Tennessee ratified it, and if those States had done all the other things that Tennessee did, I should have felt myself morally bound, though it fell very far short of full justice and of my own views of good statesmanship, and I believe the Thirty-Ninth Congress would have been morally bound to have admitted every one of the rebel States on the same terms.

Many members know that I have been opposed to taking further decisive action until every rebel State had had full opportunity to act upon the amendment. Now that they have all rejected it, and considering their action as final, I say, as I said on Friday last, that that offer as a basis of reconstruction is forever closed so far as my vote is concerned. The time has come when we must protect the loyal men of the South; the time has come when fruitless magnanimity to rebels is cruelty to our friends. No other victorious nation has ever so neglected its supporters. For a quarter of a century the British Government gave special protection to the Tories of the American Revolution, paying them $15,000,000 out of the royal treasury. What loyal man of any State, except Tennessee, has been honored or defended by the Federal Government? It is a notorious fact that it is both honorable and safe in the South to have been a rebel, while it is both dangerous and disgraceful for a Southerner to have been loyal to the Union. They are every day perishing as unavenged victims of rebel malignity.

I desire to say, also, that I am in favor of placing these States under military jurisdiction only as a temporary measure of protection until republican governments can be organized based upon the will of all the loyal people, without regard to race or color.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] volunteered to read me a lecture on blood-thirstiness and reminded me of the sinfulness of human nature as represented in myself, I will volunteer a few suggestions and reflections to him and the party with which he acts.

I remind the gentleman that his party and the President who leads it have had it in their power any day during the last twenty-two months to close the bleeding wounds of this grievous war and restore the States lately in rebellion to their proper places in the Union. I tell that gentleman that if, on any one day during the war he and his party had risen up and said honestly and unanimously, "We join the loyal men of the nation to put down the rebellion," the war would not have lasted a twelvemonth. The Army never feared the enemy in its front; it was the enemy in our rear, with their ballots and plots against the Union and their sympathy with the rebellion, which continued the war and wasted and desolated the land with blood and fire. That party is responsible for more of the carnage of the war than anybody this side of the rebels.

But, sir, the gentleman and his party have made a record since the war ended.

If the Democratic party, with the President at its head, had, on any day since July last, advised the people of the South to accept the constitutional amendment and come in as Tennessee did, it would have been done. I have information from a source entirely reliable that but little more than one month ago Alabama was on the eve of accepting the proposed amendment to the Constitution when a telegram from Washington dissuaded her from doing so and led her to rush upon her own ruin by rejecting it.

Of all men on earth the gentleman and his party have the least right to preach the doctrines of mercy to this side of the House. That mercy which smiles only on murder, treason, and rebellion, and has only frowns for loyalty and patriotism, becomes the gentleman and his party. I cannot agree with all that has just been said by my friend here, that our own party in Congress have been so very virtuous and true to liberty. I cannot forget that we have learned very slowly; I cannot forget that less than four years ago on this floor the proposition to allow negroes any share in putting down the rebellion was received with alarm even on this side of this House.

I cannot forget that less than five years ago I received an order from my superior officer in the Army commanding me to search my camp for a fugitive slave and if found to deliver him up to a Kentucky captain, who claimed him as his property, and I had the honor to be perhaps the first officer in the Army who peremptorily refused to obey such an order. We were then trying to save the Union without hurting slavery. I remember, sir, that when we undertook to agitate in the Army the question of putting arms into the hands of the slaves, it was said, "Such a step will be fatal, it will alienate half our Army and lose us Kentucky." By and by, when our necessities were imperative, we ventured to let the negroes dig in the trenches, but it would not do to put muskets in their hands. We ventured to let the negro drive a mule team, but it would not do to have a white man or a mulatto just in front of him or behind him; all must be negroes in that train; you must not disgrace a white soldier by putting him in such company. "By and by" some one said, "the rebel guerrillas may capture the mules; so for the sake of the mules let us put a few muskets in the wagons and let the negroes shoot the guerrillas if they come." So for the sake of the mules we enlarge the limits of liberty a little. [Laughter.] By and by we allowed the negroes to build fortifications and armed them to save the earthworks they had made—not to do justice to the negro, but to protect the earth he had thrown up. By and by we said in this Hall that we would arm the negroes, but they must not be called soldiers nor wear the national uniform, for that would degrade white soldiers. By and by we said, "Let them wear the uniform, but they must not receive the pay of soldiers." For six months we did not pay them enough to feed and clothe them; and their shattered regiments came home from South Carolina in debt to the Government for the clothes they wore. It took us two years to reach a point where we were willing to do the most meager justice to the black man and to recognize the truth that—

"A man's a man for a' that."

It will not do for our friends on this side to boast even of the early virtues of the Thirty-Ninth Congress. I remember very well, Mr. Speaker, during the last session I, with forty others, tried to bring the issue of manhood suffrage before Congress. Our friends said, "You are impracticable; you will be beaten at the polls if you go before the people on that issue." "Make haste slowly." Let us not be too proud of what we did at the last session. For my part I am heartily ashamed of it, though I am glad that I with a few others gave my testimony against our shortcomings and the small measure of justice we meted out to our best friends in the South.

But, sir, the hand of God has been visible in this work, leading us by degrees out of the blindness of our prejudices to see that the fortunes of the Republic and the safety of the party of liberty are inseparably bound up with the rights of the black man. At last our party must see that if it would preserve its political life, or if we would maintain the safety of the Republic, we must do justice to the humblest man in the nation, whether black or white. I thank God that to-day we have struck the rock; we have planted our feet upon the truth. Streams of light will gleam out from the luminous truth embodied in the legislation of this day. This is the ne plus ultra of reconstruction, and I hope we shall have the courage to go before our people everywhere with "This or nothing" for our motto.

Now, sir, as a temporary measure, I give my support to this military bill properly restricted. It is severe. It was written with a steel pen made out of a bayonet, I believe, and bayonets have done us good service hitherto. All I ask is, that Congress shall place civil Governments before these people of the rebel States, and a cordon of bayonets behind them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NOELL addressed the House. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

At the conclusion of the remarks of Mr. NOELL, Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. PRICE, who moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By the SPEAKER: The petition of John A. Ragan, of Raymond, Mississippi, on the subject of the Mississippi levees.

By Mr. ANCONA: The memorial of Jefferson Good, late a lieutenant in company H, eighty-eighth Pennsylvania volunteers, praying for such legislation as will authorize the payment to him of the amount of veteran bounty that would have been due him if he had not been promoted from the ranks.

By Mr. BROMWELL: The remonstrance of the citizens of Decatur, Illinois, against any legislation depreciating or unsettling the national currency.

By Mr. BUCKLAND: The remonstrance of L. S. Hubbard, and 60 others, business men of Sandusky city, Ohio, against the passage of the bills of Mr. HOOPER and Mr. RANDALL, on banking and currency.

By Mr. COOK: The memorial of Donat Hollicker.

By Mr. DODGE: The remonstrance of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, against any increase of tariff on imports.

By Mr. DRIGGS: The petition of Henry Davis, and others, citizens of Ontonagon county, Michigan, asking for an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Ontonagon river.

By Mr. EGGLESTON: The petition of David Dunseth, and others, belonging to the crew of the steamboat Champion No. 5, for services during the time they were prisoners.

By Mr. FARNSWORTH: The petition of citizens of Polo, Ogle county, Illinois, in favor of the repeal of the five per cent. tax on manufactures.

Also, the petition of citizens of De Kalb, Illinois, for the same.

By Mr. HOOPER, of Utah: The memorial of the Governor and Legislature of Utah Territory, praying for an appropriation to repair penitentiary.

By Mr. MORRIS: The petition of H. Stone, Esq., and many others, of Ontario county, New York, asking Congress to pass a law substantially adopting the tariff on mail as provided last session in House bill No. 718.

By Mr. MYERS: The memorial of Joseph Nock, the patentee of Nock's round hinge inkstand, asking Congress to restore the sixth section of the patent law of August 19, 1842, or enact other provisions affixing penalties for failure to stamp or engrave the date of the patent on all patented articles.

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of citizens of Linn county, Iowa, asking that no law be passed by Congress compelling a retirement of the national currency, or compelling redemption in New York.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 12, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. LANE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NORTON presented a petition of citizens of Minnesota, praying for the establishment of a mail route from St. Charles to Plainview, in that State, via Quincy and Little Valley; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. HOWE presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation for the completion of the straight cut to the entrance of Fox river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. YATES presented a petition of citizens of Wabash county, Illinois, praying that the charge of desertion against certain late members of the forty-eighth regiment of Illinois volunteers may be erased from the rolls, and that they may be allowed to receive the pay and bounty which would be due them if no such charge had been made; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Jacksonville, Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of an act calculated to depreciate or unsettle the established national currency; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POMEROY presented the petition of Black Beaver, a Delaware Indian, praying compensation for the loss of property occasioned by the evacuation of Fort Cobb by the United States military forces in April, 1861, he having been forced by the commanding officer to leave his property to guide the command to Fort Leavenworth; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN presented resolutions of the Legislature of New York, in favor of the passage of an act granting aid to the Northern Pacific railroad; which were referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Tobacco Board of Trade, of New York, in favor of such an amendment of the internal revenue act as will exempt tobacco, snuff, cigars, and petroleum from the operations of the eighty-eighth and ninety-first sections of that act; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented the petition of W. A. Griffin, late superintendent of the national cemetery at Andersonville, Georgia, praying compensation for expenses incurred and losses sustained while in charge of that cemetery; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Fremont county, Iowa, praying the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOWE presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Green Bay and Lake Pepin railway; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 592) to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommended the bill (H. R. No. 848) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home," approved July 25, 1866, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 535) for the benefit of Mrs. Jerusha Page, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 558) for the relief of Mary A. Smith, of Johnson county, Tennessee, widow of Alexander D. Smith, deceased, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the memorial of officers of the Southern Minnesota Railroad Company, reported a bill (S. No. 593) to authorize the Southern Minnesota Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi river, between La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, and the opposite bank of said river, in the State of Minnesota, and to establish said bridge as a post route; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 594) to provide for the payment of compound-interest notes; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 578) to extend the provisions of an act entitled, "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 467) to amend the act entitled "An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1866, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments:

A bill (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 912) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1868.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Annie E. Dixon, widow of Henry T. Dixon, late a major of volunteers, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of Townsend Harris, have had it under consideration, and directed me to report it back with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. In making this report I desire to say emphatically that the committee were strongly impressed by the value of the services rendered to the country by this gentleman, who was consul general of the United States at Japan, in negotiating the treaty with that Government, but they find no sanction in the law or in any established precedent of the Government for allowing the additional compensation which he claims on account of that service. They, therefore, with very great respect for Mr. Harris, and with a sense of his eminent services, have come to the conclusion that they cannot recommend the passage of this joint resolution. I am directed, therefore, to report it back, and to move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES KEENAN.

Mr. SUMNER. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 247) for the relief of James Keenan, have had the same under consideration and have directed me to report it back with a recommendation that it pass. As this is a very short resolution, and as it has been passed by the other House, I ask that the Senate proceed with it now. It will take but one minute.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in the settlement of the accounts of James Keenan, late consul at Hong Kong, China, to pay to his legal representatives the amount of exchange to which he would have been entitled for loss if he had drawn the several balances due him on the adjustment of his accounts.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAUL S. FORBES.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. No. 99) for the relief of Paul S. Forbes, under his contract with the Navy Department for the building and furnishing of the sloop-of-war Idaho, have directed me to report it back with a few slight amendments to the House amendment. I think this matter ought to be disposed of, and I therefore ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration at once.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the House amendment. The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was in line six of the House amendment, to strike out "upon payment" and insert "at a price."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars" in line six, to add, "already paid said Forbes, and which shall be in full discharge of his contract with the Navy Department on account of said steamship."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The House amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

MAIL SERVICE TO CHINA.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for the printing of extra copies of the report accompanying Senate joint resolution No. 98, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred;" and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That five hundred extra copies of the report No. 116 of the Senate, to accompany joint resolution (S. R. No. 98) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865, be printed for the use of the Senate.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to give notice that I shall to-morrow or some subsequent day ask leave to introduce a bill repealing all existing tariff laws, and imposing an equal duty of fifty per cent. upon all articles imported into the United States from and after the passage of the act.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 170) to facilitate the settlement of claims for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished by loyal persons to the Army of the United States in the late rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 595) to regulate the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freedmen's Bureau; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. CHANDLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 596) granting lands to the States of Wisconsin and Michigan to aid in the construction of the Wisconsin and Lake Superior railroad and its branches; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 171) for the relief of Martha McCook; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PATENT BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That on Friday next, at seven o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed to the consideration of business relating exclusively to patents and the Patent Office.

PRESIDENTIAL OFFICE.

Mr. TRUMBULL, while reports of committees were being called for, submitted a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 235.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the consideration of the resolution in regard to the compensation of the Senators from Tennessee.

Mr. SUMNER. There is on the table a resolution that I offered yesterday, of instruction to the Judiciary Committee, that was objected to. I should like to have it acted upon now.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the resolution of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire into the expediency of amending the Constitution of the United States so as, first, to restrict the office of the President to a single term, and for extending that term to a period of six years; second, to abolish the office of Vice President; third, to provide for the election of Presidents directly by the people, without the intervention of Electoral Colleges; and to report the proper articles of amendment to be proposed to the several States.

I will not ask that this resolution be considered now. I introduce it because the subject is before the Senate, and I desire that this view of the question may be submitted so that the subject may be considered in every aspect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POLAND. Now, if I am in order, I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bankrupt bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish that the Senate would take up and pass the resolution of inquiry which I introduced yesterday. I wish to get that subject before the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there are now four different motions to proceed in the consideration of business upon the table. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] is recognized by the Chair as having made the first motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution which I have indicated.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether the resolution which I ask to have considered does not properly belong to the order of resolutions, and whether it is not a privileged question? It is a resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary for the compensation of the Senators from Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks there is no special privilege in regard to a resolution of that description, and no special privilege in a motion to take up a resolution upon the table over a motion to take up a bill or a joint resolution. The Chair thinks the practice of the Senate has been to recognize any Senator who, after the morning business is completed, makes a motion to take up either a bill, a joint resolution, or a resolution, without regard to one having priority over the other.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not at all familiar with the rules of the Senate, but I was advised by those who are familiar with them that this was a question belonging to the order of resolutions, and therefore had priority at this time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust we can take up both questions this morning. If the Senator from New York will allow the resolution which I have moved to take up to come up, I think we can dispose of it in a short time. My motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 235) to amend an act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863.

Mr. POLAND. I trust that joint resolution will not be taken up. I am perfectly aware, having been one of the committee that reported it, that it is a subject which will lead to a discussion, and take a considerable time. I desire to bring the bankrupt bill before the Senate this morning and have a vote upon it, that we shall determine it finally one way or the other. It seems to me that that bill, having been considered so much, and having been once put upon its final passage, I am entitled to have it taken up and disposed of before new bills are brought before the Senate which have not been considered at all. I trust the Senate will not vote to take up the joint resolution which the Senator from Illinois proposes to take up, and that they will come to a vote upon the bankrupt bill, which I think can be determined in five minutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust the Senator from Vermont will not interpose and antagonize the bankrupt bill against this joint resolution from the House of Representatives. This joint resolution repeals or suspends a section of a statute passed some years ago which authorizes the appointment of commissioners to assess the amount which should be paid to the owners of slaves on account of their slaves having entered the military service of the United States. I think that section ought to be repealed. The House passed some time ago this resolution repealing it; but I understand that commissioners are engaged in assessing damages under the former statute, while there is no provision for paying them. In this way expense is accumulating; a pretense of a claim, at any rate, is being made against the Government. I hope the joint resolution will be taken up and acted upon.

Mr. WILSON. I agree with the Senator from Vermont that we had better not in this morning hour take up the joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Illinois. It will take some time to dispose of it, and I deem it very important that we should this morning take up the bankrupt bill upon which we can very soon come to a vote. I am sure of one thing, that the measure which the Senator from Illinois moves to take up will lead to a debate that will consume the entire morning, and perhaps not be settled then.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Do you not think we ought to settle it at once?

Mr. WILSON. I think it ought to be settled very soon, in a day or two.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We may as well take it up. It will take no more time this morning than any other morning, unless the Senator from Massachusetts means that it shall not come up at all.

Mr. WILSON. I will do nothing to interpose in its way; but there was an understanding last night that the bankrupt bill should come up and be voted on this morning in order that it may go to the other House, as there may be occasion for a committee of conference upon it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know of no such understanding. Certainly there was no understanding in the Senate on that point.

Mr. POLAND. The Senator from Illinois says that this joint resolution was passed by the House of Representatives some days ago. That is very true; but the bankrupt bill was passed by the House at the last session, nearly a year ago, and it is a bill which has been fully considered, and we are on the question of its passage, and it could have been disposed of in half the time we have taken up in talking on the question of priority. I suggest that it be allowed to be taken up and voted on.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I did not raise the question of priority; the Senator from Vermont raised it. It is for the Senate to determine. I consider that I have discharged my duty in reference to the matter. This is a joint resolution from the House of Representatives which came to this House some time ago. They thought it important that it should be passed, and that the action of this commissioner in some of the States should be stopped. There are reasons, that it is unnecessary to go into now, why we supposed it important that the joint resolution should pass at an early day. It went to the Committee on the Judiciary, received the favorable consideration of that committee, and is reported back to the Senate. I consider it my duty as the organ of the committee to ask the Senate to consider it. If the Senate will not do so, I shall have discharged my duty. I submit it to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Illinois will not now be taken up. I see that one of the Senators from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] who takes a deep interest in that subject, is not in his seat. The State of Missouri is also considerably interested in the subject, and I see neither of the Senators from that State in his seat. I hope those Senators will be permitted to be in their seats before the Senator from Illinois calls up that joint resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think we ought to dispose of the bankrupt bill. It now stands on a motion to reconsider; and if we mean to pass it at all, it ought to be sent to the House of Representatives in time for action there. It has been fully debated, and we ought not to take much more time in discussing it. I really think the Senator from Vermont is entitled to have it considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 235.

The motion was not agreed to.

THE BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from New York to submit a motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I give way to the bankrupt bill.

Mr. POLAND. I move to take up House bill No. 598.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been read three times, and the question is on its passage.

Mr. GRIMES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. There are one or two amendments that I desire to move to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not amendable in its present stage.

Mr. WADE. We have tried your amendments and rejected them.

Mr. SUMNER. So was the bill rejected. I supposed the purpose of the reconsideration was to give an opportunity to amend the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote of the Senate ordering the bill to a third reading must be reconsidered before the bill can, under the rules, be amendable.

Mr. SUMNER. I was going to say, too, there were two objections, each of a radical character, to the bill; and when I make the objections I do so in good faith, for I am sincerely a friend of the bill. I have so declared myself and so voted always. One of the provisions which it seems to me ought to be introduced into the bill is what we will compendiously call the Massachusetts provision, to the effect that there shall be no discharge where the assets do not amount to fifty per cent. unless a majority of the creditors consent. That was in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, and ought to be, I am sure, in any well-considered bankrupt system. Then there is another amendment which I wish to see in the bill, and that is an exclusion of all rebels or persons who have been in the rebellion from appearing before the judge as voluntary petitioners for the benefit of this act. I had the honor of submitting that proposition when the bill was under consideration before. Since then further reflection has confirmed me in the practical value of the suggestion. Communications that I have received from those who are the most competent to judge of the operation of this measure are all in one direction. I have received important communications from persons eminent in professional and judicial life, and from others having the most extensive business relations throughout the South, and they have, according to my observation, but one opinion on the importance of excluding all who have partaken in the rebellion from any participation in the benefits of this act, so far at least as they may have them through their voluntary petition.

I wish the bill was in such a condition that I could make that motion again, and again have the judgment of the Senate upon it. I do wish to arrest the course of the Senate at this moment on a question which I deem of vital importance. I insist that the time has not come for any such measure of amnesty. These very rebels are treating our kindred and our countrymen with the most heartless cruelty, and this is not the moment for us to endow them with additional opportunities and advantages. The time has not come; it will come, by the blessing of God, if we are only true to our duties, and throw the protection of Congress over those to whom we are under the most solemn obligations; but to my mind this bill, so far as it has any operation, is in this respect an abdication of the solemn duty of protection which we owe to Unionists at the South. I call it protection: we ought not to allow their oppressors to get on their feet and acquire new power and vigor to carry out their oppression. I protest against any such concession; it is unhappy; it is sinister; I almost feel that it is inhuman. I wish, therefore, that the bill was in such a condition that I could repeat that motion and again have the vote of the Senate upon it. A Senator says I can move to reconsider the vote. I am not so situated that I can do so. I voted with the minority: I did not vote with the majority. If any Senator who voted with the majority would move to reconsider that vote, so that the Senate might again act upon it, I should be very glad. I do not wish to take time with it.

Mr. DIXON. I desire to say a single word in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the treatment which he says is received by Union men in the South from what he calls the rebels, meaning by that the whole people of the South who were formerly in rebellion. This charge has often been made; it is made every day; it has gone through the country, and it is believed generally by the people that throughout the whole southern country the men lately in rebellion are now engaged in one grand conspiracy, as it would seem, of oppression and abuse against those who were formerly Union men and against the blacks. Sir, I wish to say that, in my judgment, from inquiries which I have made, from testimony satisfactory to my mind, these statements are, to say the least, to use a mild expression, grossly exaggerated. Sir, there is no evidence of such a state of things, although the Senator from Massachusetts has read to us many anonymous letters, which he may call evidence. There being no evidence whatever that such a state of things exists at the South, without meaning of course to apply the remark to the Senator or to any individual but merely speaking in the abstract I say the accusation against the South seems to be a stupendous falsehood. I saw the other day a gentleman, formerly a member of Congress from the South, always a Union man, by whom I was told that the northern mind was utterly abused on this subject. He said he knew the charge was believed, and it seemed impossible to get a contradiction, but he declared that the blacks were as well treated in his State as the whites.

Mr. SUMNER. What State was that?

Mr. DIXON. The State of Georgia. I will state another fact. I was informed by a gentleman whose business leads him throughout the whole State of Georgia, traversing it from one point to another daily, that the colored people of the South, instead of being ill-treated, are receiving the kindest treatment from their old masters and their old employers. He stated that there was a very great fear in Georgia that the colored population would leave the State, would migrate to the Mississippi river, where they could receive higher wages; and knowing how important their labor was to the State they were treated with the greatest possible kindness. That gentleman I knew well. He is a man of truth. I believe him.

We have other information. I saw it stated to-day that a gentleman from the South, formerly a rebel and a leading rebel, was now in this city, who had his old slaves on his plantation and was employing them. That is a fact of some value.

But I did not wish to go into this subject at length. I wish only to say that in my belief if the people of this country could know the actual truth on this subject they would find that the exaggeration was gross. I have no doubt that in the wilds of Texas and in some other portions of the southern country the negroes are ill-treated, and I should be glad to see proper legislation applied to cases of that kind. If facts should be brought before us and a real instance was pointed out calling for legislation, and a law was passed which was in accordance with the Constitution, I would gladly vote for it. I think the civil rights bill already applies to it; but this general statement, that throughout the southern country the colored people and the Union white people are abused at this day and need protection from Congress, as a general thing I believe to be incorrect. I believe the idea which now prevails in the northern mind upon this subject is, as I said before, based on a stupendous falsehood, and it ought to be corrected.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CONNESS. Well, sir, I hope we shall get the vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question the moment the debate ceases.

Mr. YATES. I rise simply to say a word in reply to the Senator from Connecticut. I think it is well to ascertain that there is a proper spirit of toleration in the South, and our view on that subject depends rather on the channels through which we obtain information than anything else. If we get our information through good loyal Union men, and through the loyal press of the country in the southern States, the information is that there is no toleration whatever of Union men in the South. That is the information we get from that source. But those men who are opposed to reconstruction upon the congressional plan, those men who were engaged in the war against the Union, those men who have no desire now for the perpetuation of the Union upon the principles maintained by the Republican-Union party, tell us that all is quiet and harmony and peace throughout the South! They have said this in the face of the massacre at New Orleans. They have said this in the face of the fact that, while there have been thousands of arrests in the southern States of men engaged in criminal persecutions of loyal Union men, not a solitary conviction can be found to have taken place in the courts there under the rebel régime which there prevails.

I am somewhat amazed at the statements of the Senator from Connecticut, because my advices are through loyal Union men, and I have numerous letters from men who are familiarly acquainted with the facts of which they speak, and the loyal papers in Georgia and other States which I have seen say that the same spirit of rebellion, the same intolerance of Union men and Union sentiments pervades the whole South.

"Facts are stubborn things;" and when we see this disposition to resist a reconstruction of the Government upon the plan that is desired by the men who sustained the war; and when we see that Union men at the South have no protection in the courts there, that in the trials which take place there are no convictions, how can we believe that there is a proper loyal spirit in the South?

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state in regard to the bankrupt bill, that at the request of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who has been called away by the illness of his wife, I agreed, on the passage of the bill, to pair with him. I am opposed to the bill and he is in favor of it. Upon the question of amendment to the bill I am at liberty to vote.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] did not address himself precisely to what I had said. I did not say that there was a spirit of loyalty throughout the whole South. The Senator would be glad to see it everywhere, and so should I. I have no doubt there is in some portions of the South a bad spirit, and I have no doubt there is throughout the whole South something remaining—of course it could not be otherwise—of that feeling which led to rebellion and which was developed by rebellion. It would be miraculous if that feeling should have ceased entirely; but it has ceased to an extent far greater than I expected to see at so early a day as this. What I said was that the statements were grossly exaggerated, so grossly exaggerated that they may be said, taken together, as declaring the South to be in a disloyal condition, and that the Union men and the colored men need protection against the cruelty and abuse of the southern people as a mass. Such statements I repeat may be called false. The testimony does not prove them to be true. That there are exceptional locations in that part of the country in a very bad condition I have no doubt. There are places in the city of New York where none of us would be safe to-night if we expressed what might happen to be unpopular sentiments; but it seems to me that we ought to legislate with regard to the general character of the people, and not with regard to particular cases or individuals.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I do not know what are the sources of information from which the Senator from Connecticut derives the statements which he asks the Senate to believe. I believe from sources of information which I regard as equally entitled to credit with those to which he has referred, that there is not at the present time anything like adequate protection to Unionists in the rebel States, and especially to the black part of those Unionists.

It is only a few days since I had a conversation with a very intelligent gentleman from Texas, who had been stationed there for some time past, and was acting as an officer of the Freedmen's Bureau, a man of excellent character and reputation, as honest and as observant a man as you will ordinarily find; and he told me that within the last year in the State of Texas there had been undoubtedly in his opinion and from the best information which he could derive, being on the spot, not less than fifteen hundred deliberate murders committed by ex-rebels, guerrillas, and that class of ruffians, and that not one single case had yet transpired of the arrest and trial of one of those offenders. Men, black and white, in that State are found murdered; they lie in their gore by the wayside and in the thickets, and in other nooks and corners of the country, where their bodies are thrown, and sometimes it happens that very little care is taken to conceal the bodies; and there is no such thing in Texas to-day as criminal justice. Murder and manslaughter are committed there with impunity all over the State, while petty offenses against property are prosecuted and persons sometimes brought to justice.

There are none, says the old saying, "so blind as those who will not see;" and it sometimes happens to politicians to be willfully blind to facts which they might ascertain if they would give them their candid attention. I assert that in the main the reports which we obtain from the southern States in regard to the non-execution of the criminal laws and in regard to the turbulence and disorder and anarchy which prevail there are correct and deserving of the attention of every man who loves his country, and of every man who has a proper observance of law and order; and I hold it to be our duty as a Government to see to it at the earliest practicable day that crime in the rebel States is punished, and that the power of this Government for protection and security shall be exerted and felt by the turbulent and disorderly hordes who now create so much disturbance in those States.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President—

Mr. POLAND. I really trust, Mr. President, we shall now be allowed to come to a vote on this bill. This debate is on no question before the Senate, and it can take place just as well after we have voted on the bill as before. I really hope the Senator from Wisconsin will allow us to vote.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I shall not detain the Senate from a vote, and I rose simply to say that I have no doubt there are disorders existing in some of the States of the South, and undoubtedly in the State of Texas the disorders do not exist to any such extent as is stated or feared or apprehended by the honorable Senator from Michigan. I hold in my hand a letter—and I read no anonymous letters to this Senate or elsewhere as any authority for a statement that I make—a letter signed by a gentleman from the State of Wisconsin who was an officer in the Federal Army, and who has lately removed to the State of Texas and taken up his residence at La Grange, in that State: it is Mr. Willard, formerly of the State of Wisconsin. Mr. Willard writes to me under date of 22d of January last:

LA GRANGE, TEXAS, January 22, 1867.

SIR: * * * * I left Washington in June last with my family and have resided here ever since. I have ample means of knowing the position of the people to the Government, as I have traveled through nearly every Southern State and talked frankly with many who were active participants on the southern side of the war. They were fairly defeated and frankly acknowledge it, and never has a brave and generous people been so vilified and slandered as have the people of the southern States, and never in the history of any civilized Government has a fallen foe been treated as has this. I came here to the people as a northern man and late an officer in the Federal Army. I have been treated with courtesy and uniform kindness ever since I have been in the State by those who were during the war the most ardent supporters of the confederate government. This was for many years the home of Jack Hamilton, who publicly declares on the stump at the North that a loyal citizen's life is not safe in any community in Texas. It is a fact well known in this community that Hamilton brought there from Alabama a free negro woman when he first came into the State and held her as a slave until he was compelled by the court of this district to liberate her. This fact can be substantiated by the personal friends of Hamilton, and who do not pretend to make any apologies for his licentious course as a private citizen. With one accord it is generally acknowledged that he has no character to lose. Yet this man is put before the people of the North to instruct them as to the political status of the people of this State: a man who is an outcast from respectable society and an honest community because of his immoral and dishonest life as a man. Free speech is as much tolerated as in Wisconsin to-day, and as good and law-abiding people as those in Racine county.

Let me mention one fact within my personal knowledge in regard to justice as dealt out to the negro in this State. At the sitting of the district court here in November, a young man about twenty-two years of age was arraigned and tried for the shooting and killing of a negro. The facts were these: the negro was at work in a cotton field for Jones, who had formerly owned the negro. Some dispute arose between the negro and Jones, when Jones called his son, Robert, who settled the difficulty by shooting the negro. Robert was arraigned and tried by a jury of twelve citizens, all of whom had formerly been slave-owners and supporters of the war; he was defended by the best legal counsel in this part of the State; the judge, a firm believer in the divine institution of slavery, charged the jury to find according to evidence. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and he was sentenced to the penitentiary for five years. Robert was a son of one of the most influential men in this community.

With regards, &c., to yourself and family, I am your obedient servant,

C. D. WILLARD.

Now, sir, here is a young man from the State of Wisconsin, an officer of the Army, who states on his own personal knowledge the facts in relation to the arraignment, trial, and conviction of a son of one of the most influential men in Texas, in the very home of this Jack Hamilton, who he says is sent to the people of the North to declare that a Union man cannot live in the State of Texas. He was tried by a jury of slaveholders, and under the charge of the judge of the district, convicted and sent to the penitentiary for this offense. Mr. President, I do not allude to this by way of saying that there are no outrages in Texas. I only say that the honorable Senator from Michigan has not taken all the testimony on this subject in relation to the condition of affairs there.

I will state another thing. I was in Louisiana and Texas myself last fall, and from information which I received—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired and it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order which is House bill No. 452.

Mr. POLAND. I hope that may be laid aside long enough for us to get a vote on the bankrupt bill, and I trust Senators will agree to that course.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will forbear taking any further time of the Senate if the honorable Senator from Vermont desires to take a vote on the bill. I simply wish to say that, under bankrupt laws in other countries, even alien enemies are allowed to come in and take the benefit of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill before the Senate is House bill No. 452.

Mr. POLAND. I move to postpone that temporarily.

Mr. GRIMES. I am perfectly content that this bill shall be postponed or laid aside informally if we can have a vote on the bill of which the Senator from Vermont has charge; but if there is to be debate upon it, and I understand the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] has risen to address the Senate on that subject, I must object.

Mr. POMEROY. I think we had better complete this question of the bankrupt bill.

Mr. GRIMES. If there is any understanding reached by the Senator from Vermont and his friends that the bankrupt bill can be voted on now, I am perfectly content that the special order shall be laid aside informally.

Mr. CRAGIN. I wish to say a few words before the bankrupt bill passes; I may perhaps occupy five minutes.

Mr. GRIMES. Then I trust the special order will not be laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, to postpone the present and prior orders and continue the consideration of the bankrupt bill.

On a division, there were—ayes 24, noes 7; so the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If we can come to a vote on the question I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate on this side issue which is sprung on the bill here.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not wish to take up time either, but I do not regard the issue to which the Senator refers as a side issue; it is an issue of substance; it is one of the pivots of the bill. However, I do not wish now to debate it, and I should not say another word but for the remarks that have fallen from the Senator from Connecticut and also the Senator from Wisconsin. They have introduced letters from the rebel States undertaking to gloss over and—the Senators will pardon me the expression—to whitewash the unhappy condition of things there. They are able to show what I would call a sporadic case of justice, the standing rule throughout that unhappy region is injustice.

A Senator near me [Mr. HOWARD] asks me very properly, do I call it justice when a man is sentenced to five years in the penitentiary who shot another man down. That is the justice which the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Wisconsin—I forget which it was—introduced and quoted as an example of the heavenly condition of things in that country. Sir, the evidence from every quarter of that country, from every State and every part of every State, all tends in one direction; it is that there is something like anarchy and chaos there, that misrule prevails, cruelty, harshness, wrong of all kinds. The whole region is now little better than a whited sepulchre full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness; and the Senator from Connecticut comes here to add to the whitening, to white over this sepulchre.

Because I have introduced letters sometimes without giving the names of the writers the Senator calls them anonymous; or at any rate says that to him they are anonymous. Well, what he reads in the newspapers is anonymous; the statements that fill the newspapers are anonymous. Is he prepared not to believe the terrible tidings that come to us every day? Those tidings are always anonymous. One aggravation of the case is that we cannot give the names of these writers without endangering their lives. Since the Senator has been on his feet, in running over my morning letters which are now on the desk before me, I have come upon one with regard to a recent terrible outrage in Georgia, and the writer, after signing himself "Yours, for humanity," says at the end—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does he give his name?

Mr. SUMNER. I am coming to that. After signing himself "yours for humanity," he says, "of course you will not allow my name to be known; it would be as much as my life is worth;" and Senators ask us to give the name of writers in that unhappy condition. Sir, I was here in the old days of Kansas, and I remember when the cruel slave-masters of that time smiled over what they called the "freedom shriekers of Kansas;" smiled over all the evidence that we introduced day by day of the terrible atrocities that were there perpetrated; and Senators now in similar mood smile when all these horrors are brought before them and they ask for the name of the writer, knowing well, as they must, that giving the name of the writer is perhaps his death-warrant. That is the case. You cannot give the name of the writer who communicates these terrible tidings. There is such a condition of things, such a lawlessness, such an absolute recklessness of human life, that people cannot tell the truth with regard to the actual condition of things there without paying for it a terrible penalty. I hope Senators will not ask for names when the asking the question may involve a terrible sacrifice.

But Senators may say that then the letters should not be read, that the authority should not be introduced. Why, sir, I heard that more than ten years ago with regard to Kansas. Does any one doubt now that all the statements we then made with regard to Kansas, that all that bloody record was true to the letter? History is now making another fearful record with regard to these rebel States, and I entreat you Senators and my colleagues here in public duty, to listen kindly and attentively to all this news and to apply yourselves directly, and generously throw over these people all the protection possible.

But now, to give a practical application of these remarks into which I have been betrayed unexpectedly, I must again call your attention to that bankrupt act which proposes to confer certain benefits on persons who have been in the rebellion; and in this way give them an undeserved advantage over good Union people, black and white. I regret infinitely that feature of the bill. I sought to have it changed. I wish now that I could have another opportunity of voting on that question even if the Senate should vote me down. I see the impatience of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.] He says, "Why, they would vote you down." The Senator is comparatively new in the Senate. I have been accustomed to be voted down. When I brought forward in this body the motions for the repeal of the fugitive slave act, for emancipation, for human rights, again and again was I voted down; again and again was I in a very small minority; and yet that cause has prevailed. Vote me down if you please; let the Senator from Vermont vote against me if he pleases; but still I shall not miss any opportunity to sustain the cause which I believe is the great cause of Human Rights and of this Republic.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no desire to continue this discussion, and shall only say a few words.

Mr. President, I may be mistaken in my estimate of myself; but I claim some manhood; I claim a little courage; I claim some devotion to the Republic; I claim some integrity in the support of humanity and of correct principles; and because I do claim those things I am tired of the whip of the leader in this body lashed at me, telling the country at the same time in those stentor tones of his that there is none here to do duty but the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. I am tired of that relation here; I have great respect for the Senator; I have much attachment for the Senator; I have stood by the Senator, in my way, heretofore; but the Senator should leave to me and to every other Senator some individuality. Mr. President, it is not right, it is indecent at this time, after we have been tried here, myself for four years, in every struggle, in every vote, in every act that could defend the nation or defend humanity, to have the country told that we are cowards, lacking moral nature, lacking the disposition to do our duty. Such paintings are drawn constantly, and we are denounced, by implication if not directly, and frequently directly, as falling short of our duty in this body. Mr. President, we are equals here. I am tired of this. I shall not submit to it for one. I only simply profess to be an atom of this body, one of its constituent elements, but I ask to be let alone and not to be placarded to the country as a coward. Upon every occasion this opportunity is seized. I am tired of it.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, the Senate will bear me witness that since I have occupied a place in this Chamber I have consumed but very little time in speaking. I aim never to speak upon any occasion unless I think I have something to say pertinent to the subject under debate, and to say that in the shortest time possible.

I make no factious opposition to this bill; but I felt it my duty on a former occasion to vote against it without giving any reason for that vote. Since that time I have received several anonymous letters from men in New York, representing themselves as New Hampshire men, abusing me for that vote. Believing as I did on the former occasion, and as I now believe, that the people of New Hampshire, whom I represent, are almost unanimously opposed to this measure. I then felt it my duty to vote against it, and I still feel it my duty to vote against it. I admit that there are many men in this country who would be benefited by this bill if it should be enacted into a law and who ought to be benefited; but at the same time I can see that there is a large class who deserve no benefit under it who will avail themselves of its provisions.

If the bill could have been amended in two particulars, notwithstanding I believe the people of my State are overwhelmingly against it I should have voted for it, and would now do so. If the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] had been adopted so that no man could be discharged from his indebtedness unless he could pay fifty cents on the dollar or receive the consent of a majority of his creditors, it would have recommended the bill to me. Then if the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] placing the limit of indebtedness at $1,000 before a man could voluntarily take the benefit of this act had been adopted, it would have also commended it to my approbation; and with those two amendments I could have voted for this bill. There is no reason on earth why a man owing simply $300 should be discharged from this little debt when he may owe that to a man worth much less than himself; for under this bill a man may be worth thousands of dollars and yet be discharged from his debts. I remember the operations of the bankrupt law passed in 1841. I remember that the odium that attached to that measure mainly arose from the little suits, from the men who owed comparatively nothing, who were indebted in the sum of a few dollars or a few hundred dollars, going in and taking advantage of that measure, and thus creating litigation, thus making the thing infinitely odious. A man that owes only $300 is not a man who is worth much to the community, whose energy should be relieved, as we are told, by this measure. As I said before, he may be indebted to men worth much less in property than himself.

But, sir, the main reason why I voted against the bill before, and shall do so now, is that I believe the people whom I represent are overwhelmingly opposed to it. I have received but one single letter from my State in favor of this bill, and that was from a lawyer who said to me that the law business in his community was very dull, and he hoped the bankrupt bill might pass, so as to give more business to the legal profession. [Laughter.] That is the only letter that I have received in favor of the passage of this bill from any man in my State, whereas I have received hundreds from men who are opposed to it upon general principles.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, what is the question immediately before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HARRIS in the Chair.) On the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. So I supposed. When any other question is before the Senate that involves the condition of the South I may take occasion, and probably will, to answer what I consider as the unfounded charges upon the condition of the people of that section; but at this time, in my opinion, it is entirely out of place.

Mr. DIXON. I made no charge against the Senator. I stated the fact that he read these letters to the Senate. I did not object to it. I said that was the testimony which we were called to consider. I do not want the names of the writers. I do not desire them to be published.

But the Senator makes a direct charge against me. He says I have attempted to gloss over or whitewash, to use a favorite term of his, the existing state of things at the South.

What does the Senator charge? What is the statement which has been made on this floor frequently during this session, first by the other Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] early in the session, then by his colleague, then again by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD], and repeated here to-day? Why it is, to use the expressive language of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] himself, that the whole South is one mass of corruption; that it is like a whited sepulchre; and the other Senator from Massachusetts in his graphic description would have us believe that the midnight skies were lurid with the flames of burning school-houses in a country where we have been told for years there were no school-houses. No doubt, sir, there may have been school-houses burned. I do not think there have been many; nor do I think they have been burned by any class of people who can be called the respectable people of the South—for there are some respectable people there. There are wandering vagabonds and worthless bad men at the South as well as with us in the North, and they no doubt commit crime. I never have denied it; I have never attempted to conceal it; and I believe it to-day. But when it is said that the whole southern country is filled with men of this kind; when it is said that northern people cannot go there with safety; when it is said that Union men cannot express their sentiments there with safety; when it is said that the whole race of colored people are treated with cruelty and oppression at the South; then I take the liberty to say that I do not believe the assertion, that the testimony does not prove it. The Senator reminded me in what he said of the testimony of General Grant one year ago on this subject. Here it is before me. What did he say of the condition of the South? He had traveled there; he went there for the very purpose of giving his information. Did General Grant say that such a condition of things existed one year ago in the southern country?

Mr. WILSON. What does he say now?

Mr. DIXON. The Senator asks what does he say now? I ask what does he say now in his published reports?

Mr. SUMNER. What does Sheridan say?

Mr. DIXON. What does he say? If General Sheridan will tell us that the whole South is as stated I shall at once admit his testimony. General Sheridan has told us no such thing. No officer has said so. Instances of oppression and cruelty have been pointed out, and no doubt instances exist; and instead of "whitewashing" I deeply regret it. I trust I have a heart to feel as well as other men. I trust I do not desire to see the colored people of the South abused, nor do I desire to see the white people of the South abused. I have some feeling for the colored people there and I have also some feeling for the white people.

But, sir, I desire truth. Between us let there be truth on this subject. Let the truth come out, and when it does it come out I am ready to submit to it. But I am not willing to sit here day after day and hear those general denunciations against the southern country which I believe to be false; nor am I willing to be accused of "whitewashing" because I say the testimony is not sufficient. Sir, it is not enough for the Senator from Massachusetts to tell us that instances of abuse prevail. That is not the charge. A single letter from Georgia does not prove it.

But the Senator says that the fact that the individual in the case mentioned was only sentenced to five years in the penitentiary proves his charge. I cannot go into the facts of that case; I do not know what they are. The Senator showed that there had been a conviction and punishment. Whether that punishment was sufficient or not does not appear. I know that in the State of Massachusetts it has been very difficult to bring men convicted of the most heinous crimes to capital punishment. One Governor went out of office before it could be done, and another distinguished man denounced the execution of the sentence as almost a judicial murder. We know very well that different ideas prevail with regard to punishment. They may prevail at the South. What I wish to say is this, and this is all, that I believe these statements by which the northern mind is abused are grossly exaggerated, and they ought not to go forth without a denial.

Mr. WILSON. I am anxious to take the vote on this bill, and I do not propose now to take up much time; but the Senator from Connecticut, in replying to the remarks of my colleague, has seen fit to comment on some remarks of mine made on another occasion. I believe the Senator from Connecticut has a heart as well as other men; but I say to him that I have not stated one fifth part of the outrages perpetrated upon loyal men and upon freedmen in the rebel States since the surrender of General Lee; and the evidence of officers of this Government and of other persons entitled to credit of the murders that have been perpetrated there make the number larger than the number of our Army killed on the field of Antietam.

The Senator speaks of bringing in letters here; I have brought none; but there was a day when I did bring letters into this body concerning the outrages perpetrated upon citizens in Kansas. There sits a gentleman on this floor to-day representing that State, from whom we received letters, and we dared not give his name to the Senate. There are other men known throughout the country who gave us the facts of the outrages perpetrated in that young Territory in 1856; and we dared not give their names, because it would have periled their lives. To-day, sir, officers of this Government in the Army, judges and district attorneys, whose names are known in the country, are writing letters to this Capitol marked "confidential," because it would subject them to insult and outrage to have it known that they dared write the truth.

Sir, it is time to put an end to this sneering at the use of letters in regard to these outrages. The letter read this morning will be a passport for the writer in every rebel camp in Texas. It will not be his death-warrant; it will subject him to no insult; but every ruffian in Texas will read it with delight, and thank the Senator from Wisconsin for reading it to the Senate.

Now, sir, I have as much confidence in our generals as I have in the Senator's letter-writer. I remember that the gallant Terry was sent away, with his consent I admit, from Virginia, and General Schofield, supposed to be a conservative general, sent down there. Senators know what General Schofield thinks now in regard to the state of affairs in that State. General Sickles' testimony sustains every thing that has been said on the floor of either House as to the condition of affairs in his department.

General Robinson and General Scott—General Robinson was in South Carolina; General Scott—

Mr. DIXON. Where is his testimony? Has it been published?

Mr. WILSON. There is only one opinion among our officers in Virginia, the Carolinas, and Georgia. General Ord, a native of Maryland, supposed to be one of the conservative generals, reports murders and outrages in Arkansas. He states that there is no justice. He is a Radical to-day, I suppose, because he believes and says that outrages are perpetrated in Virginia, and they are done with impunity. The other day Dr. Watson shot down a black man who ran away from him when he undertook to flog him. He called upon him to stop and the man would not do it, and he shot him down, and he died. Dr. Watson was taken up but let out at once. General Schofield arrested him. He was brought to trial, and the President, by an order, let him go.

How is it with General Sickles? Is his word not to be trusted? He arrested floggings in his department. His orders have been overruled; and murders are perpetrated and nobody arrested for them. How is it with General Thomas? How with Sheridan? He says it is impossible to get murderers of Union men convicted. I say that all our generals in that part of the country bear this testimony. The number of murders there count by the hundred, and according to the evidence received by the Government but three men have been arrested and convicted for all these murders. I will do the Governor of South Carolina the honor to say that he has striven in South Carolina to arrest these outrages; that he brought to trial, through great effort, and brought to conviction, a man for committing these murders; that the sheriff let him out; that he ran away to Florida; that Governor Orr called for his surrender, and when he was taken he shot the sheriff and escaped again.

There have been three attempts to punish these hundreds of murders that have been committed. If the eye of the Christian and civilized world could look in upon us they would see more insults, more floggings, more outrages, more maimings, more murders upon innocent and defenseless men, women, and children than has marked any Christian nation of the world during the last thirty years; and they would be horrified at it.

I do not undertake to reproach gentlemen; but I say the time has gone by in this country when any man on this floor or in the other House should apologize for these outrages or defend them or attempt to explain them. There are portions of the rebel States that are improving. I think there is great improvement in Mississippi, in Alabama, in Florida, and in some other portions of the country; and I thank God that there is improvement. I hope it will go on; and I believe that if Congress is firm, and the people are firm, in spite of any action or any decisions that make blood flow, as certain actions and certain decisions have made blood flow, we shall correct these things, establish order, and bring about a time when men who murder poor men for no offense can be brought to punishment in all parts of our country. But I do not think that any Senator here or any member of the other House has during this session stated, or can state, one fifth part of the outrages, the wrongs, and the murders that have been committed on men in the rebel States for no offense.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Massachusetts, I know, does not intend to misrepresent me. He says it is too late for any man to stand here and defend or apologize for the crimes which he says have been committed in the South. I desire that Senator and the Senate to understand that I do not defend, nor do I apologize for any outrage or wrong. What I do—I may be mistaken; the evidence may be adduced—is not to defend, but to deny the existence of the crime. I say the charge is not proven. I do not believe that the whole South is so utterly lost to all sense of justice, so utterly depraved as to have turned against the helpless colored men who have formerly been their slaves. I believe, on the contrary, from the evidence which I receive, that as a general thing they are treating them with kindness; that the former slaves are generally, or at least in a vast number of instances, living with their old masters on terms of friendship and brotherhood. I believe that; and believing it, I take the liberty to say so. I should not apologize for a different state of things.

Mr. SUMNER. How is it with the white Unionists of the South? Are they well treated?

Mr. DIXON. In the first place, with regard to the white Unionists of a great portion of those States they are myths; they do not exist and never did. We saw them all. They traversed the northern country last year. Of their character I will not speak. One of them, their leader, has been characterized this morning. I take it that about the whole representation of the original Union party of the South was exhibited last fall in their progress—triumphant progress, if you please to call it so—through the northern country, and some of them proved on inquiry to have been original secessionists. When you speak of the original Union men of the South you speak of that which really in point of fact never existed to any considerable extent. There was a body of men at the South who were opposed to secession, but they finally assented to secession. They took the ground that they must go with their States, and they did go with their States; and those were what might be called original Union men. But as to the Union men of the South who resisted secession to the last, who refused to go with their States, in Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Alabama, we know they were not to be found. We know very well that the whole South was finally almost a unit in this war against us. Of course, the Senator may say I am apologizing for that. I am stating a fact; that was the fact, and everybody knows it. So when we are told to-day about Union men being maltreated it must be northern men, if the term means anything, who have gone to reside there since the war. In proof of that, if there is any proof necessary, I will read an extract from a report of a distinguished general, Carl Schurz, who traveled in that country and made a report. Under the head of "returning loyalty," he has several paragraphs on this subject, in which he shows that the South is divided into several classes, and as to original Union men there are none. He says:

"These statements are naturally not intended to apply to all the individuals composing the southern people. There are certainly many planters who before the rebellion treated their slaves with kindness, and who now continue to treat them as free laborers in the same manner. There are now undoubtedly many plantations in the South on which the relations between employers and employes are based upon mutual good will. There are certainly many people there who entertain the best wishes for the welfare of the negro race, and who not only never participated in any acts of violence, but who heartily disapprove them. I have no doubt a large majority can, as to actual participation—not, however, as to the bitter spirit—offer a good plea of not guilty. But however large or small a number of people may be guilty of complicity in such acts of persecution those who are opposed to them have certainly not shown themselves strong enough to restrain those who perpetrate or favor them. So far the spirit of persecution has shown itself so strong as to make the protection of the freedman by the military arm of the Government in many localities necessary—in almost all desirable. It must not be forgotten that in a community a majority of whose members are peaceably disposed, but not willing or not able to enforce peace and order, a comparatively small number of bold and lawless men can determine the character of the whole. The rebellion itself, in some of the southern States, furnished a striking illustration of this truth."

As I said before, we desire the truth on this subject. If it were true that a state of things existed in the southern country such as has been depicted by the Senators from Massachusetts, humanity would shudder at the idea. Sir, human nature is not capable of the infamy which is charged on the South. Pandemonium would be a paradise compared with such a country. As a member of the human family, I protest against such a belief unless it is proved. I have seen southern men; I have conversed with them; I have sat with them in this and the other Chamber. I know that they are misled, deluded, misguided. Heaven knows how deeply they have been misled, how misguided, and Heaven knows how they have suffered. Their offense has been great, and terribly have they answered it.

But, sir, is it necessary for the Senator from Massachusetts, with the influences he has at the North, to impress the public mind with a greater idea of the enormity of their crimes than the truth demands? I think there is, to a certain extent, a bad state of things there; but is it necessary that not only our own people, but that the world should believe that ten million people in the South are given up to plunder, rapine, and murder, and every possible enormity of which human nature is capable? It is utterly useless for gentlemen to say it does not amount to this. This is the charge; this is what you say; and you say that in consequence of it it is necessary to wipe out every vestige of civil government, every idea of republicanism there, and place those people under a military government. That is what is said here.

I know it is easy for the Senator to excite a prejudice against me. I know he may possibly, unintentionally, induce the people whom I represent to suppose that I stand here as an apologist for crime. I do not wish to stand under that imputation. I am an apologist for no crime. But I will say here and elsewhere that in my judgment such is the prejudice which has been excited in the minds of certain gentlemen, perhaps some of them on this floor, that it is utterly impossible for them to look at this question with candor. Candor is the rarest virtue in the human character. I see fifty conscientious men to one candid man. Few there are, indeed, who can look at this question candidly. It is very easy to join the crowd and go with the popular idea that our southern brethren (and even to call them "brethren" is a crime) have become fiends; that they are no longer human beings; that they are murdering negroes daily, and, as a gentleman said in the House of Representatives the other day in a speech, as I see reported in the Globe, shooting them down for amusement. Sir, I do not believe it. I do not believe one word of it. I deny it; and those who bring the charge against these people are bound to prove it. It is not enough to assert what General Grant thinks, what General Schofield thinks, what General Sheridan thinks; let them state what they think publicly in their reports, and when they have so stated it then I agree that is testimony. The Senator's statement of his belief, well informed as he is, is not testimony. But, sir, it would require all the testimony that has ever been concentrated upon any given point to convince me that human nature has come to that degree of depravity, to which we must suppose it has come, if what the Senator from Massachusetts says is true of the southern people.

Mr. LANE. I have hitherto contented myself with giving a silent vote upon the various amendments to this bankrupt bill and upon the passage of the bill itself, and now shall only detain the Senate for a very few moments to present my objections to its passage.

I read in the Constitution of the United States that Congress shall have power to enact a uniform system of bankruptcy. In looking to the grant of power in the Constitution of the United States we must look to the contemporaneous and antecedent history of legislation on the subject of bankruptcy, and particularly to the bankrupt laws of England, from which we have derived our notions, not only upon that, but upon almost every other subject of commercial legislation. The grant of power is to pass a uniform system of bankruptcy; first, it was to be uniform; secondly, a system of bankruptcy. Why the introduction of the word "uniform?" Simply because under the Articles of Confederation each State of the Confederation claimed and possessed the right to legislate upon this subject, and they had made insolvent or bankrupt laws different in their character. Hence, the necessity of requiring that the system should be uniform.

But it was to be a system of bankruptcy then known and ascertained by judicial proceedings, and by the history of bankrupt legislation in England. What was that system? A prospective system from the beginning, and an involuntary system, without any right of the debtor by his own motion to release himself from debt. Then, to make this law constitutional you must have in view the English system of bankruptcy, which must have been in the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution, and you must have the further provision of uniformity.

The bill now proposed to be passed is in contravention of the whole English system of bankruptcy. There has grown up there during a long period of time a system well-digested, looking only to the future, and not proposing any retroactive action. The English system of bankruptcy, therefore, is wholly distinct from the system now proposed; because this system has a retrospective feature, and has also the voluntary feature.

Then, I do not suppose that Congress has the power to pass this bill; first, because it is retrospective in its operations; secondly, because it contains the voluntary clause under which the debtor can relieve himself from all his debts. I do not suppose this bill to be constitutional because it is not uniform in its operation. You have already adopted a provision that property exempt from execution and homesteads exempt from execution by the different State laws shall not be surrendered in bankruptcy. That at once makes the system anything else but uniform, for every single State has a different system of exemption. Then it cannot be uniform, and therefore is unconstitutional. It is retrospective and contains the voluntary clause, and therefore cannot be constitutional, if we believe the framers of the Constitution to have had in view the English system of legislation on this subject.

These to me are controlling reasons why I shall vote against the present bill. I have another, and an all-sufficient reason to me. I have old-fashioned notions as to the honesty and morality of the obligation of debts. I believe when a man contracts a debt he owes that debt till he pays it, and that a Legislature cannot, without impairing the obligation of contracts, interfere between the debtor and the creditor. We are all alike, debtor and creditor, citizens of the same Government, and the Government owes precisely the same protection to the one as it does to the other. I believe, furthermore, that the effect of such a bill as this will only be temporary in its character. It will enable the wild and reckless speculator, the adventurer, and those who do not feel the obligation of their debts, to take the benefit of the bill, and leave honest men who feel their obligations to law and conscience and morality to stagger on through life, having been impoverished by the frauds of adventurers and fraudulent debtors. This I believe.

Now, sir, what has been the history of legislation on this subject? From 1789 down to 1800 the Congress of the United States never assumed to carry out this grant of power in the Constitution. It remained in abeyance from 1789 till 1800. Then, for the first time in the history of the world, as I believe, a bankrupt law was passed embracing the voluntary feature, the right of a debtor to release himself from his debts without paying, not fifty cents on the dollar, but one hundred cents on every dollar that he owes. That is the way to pay debts. That is the way we understand it in Indiana. When a man owes a debt he discharges it, not by paying fifty cents on the dollar, but by paying one hundred cents on the dollar, and then he can look his fellows in the face as an honest man.

But the act of 1800 was passed. It was in operation for some two or three years, and under a perfect storm of indignation—such was the public sense of honesty and justice and integrity—the law was repealed, and we heard no more of a bankrupt law until 1841. Thirty-nine years elapsed between the repeal of the bankrupt law of 1800 and the passage of the law of 1841. Then another law was passed, embracing all these odious features, for which I voted under instructions, some nine thousand of my constituents petitioning for it, and no one remonstrating against it; but when I gave the vote I said expressly that I gave that vote not of myself, but on behalf of my constituents. I have regretted the vote ever since, and I have been explaining it ever since. If I were to vote for this bill I should never live long enough to explain my vote. There has been no single man from the whole State of Indiana, during the last or the present session, who has asked me to give any such vote. No single paper in my State, of any shade of political opinion, so far as I know, has ever recommended the passage of any such bill.

Therefore, I shall vote with great heartiness against the passage of this bill. It may pass as other bills have passed; but without assuming the character of a prophet, let me say—and I speak from experiences of the past—that if you pass this bill it will not be upon your statute-book twelve months until it will be repealed under a storm of indignation which no public servant will dare to resist. It is in violation of the principles of common morality, as I conceive, which govern my action. Gentlemen equally conscientious will vote against me; but with my convictions I can never sanction any such bill.

Now, Mr. President, I shall not go into the present condition of society in the lately rebellious States, believing that that matter does not properly appertain to the discussion and investigation of this subject; yet I do draw one reason from the present condition of the southern States inducing me to vote against this bankrupt bill. There was a very large indebtedness in all these southern States to the loyal northern States at the beginning of the rebellion. Every single dollar of that debt was confiscated by the action of the rebel States and the confederate Congress; and now they ask me and ask you to affirm that confiscation and repudiation, and say that the northern creditor shall have no process by which he shall collect his debts. That results from the nature of our legislation and from the provision of the Constitution; for when you pass this bankrupt law it must be uniform in its operation over all the States, loyal and disloyal. For five years we have been engaged in a war with rebellion; the northern creditor had no process by which he could enforce his debts against the southern people; it was all in abeyance; the authority of the constitutional courts was overthrown; for five years war rendered it impossible to collect those debts; and now you propose, by a solemn act of Congress, to say that hereafter and forever these debts shall be confiscated, repudiated, and wiped out.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I know of no member of the Senate of the United States for whom I have a more profound respect than I have for the honorable Senator from Indiana. I know of no member of the Senate who would answer more frankly an interrogatory propounded honestly to him than the Senator from Indiana. Sir, I have been here for eight years, and I have heard these terms "rebellion" and "rebellious States" and "disloyal man" frequently used here. I want to ask my friend now what is meant by a "rebellious State" and a "disloyal man?" His ideas on those questions and mine differ. I hold that there has never been a rebellious State, and that the man who obeyed the lawful commands of his State was not a disloyal man. I should like to hear from the distinguished Senator from Indiana some explanation of the error under which I labor.

Mr. LANE. It would give me great pleasure to answer the distinguished Senator from Delaware if I thought it at all pertinent to this investigation. I will simply say now that any man who went into armed rebellion to overthrow the authority of the United States is a rebel, and that any State passing an ordinance of secession is a rebellious State. I hold that their first allegiance always, under the Constitution of the United States, is to the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will my friend allow me to ask him one further question?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Suppose that the State of Delaware, by whose action I owe obedience to this Government, enters into a compact of union with other States, transferring obedience on my part from the Federal Government, withdraws it upon political questions and questions upon which the United States courts have jurisdiction; who decides, the Federal Government or the State?

Mr. LANE. In answer to that question I shall simply say that if the State of Delaware should do any such thing she would, in my opinion, do a very foolish thing, and would be brought to see it just as the States lately in rebellion have been brought to see their error. But I do not choose to go into that controversy. As to this whole question of the present condition of the southern States, I think so far as this discussion is concerned it has no further relevancy than simply to look to their condition as a bar or prevention to the collection of northern debts. When the subject of reconstruction shall come up I shall be, I hope, prepared at least to give a conscientious if not an intelligent vote. I think we shall soon have to establish these provisional governments supported by the military power of the Government strong enough to protect loyal citizens, white and black, or we shall have to establish military governments over the lately insurgent States to effect precisely the same object.

But I rose simply to enter my protest against the passage of this bill, and not to be drawn into a general discussion about the condition of the South. God knows I have no feeling of enmity, no feeling of vengeance, toward the South. I would that the rebel people of the rebel States were a hundred times more loyal than I fear they are.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to say a word in reply to some suggestions of the Senator from Indiana. I should like to inquire of that Senator if Indiana has not an insolvent law on her statute-book?

Mr. LANE. I will answer that question with great pleasure. Indiana has insolvent laws under which every honest debtor who is not tainted with fraud may be released from his debts at any hour.

Mr. STEWART. So I supposed. The argument that the people of Indiana want to pay dollar for dollar is answered by the insolvent laws on her statute-book. Her insolvent laws guard no more strictly against fraud than does this bill. I believe nearly every State has its insolvent laws. The inconvenience of these State insolvent laws was the argument used in the debates in the Convention that framed the Constitution in favor of a general law, and at this particular time it is very pertinent. The South has its insolvent laws which allow a debtor to be discharged, and under their peculiar system there is no chance of an equal or fair distribution of the assets. This bill is for the benefit of the northern creditors as much as for any other class. The State insolvent laws enable the debtor to escape with as much and generally with greater facility than this bill, and under them you go into the State courts instead of into the United States courts. This bill enables a northern creditor or a creditor anywhere in another State to force the debtor into the United States courts and obtain a distribution of his assets. This argument, therefore, that the people of the States desire to pay their debts and to adopt that policy is not true in the sense in which it is used. There is no State that does not in some form relieve the debtors by insolvent laws. It is the policy of the people of Indiana, when an enterprising, honest man has been unfortunate and he is pursued by relentless creditors, to allow him to surrender up all he has and start again in the world. This is the policy of Indiana. That is the policy of this bill.

It is not true that it is the policy of the United States to make every man under all circumstances pay his debts. That was the theory at one time under the English Government, and they carried that theory so far that they allowed creditors to take the person of the debtor and confine him in jail and let his family suffer, perhaps starve. The creditors were all-powerful, and they treated the debtors as criminals. But, sir, all that has been changed. The only question here is whether we shall, under the provision of the Constitution, have a uniform system of bankruptcy, so that citizens of one State may have the same chance to a fair distribution of the assets of the debtor as the citizens of another State. The only question is whether we shall, under the provision of the Constitution, make that policy, which is acknowledged by every State and by all the people of the United States to be right and just, uniform; make it apply uniformly. There is no doubt about the propriety of the bill so far as that is concerned.

The Senator further says that we must look to the English bankrupt law in determining questions of uniformity. I wish to call the attention of the Senate particularly to that as applicable to this question of allowing the States to retain their homestead laws. The English bankrupt system allowed in each case the judge before whom the proceedings were tried to set apart for the support of the family of the bankrupt so much as was suitable to the condition of the bankrupt, so much as was reasonable owing to his position in society, that would correspond with his condition; in one case £5, in another case £100, and perhaps in another case £1,000, and so on graduating it. Does anybody question that that was a uniform system of bankruptcy? We were referred to that one example for an interpretation of the provision of the Constitution. That is the English law to-day. Is not that entirely analogous to allowing the States to set apart beforehand a homestead for the family? Does that interfere with the uniformity of the system any more than it did to allow an arbitrary amount to be set apart for the debtor corresponding to his condition and circumstances in life? Certainly not.

Then we maintain that there is nothing in this bill which violates that principle of uniformity. There is certainly nothing in the bill that allows a dishonest debtor to avoid the payment of his debts. There is nothing in the bill which is not in precise harmony with the legislation of all the States of the Union, for they all have insolvent laws, and all recognize the necessity of relieving enterprising men from debts which will otherwise incumber them for life and make their families paupers. All the States, I believe, recognize the principle in some form. The only question is, whether we shall make it convenient and uniform for the accommodation of the commercial people of the United States; whether they shall have the same privileges all over the United States that they have in any one particular State; whether they shall have the advantage of the United States courts in which to have the assets of a dishonest debtor distributed. That is the only question to be determined here.

As to the objection that the bill is unconstitutional because of the voluntary clause, that has been determined by the Supreme Court. We had a bankrupt act before this; the act of 1841 was a voluntary act; and the Supreme Court held that it was constitutional. That objection, therefore, is disposed of.

I do hope, sir, that this bill will pass. I do not think it involves the question of reconstruction. When that question comes before us I shall be prepared to adopt any necessary measures that may be before Congress to secure the life and property of every loyal man. I will go as far as any other Senator in that direction. But this bill has nothing to do with that question. The question now before us simply is, whether we shall, in conformity to the requirement of the Constitution, have upon our statute-book, for the convenience of the commercial men of the country, a uniform system of bankruptcy, by which bankrupts may be driven into the United States courts, and their assets fairly distributed; where they may appear, if they wish to go into voluntary bankruptcy, in the United States courts; where the creditors can have an opportunity to examine their accounts; or whether they shall go into the interior courts in the interior of the country, where nobody will hear of it, and go through bankruptcy in the fraudulent way that is complained of, to the prejudice of their creditors. I repeat, the question is simply whether we shall have a uniform system in the proper courts, or whether we shall let it go on in the way it now goes on, to the detriment of commercial men, with the whole thing involved in uncertainty: the South with her stay-laws, with her laws that prevent the collection of debts in every possible form, and with the prejudice in the local courts that must exist to the fair distribution of assets—a prejudice which will prevent a northern creditor from sharing equally with a southern creditor. This prejudice must necessarily exist. It existed at the time of the formation of the Constitution. This local prejudice was recognized by those who were in the Convention. They sought to avoid local prejudices, and for the convenience of commercial men, and for creditors throughout the United States, it was deemed important that the United States courts should be thrown open under a general system. That is all there is of this bill, and I hope it will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the passage of the bill, and upon this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called) said: I was paired off on this question with the Senator from Pennsylvania who is absent, [Mr. COWAN,] who was kind enough to pair off with me when I could not be present.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the calling of the roll, and read the list of yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Norton, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Van Winkle, and Wilson—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cragin, Davis, Foss, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Lane, Morrill, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Sprague, Trumbull, Wade, Wiley, Williams, and Yates—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Cowan, Edmunds, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Howe, Nye, Patterson, Riddle, Sherman, and Sumner—13.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas are 20 and the nays 19; so the bill is passed.

Mr. LANE. The Senator from Tennessee was on the floor before the vote was announced and asked to vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is so.

Mr. LANE. I ask that he may be permitted to vote before the result is announced.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He addressed the Chair, but the Chair did not notice him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will be allowed to vote.

Mr. PATTERSON. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CATTELL. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will restate the vote. On this question the yeas are 22, and the nays are 20; so the bill is passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 344, to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

Mr. GRIMES. There was a bill taken up on last Friday and made the special order for Saturday; but preference was given to the Committee on the District of Columbia on that day. It was then made the special order for to-day at one o'clock, but was put over for the sake of taking up the bankrupt bill. I desire the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill. I trust, therefore, that the Senator from Michigan will withdraw his motion and allow that bill to be taken up.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think this will occupy much time. I propose to bring it to a vote without debate.

Mr. GRIMES. I supposed that the bill to which I alluded was entitled to precedence. I do not know whether that is the rule or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it was postponed by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I hope my motion will be put to take up House bill No. 344.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think in fairness to the Senator from Iowa his bill ought to come up. It was made the special order for Saturday, and then postponed until to-day and made the special order for one o'clock, but the Senate then postponed it on account of the peculiar circumstances under which the bankrupt bill stood. I think, therefore, it is no more than fair that the Senator should have the floor now to take up his bill. I am opposed to his bill; but I cannot think it would be right for the Senate to take it out of his hands simply because it was postponed for the bankrupt bill on account of that being a question which the Senate had to pass upon. I hope, therefore, that the bill of the Senator from Iowa will be suffered to resume its course.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understood that it was postponed with the understanding on the part of the Senate that it would be taken up next after the bankrupt bill. I certainly was under that impression.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was my understanding.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Iowa told the Senator from Vermont that he had no objection to his bill being proceeded with, provided his should not lose its place, and if that was the understanding he withdrew all objection. No Senator said that he did not concur in that view, and the bankrupt bill was taken up. Under these circumstances I hope my friend from Michigan will permit the bill in the charge of the Senator from Iowa to be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to take up the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is it in order to move to amend that motion by substituting another bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask for a division on the motion.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. At this stage of the session it is very manifest I think that if we cannot get up this bill now there will be very little prospect of getting it up and acting upon it during the present session. It is a House bill which passed the House of Representatives at the last session. It is a very important measure to the people of the West, in which they feel a very deep interest, and I hope that the Senate will allow us to consider this bill. There was an effort made at the last session of Congress, but we could never get the consideration of the Senate to it.

Mr. MORGAN. It was postponed by the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was never considered in the Senate. It was reported by the committee, and I think the Senator from Michigan, who has charge of the bill, if I recollect rightly, made several efforts to get the attention of the Senate to it and a vote upon it. It is true that it was laid aside by a vote, just as it will be at this session by refusing to take it up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You can take it up after we get through with this.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is there any assurance that we can take it up after we get through with the measure of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FESSENDEN. You have just exactly the same chance as anybody else has.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Just as good a chance. Now this is in order. The motion made by the Senator from Michigan is in order.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The motion is made, but it is not yet agreed to. I suppose we have a right to state the objection to taking it up, and that is that another bill is fairly entitled to precedence under the circumstances, having been assigned for to-day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If there is anything in that I hope they will not be antagonized, because I desire to see a fair vote on the Niagara ship-canal bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the ground on which I put it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Maine or other Senators think it is crowding some other bill out that is fairly entitled to precedence, I hope the Senator from Michigan will not press the motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is entirely the ground on which I put it. As I said, I am not in favor of the bill which the Senator from Iowa wishes to take up, and never have been; but it having been especially assigned for to-day—I believe it was first brought and assigned for Saturday—

Mr. TRUMBULL. It had not been assigned for to-day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, it was specially assigned for to-day at one o'clock, but the bankrupt bill intervened.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senate postponed it by a vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know, but with a perfect understanding that they were only postponing it in order to dispose of the bankrupt bill, that was pending at the time on a reconsideration.

Mr. HOWARD. I did not so understand it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I so understood it, and I think common fairness requires that other measures should not be antagonized with it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If I can have an understanding that this bill shall come up immediately after the action of the Senate upon the bill that the Senator from Iowa proposes to bring up I will consent to withdraw my motion. But I have been trying, as the Senator from Illinois has stated, for two sessions to get a vote on this bill and have failed thus far. I think it is the most important measure now before the Senate.

The House acted upon it nearly two years ago. It is a bill in which the Northwest take a deep interest. It is of equal interest to the East. It is a national work, a work of necessity. If Senators will, by common consent, say that this bill shall come up immediately after action on the other bill, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. CONNESS. Why, Mr. President, whether the Senator withdraws it or not the Senate will settle it by a vote. I hope we shall come to a vote, and that will settle it.

Mr. GRIMES. That is the best way.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw his motion?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Dixon, Fogg, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Howard, Pomeroy, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Yates—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattel, Conness, Creswell, Davis, Doxittle, Fessenden, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Patterson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Cragin, Edmunds, Fowler, Guthrie, Howe, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, and Riddle—13.

So the motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the 7th instant, a copy of the correspondence between the Department of State and the minister of the United States at Stockholm in relation to his reported transfer from Stockholm to Bogota; which, on motion of Mr. SUMNER, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. WADE, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 404) to regulate the selection of grand and petit jurors in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes, with the amendments thereto, be recommitted to the Committee on Territories.

JOHN J. SOHAN.

Mr. DAVIS. Before the Senator from Iowa calls up his bill I hope I shall be allowed a moment to call up a pension bill for a blind sailor. The House have passed a bill placing him on the pension-roll, and the Committee on Pensions have reported it with an amendment simply requiring the pension to be paid out of the naval pension fund. I hope the Senate will take up the bill, concur in the amendment, and pass the bill. It will take but a moment. It is House bill No. 1053.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1053) granting an increased pension to John J. Sohan. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to allow and pay John J. Sohan, in consequence of total blindness, resulting from disease contracted in the line of his duty as a marine in the United States Navy, a pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month, commencing on the 16th of August, 1866, and to continue during his disability, in lieu of the pension heretofore allowed to him by the Secretary of the Interior on the 13th of October, 1866.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to add the words "to be paid out of the naval pension fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendment was concurred in, ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read a third time, and passed.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senate on Saturday last authorized a meeting at seven o'clock to-night for the consideration of business of the District of Columbia. I am persuaded that after the late session last night I shall hardly succeed in getting a quorum of the Senate to-night. I move, therefore, that to-morrow night, at seven o'clock, be assigned for the consideration of the business of the District of Columbia instead of to-night.

Mr. WILSON. The Military Committee want to-morrow; we have some twenty bills to act on.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

RECONSIDERATION OF A VOTE.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) for the relief of certain officers of volunteers was yesterday postponed indefinitely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

LEAGUE ISLAND.

Mr. GRIMES. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 452.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 452) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to receive and accept from the city authorities of the city of Philadelphia the title to League Island, in the Delaware river, and adjacent marsh land, including the whole of the creek known as the Back Channel, from the Schuylkill to the Delaware river, and all the riparian rights and privileges of League Island, adjacent marsh, and Back Channel, together with so much of the opposite shore of the Back Channel from the League Island shore as shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, be ample to enable the Government to have the sole and exclusive use of the Back Channel and both shores; the island and appurtenances to be held for naval purposes by the Government of the United States; but League Island, the marsh adjacent, and the Back Channel, with its shores, is not to be received or accepted until the title to the whole of the same, as herein described, is complete and indefeasible, nor unless the acceptance thereof shall be recommended by a board of officers to be appointed by the President.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the debate begins on the bill, if it is in order, I should like to move an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as a substitute:

That Admiral David G. Farragut, Lieutenant General W. T. Sherman, and Mr. J. E. Hilgard be, and they are hereby, appointed and constituted a commission to select a suitable site on or adjacent to the Atlantic coast for a naval station for the storage and repair of iron vessels and iron-clad vessels of the Navy, and for other naval purposes. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered to accept such selected site on behalf of the United States: Provided, The same shall be conveyed to the United States as a free gift, for their exclusive use and benefit, by a valid and indefeasible title. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized to take possession of and occupy such site for the purposes herein indicated; and in preparation thereof to use such amount of money as may be necessary out of any unexpended appropriations for the Navy.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, under the instruction of the Committee on Naval Affairs it became my duty to report this bill back to the Senate with a recommendation in its favor, and I shall now, in its explanation, ask the attention of the Senate but a short time. In my investigation of this subject I have not considered the question which is suggested by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I do not consider this to be a question whether the United States will establish and build up an additional navy-yard; and I believe in that view the committee agreed with myself. It is not a question whether a new yard shall be established, but simply whether the navy-yard at Philadelphia shall be removed to what is supposed to be a more desirable location; and I think the only question that the Senate is called upon now to decide is whether that removal shall take place. I think we have no sufficient reason for the establishment of an additional navy-yard.

That Senators may understand just how the navy-yards of the country are located, I will state that there is now a navy-yard in Maine of one hundred and sixty-four and seven eighths acres; one at Charlestown, Massachusetts, of eighty-five and one fourth acres; one at Brooklyn, New York, of one hundred and ninety-three and one tenth acres; one at Philadelphia of twenty acres; the Washington yard, forty-one and seven eighths acres; Norfolk, to some extent destroyed, one hundred and nineteen acres; Brunswick, no expenditure yet made, eleven hundred acres; Pensacola, to a large extent destroyed, eighty-three and one fourth acres; Mare Island, California, nine hundred acres; Sackett's Harbor, New York, a very inconsiderable establishment, three and a half acres.

Upon this statement Senators will observe that there is but one navy-yard located in the middle States, that at Philadelphia. I think Senators will not consider the question now whether we shall cease to have a navy-yard in the Delaware, or anywhere in the middle States, and, in connection with that, whether we shall put an additional yard upon the shores of New England. I am aware that there has been a controversy growing out of the respective claims of Philadelphia, and New London, in the State of Connecticut; but I do not choose, in this connection, to consider the claims of New London, for the simple reason that I do not understand the question to be before the Senate or Congress whether an additional navy-yard shall be established in New England. That part of the country is well provided for in this respect. I think the lessons of the war teach us that the military and naval power should be fairly, equitably, and wisely distributed over the country. There is scarcely any Senator who would now say that the only arsenal should be in New England, or should be in the middle States, or should be in the southern States. The possible disaffection of any section teaches us that it is important to have the military power scattered over the country; and upon that policy we have established arsenals at different points, and have not allowed the country to rely upon a great arsenal in some one particular section of the Union. So I think, in regard to the navy-yards, that the policy is a wise one that they shall be carefully and wisely distributed along the coasts which we control. Perhaps one upon the Pacific coast for the present is enough. Two or three in New England are quite enough for that locality. Norfolk and Pensacola will perhaps when rebuilt be enough for the southern coast. But upon what propriety is it claimed that a navy-yard, up to this time so useful, and found so important as the one on the Delaware, shall be abandoned and a new yard built upon the shores of New England? So, sir, I have declined to consider the comparative claims of these two localities.

Philadelphia now has a yard of twenty acres, capable of enlargement somewhat, but, according to the opinion of naval men, not capable of enlargement to such an extent as the necessities of the Government require. The measure which is now before the Senate has been recommended from the Navy Department in every annual communication since 1862. Early in the war the Secretary of the Navy became of the opinion that the enlargement of the yard at Philadelphia was very important; but especially that there should be provision made for the laying up of our iron-clads. I will call the attention of the Senate very briefly to one or two extracts from the communications or reports of the Secretary of the Navy. In his report of December 1, 1863, the Secretary says:

"The Government is destitute of a suitable establishment for the construction or repair of iron vessels, their machinery or armature; nor has it any place for preserving them when laid up in ordinary. Some proper and suitable accommodations for vessels of this description are necessary where there is fresh water, and, as stated in my communications to the last Congress, it has appeared to me that no place combines so many advantages as are to be found on the Delaware, in the vicinity of Philadelphia."

In his report of December 5, 1864, the Secretary of the Navy says:

"The Government has not even at this time an establishment where a shaft can be made for our steamers, or a plate for our iron-clads."

Again, in the same communication, the Secretary says:

"A navy-yard, if we have one for naval iron work, should be established on fresh water, for this is essential to the preservation of iron vessels, which cannot be laid up in salt water during peace. Ready access to coal, iron, and timber is also important, for these essential articles should be always available on the inland waters without exposure to an enemy by coast-wise transportation. The vicinity of a large city, where skilled artisans can be obtained without difficulty, and the facilities of markets and tenements are abundant, should be considered. A foundation of gravel would for the purpose of machinery be preferable to stone. An extensive water frontage must also be secured. For such a depot and establishment where costly machinery and material would accumulate during years of peace the advantages of an interior location are most manifest. These favorable conditions are to be obtained nowhere else so completely as on the Delaware river; and the position of League Island, within the limits of the city of Philadelphia, presents probably a stronger combination of the points that are necessary than any other location."

I read now from his report of the 4th of December, 1865:

"The board of naval and scientific gentlemen appointed in 1862, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed on the suggestion of the Department, to select a site for a navy-yard for iron purposes, while entertaining differing opinions as to the most eligible location for a navy-yard for general objects, were united in favor of League Island 'so far as iron vessels are concerned.'"

In a letter to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, dated March 6, 1866, the Secretary says:

"The importance of a suitable navy-yard and establishment for iron and armored vessels was felt to be a necessity during the war. League Island, on the Delaware river, adjoining Philadelphia, was tendered to the Government for naval purposes, and the locality possessed such extraordinary advantages that I could not do otherwise than present the subject to the consideration of Congress. The late President Lincoln was so impressed with its importance that he deemed it a duty on two occasions to make special reference to the subject of promptly securing League Island for naval purposes."

Again, he says:

"When hostilities ceased, the Department was compelled, in consequence of the neglect to make suitable provision for our fleet, to ask and obtain permission of the proprietors to place the armored vessels in the back channel of League Island during the pleasure of private parties or until Congress shall designate some other locality."

League Island is situated about two miles below the built-up portion of the city of Philadelphia. There are now inclosed within the walls that protect it from the highest stages of the water about four hundred acres, and the inclosure may be extended so as to make the island about six hundred acres. Therefore, the proposition now is to secure for the navy-yard at Philadelphia six hundred acres, being League Island, about two miles below the built-up portion of the city of Philadelphia. This island was subject to overflow, being about two and a half feet below the highest water in the Delaware. It is protected from the water by a stone wall, a portion of which has stood for a great many years, and is so completely protected by that wall as that the land has been used for meadows.

Now, Mr. President, I should favor this measure if we never contemplated the building of a navy-yard upon the island itself. I should vote to accept this donation from the city of Philadelphia if the island could be used for no other purpose than as a place of refuge and security in fresh water for our iron-clads. The Delaware river flows in front of the island. There is in the rear of it a back channel, in which for the last two years the iron-clads have been laid up—not the largest size, but the medium sized iron-clads have been securely laid in this channel. The channel is of sufficient length and sufficient capacity when dredged to far more than accommodate any navy which this Government will perhaps ever provide for. I have a map of the island which shows the position of the island in relation to the city of Philadelphia and in its relation to the main channel of the Delaware river and to this back channel, and also to the mouth of the Schuylkill.

I shall not stop to discuss the importance of having fresh water in which to lay up the iron-clads. It is conceded upon all hands that it will not do to lay them up for any length of time in salt water. The iron is destroyed by it. The destruction of the iron in fresh water is very small, scarcely perceptible. All scientific men who have given any opinion on this subject at all have agreed that we must have a fresh-water basin in which to lay up our iron-clads. That is found, according to the opinion of naval men, in the back channel adjoining League Island. It is now of about the depth of fourteen feet. To accommodate the larger-sized vessels it must be deeper. That channel empties into the Delaware along with the Schuylkill; and so pure is the water at that point that I am told by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CATTELL] that very many of our vessels supply themselves before sailing with water at that point.

Some objections have been made to this location of a navy-yard and the selection of this back channel for the laying up of the iron-clads. I will refer to them briefly. I choose rather to refer to them more fully after they shall have been suggested by those who oppose this bill. In this connection I will refer to the opinion expressed by Mr. Fox, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, under date of February 21, 1866, about a year ago:

"The island has a shore line of two and a quarter miles upon the Delaware river, nearly half a mile upon the Schuylkill, and a back channel separating it from the main land two and a quarter miles in length, with an average width between the dykes of three hundred and fifty yards. At present there is a mile and a half of this back channel that is one hundred feet wide and fourteen and a half feet deep, with soft bottom. Here are moored the harbor and river monitors, the light-draught monitors, and torpedo boats, also several double-enders and other gunboats. A natural basin, secure from every known risk, inside of the permanent defenses of the coast, in fresh water; away from ice and currents; within reach of coal and iron, and skilled labor to prepare our vessels for battle at a moderate expense; only a mile distant from the main ship channel, which has been closed by ice but once in forty years; with no expenditure required to secure the vessels in their present position that would not be incurred at our best yards, (where there is no room for them); and finally, a complete back channel, that by dredging would give ample room for the entire American and English navies, are some of the facts which impressed me with the importance of securing this inestimable site, by accepting it as a free gift, before the rapid growth of the city of Philadelphia absorbs it."

"The importance of this back channel has not been sufficiently estimated, as it seems to me, in any of the able discussions which have set forth the advantages of League Island as a naval station, instead of the present insignificant yard at Philadelphia, which has but one fifth of the frontage of the English navy-yard at the island of Bermuda, off our coast. Our navy-yards have not frontage enough to contain the vessels now laid up, and which belong permanently to the Navy."

"The advantages to result from dredging the back channel for wet docks, basins for lumber, and other essential purposes are also very great. League Island contains about six hundred acres, and is two and four tenths feet below high-water mark, and for a great many years has been protected by a stone wall or dyke, and has not been overflowed since that protection was established."

One great objection made to League Island is that it must be filled before a navy-yard can be built upon it. I will read what Mr. Fox says on that subject:

"To raise the island three feet above high-water mark would require about thirty-six hundred thousand cubic yards of earth. Dredging the back channel to a depth of eighteen feet in the middle, with a curved cross section to zero at the sides, would give about forty-one hundred thousand cubic yards—sufficient to bring the whole island to a level of four feet above high-water mark."

Here is a calculation, sir, upon the subject, that to place the island three feet above high-water mark will require three million six hundred thousand cubic yards of earth, and this can be supplied, and more than supplied, by the dredging that will be necessary to make the back channel what we desire for the accommodation of the iron-clads. Then the question arises: what will be the cost of this dredging and filling of the island? We have been told in communications addressed to the committee that the expenditure will be many millions. Here is the estimate made by the distinguished Assistant Secretary of the Navy:

"Some idea of the expense, practicability, usefulness, and healthiness of this plan may be derived from the operations of the War Department in the extension of the arsenal grounds in this city. There mud is being dredged from the bottom of the fresh-water swamp known as James' creek, and deposited upon the surface of the lands added to the arsenal grounds; and the expense of this operation is estimated by the efficient superintendent, Mr. Wise, at twenty-five cents per cubic yard, which would at the same rate make the cost of raising League Island $900,000. Mr. Wise would be very glad to take the whole contract, at present prices of labor, at thirty cents per cubic yard. This sum is less than has already been expended by the Navy Department during the war for the repairs and coal of the steamer Vanderbilt. It is less than Mr. Forbes has expended upon the steamer Idaho, building for the Government, and is only twenty per cent. more than some of the first-class steam-engines built since 1861."

According to this statement, to dredge the back channel, and thus to enlarge and deepen it so as to accommodate our own and the English navy, and to fill up the island and place its surface three feet above high-water mark, will cost $900,000, less than some of our vessels have cost us, less, as has been stated by the distinguished gentleman from whom I read, than it cost one of our builders to construct the Idaho, less than has been expended by the Navy Department during the war for repairs and coal of a single vessel, the Vanderbilt. And yet the country has been frightened almost by the statements of the enormous expense necessary to fit this island for a navy-yard. Nine hundred thousand dollars, say $1,000,000 if you please, to make the island three feet above high-water mark, to give us six hundred acres of land for a great navy-yard in the center almost of our Atlantic coast, to furnish us a basin with the purest fresh water sufficient to accommodate our Navy when it may be increased to the greatest possible extent, and finally to furnish us accommodations for the largest operations of any navy-yard. Why, sir, the expense of $1,000,000 is not to be regarded in this connection. The yard at Philadelphia now does not serve our purpose. We cannot bring our iron-clads to rest there. We must provide for their laying up; and where shall it be? At an expense of $1,000,000 we can provide this grand basin, if I may so express it, or back channel to accommodate the entire Navy. I ask Senators, if we went no further, if we stopped just there, if we dredged this back channel and made it of sufficient depth and width to accommodate our Navy, and should never build a navy-yard upon this island at all, should we not be justified in the expenditure of this $1,000,000?

Objection has been made—I anticipate that it will be made again—that Philadelphia is too far removed from the sea to furnish a suitable location for a great navy-yard; that our vessels cannot be brought out to meet the service that may be required of them sufficiently ready. Why, sir, it is about seventy or eighty miles from the ocean. It is on a grand river, up which our largest vessels of war have heretofore passed. There was some objection to the location of a navy-yard for the repair of vessels far up the rivers when we depended upon sailing vessels alone; but they are abandoned. Now, of course as a naval Power we must look to a steam navy; we do look to it, and the location of our navy-yard must be in view of the fact that ours will be a steam navy. A steamer finds no difficulty in going up or passing down the Delaware river. Why, sir, this argument is to prove that Philadelphia does not exist, a city that has been built up by the commerce which is brought to her and taken from her by great vessels passing up and down this river. By many the remoteness of this position from the ocean is regarded as an advantage. The yard and the vessels at anchor there are well protected from any enemy; and other Governments are abandoning their yards that are located near to the shore and within range of the improved guns of this age. It will not do any more to locate a navy-yard within four or five miles of the coast. A navy-yard thus located must be protected; it cannot protect itself. Philadelphia is already protected. We must always protect Philadelphia, and the protection necessary to that great commercial city is the protection for this navy-yard. We have no cost in providing a protection for the navy-yard. Its position gives it its protection, and its remoteness from the sea, instead of being an argument against it as a location for this great navy-yard, is an argument in its favor.

Objection has been made to this location because of the liability of the vessels to be injured by the ice in the Delaware river. I will read on that subject:

"The iron monitor steamer Dictator, the New Ironsides, the Atlanta, and the St. Louis have lain, during the whole of the last winter, moored off the extremity of a single wharf projecting from League Island into the Delaware river, and built twenty-two years ago; none of these vessels have received any injury whatever.

"The ice, in a severe winter, is occasionally inconvenient at the city of Philadelphia, but it is not so at League Island, which is situated below the city, as the current throws it along the New Jersey shore opposite the island.

"The ice of the Delaware river has never been urged as an objection to the yearly appropriations made for the Philadelphia navy-yard, nor has it prevented Philadelphia from becoming the third commercial city in the Union."

If I can turn to it I will read what Professor Baché says upon this subject of the ice. I read from the report of Professor Bache and Captain Marston:

"When ice makes in the Delaware in extremely cold winters it is deposited on the Horseshoe shoal, and, breaking up, passes in the direction of the currents to the New Jersey shore, and thence in a gentle, undulating curve to the lower end of League Island. The testimony of pilots shows that the breaking up of ice is never a serious matter on the shores of League Island. It is usually honeycombed and rotten before moving. The ice-boat is with rare exceptions of extremely cold winters, say once in forty years, able to keep the Delaware open; in ordinary winters its use is not required; and in the coldest on record in eighteen years it was able to make way through the ice on any day of the season, one of these years including the severest winter on record."

If we provide a fresh-water resting place for the iron-clads we have got to meet the difficulty of ice unless we locate the yard upon the southern coast; and I suppose that the difficulty from ice in the Delaware in the neighborhood of Philadelphia is perhaps less than would be encountered in any river furnishing a sufficient and suitable resting place for the iron-clads north of that latitude. Go to Connecticut, to Massachusetts, or to Maine, and do you expect to find fresh water free from ice, and do you expect in any of these localities to avoid the inconveniences to which I have referred? But I think the statement of Professor Baché on this subject is quite sufficient.

The advantages of this location are obvious. In the first place the yard will be near a large city, furnishing at all times to the Government a supply of skilled labor. In the second place it is as convenient and advantageous a location as can be found with a view to the necessary timber for use in a navy-yard; the supply will be as convenient and cheaply obtained as at any other point. Then the supply of coal and iron, a most important consideration indeed, will be more certainly secured at all times and more cheaply at Philadelphia I presume than at any other locality in the country.

Some objection has been made to the remoteness of the island from the city of Philadelphia and the want of accommodations for the families of the laborers at such a yard. I shall not stop to discuss that at any length. I suppose that the extension of two or three lines of street cars down Broad street and other streets to the shore will furnish sufficient convenience to all the laborers. But there is no doubt that as soon as the navy-yard is established, tenements will be erected at once. This navy-yard cannot be established advantageously to the Government in the heart or near the heart of the city of Philadelphia; no point furnishing the advantages which we must now have can be found nearer to the city of Philadelphia or perhaps to any other city than League Island; and as soon as the work commences, every Senator knows that the necessary accommodations will grow up; it will come to be the interest of men to make improvements.

I intended, Mr. President, at this time merely to indicate some of the views of the committee upon this subject, and not to discuss it elaborately. I suppose there will be objection made, as there has been elsewhere, to this bill. I favor it because I am not willing to see the only navy-yard which we have in the middle States removed from them. I should consider it a great national calamity to remove the only yard that is now found in the waters that flow through the middle States. I do not intend to discuss this matter in any sectional view; I do not suggest this with any purpose to address any sectional sentiment; but we have agreed by the establishment of arsenals over the country that the military and naval power of the country ought to be distributed into the different sections. It is a lesson taught us by the late war, and I would not consent unless the reasons were entirely controlling to the abandonment of a navy-yard at Philadelphia.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, as I have had the honor of moving a proposition which is a substitute for the bill now before the Senate, I hope you will pardon me if I go into a very brief explanation. If I have followed the Senator from Indiana, he is disposed to limit the character of the proposition before us. He presents it to us simply as a question between the existing navy-yard at Philadelphia and a new navy-yard for Philadelphia. If it could be presented in that limited way I should be very little disposed to enter into the controversy; but it strikes me that the statement of the Senator is not complete. The proposition before us involves something more. It is not merely supplying a new navy-yard to Philadelphia; that in itself would be of importance; but this proposition still goes further. While supplying a new navy-yard to Philadelphia it undertakes to supply a navy-yard on a large scale, which is to meet the great change in the naval system of our country growing out of the introduction of iron-clads; and you have the single practical question presented to you whether at this moment League Island is the best place for a navy-yard of iron-clads. There is the question. The Senator from Indiana must not divert attention from that question. The Senate, when it votes, must vote on that question. It must say yea or nay on the question whether League Island is best for these new and extraordinary purposes.

I am not at this moment disposed to go into the consideration of the merits of League Island. Many pamphlets have been written upon them, many speeches have been made upon them. I will not now add to the number. Suffice it to say, that on the evidence there is certainly grave doubt whether League Island does in a practical way supply all that is needed for the desired purposes. I certainly doubt it. Then, on the other hand, there is a proposition for a navy-yard at New London. With regard to that there are also pamphlets and speeches. I have seen that site myself, and I must say, if I may so express myself, it is even captivating. I can hardly imagine a site which is better adapted to the purposes in view. The water is ample; the supply of fresh water behind is peculiar; and all these, too, are under the guardianship, if I may say so, of fortresses, so that I believe it would be in reasonable security against any foreign approach. You cannot put aside New London on the existing evidence, it seems to me. Certainly you cannot put it aside and take League Island; but that is what the bill before you asks you to do.

Under these circumstances I have felt it my duty to bring forward what I will call an intermediate proposition. It is neither for League Island nor for New London, but it is for the creation of a commission of engineers as eminent as any in the country, having the undoubted confidence of the country, who shall make an inquiry with regard to a proper site for a navy-yard for the purposes in view. The commissioners that I have proposed, and whose names are set forth in the substitute, are Admiral Farragut, Lieutenant General Sherman, and Mr. Hilgard. Of Admiral Farragut I need say nothing; of General Sherman I need say nothing, except that he is placed in this commission on account of his eminence as an engineer. Mr. Hilgard is also placed here on account of his familiarity with our coast and his eminent scientific attainments. You all know that he is now the practical head of the Coast Survey. I doubt whether three gentlemen in the whole country could be selected who if they should unite in a report on this subject would inspire more confidence.

I propose that this commission shall select a suitable site on or adjacent to the Atlantic ocean for a naval station for the storage and repair of iron vessels and iron-clad vessels of the Navy and for other naval purposes. But I do not stop there. I do not content myself with providing a commission that shall do what I submit at this moment the Senate and the Congress are not competent to do, to determine between these two places; or to select some other place which is neither one nor the other; I do not stop with the creation of an effective commission; I go further, and provide that the Secretary of the Navy shall act at once on the report of that commission. Here are the words:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered to accept such selected site on behalf of the United States: Provided, The same shall be conveyed to the United States as a free gift, for their exclusive use and benefit, by a valid and indefeasible title. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized to take possession of and occupy said site for the purposes herein indicated, and in the preparation thereof to use such amount of money as may be necessary out of any unexpended appropriations for the Navy.

Observe the language. Under this amendment the Secretary of the Navy will be authorized to go forward at once on the report of this commission and prepare his navy-yard. Therefore, if any Senator should be disposed to say that my proposition is in its nature dilatory, I reply at once that he is mistaken; it is dilatory only so far as it does interpose the agency and judgment of a commission. That is all. It is not introduced, either with a view to delay, but it is introduced with a sincere desire to find some means of reconciling this controversy, which has so long agitated both Houses of Congress. It is time that it should be brought to a close, and I see no better way of bringing it to a close than by subjecting it to the impartial umpirage of so distinguished a tribunal as that which is described in this amendment.

Let those commissioners proceed with the inquiry, and we shall all be ready to accept their conclusion. If they sanction the receiving of League Island, then for one I shall consent. If on the other hand they prefer New London, or some third place, then again I shall consent. I shall feel that my own judgment will be essentially aided by theirs. Indeed I shall gladly, on this question, subordinate my judgment to theirs.

I ask you, then, what is the practical objection to this proposition? Is it not calculated to harmonize these two different sides? Does it not afford an easy and quiet way of bringing this controversy to a close? I have said that for one I should accept the report of any such commission. I believe the Senate would accept it; still more the country would accept it. The people who are interested in League Island, I believe, would not set themselves up against such a report; and, on the other hand, those who are interested in any other place would be equally contented.

This is all that I have to say on the case at present. Should the debate continue I may be disposed to consider more at length the comparative merits of the different places, though for one I am very anxious to avoid these details. I do not believe that the Senate is competent to consider these details to advantage. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not think it is possible that anybody can be induced to vote for this proposition except the Senator from Massachusetts, who offered it. It avoids all the questions that are at issue upon this subject. It does not propose to establish a navy-yard, and it does not authorize one to be selected. It does not authorize these men, if they choose, to remove the navy-yard from its present location in Philadelphia to League Island or to Red Bank or to any other place, or to New London; it merely says that these distinguished gentlemen, all of whom save one know nothing of nautical matters, shall be authorized to select a place for the storage and repair of iron-clads; that is all. Nothing else can be done. Of course the Senator from Massachusetts is not desirous that all the labor to be done in the navy-yards of the United States shall be done in the yards in New England. Of course he could not be influenced by any such consideration as that in offering such a proposition as this; but such would be the effect of his proposition. You would thereby virtually dispense with the present yard at Philadelphia, that only embraces thirteen acres of available land, where all your buildings are cluttered up together and liable to destruction from fire within and fire without, and where you are obliged year after year to rent wharf room for your vessels to lay, where there is no room to-day for more than two vessels to lay up on your water front. Does he want to dispense with that and have all the repairs to your wooden ships, that will be your cruisers in time of peace, done at Portsmouth, Charlestown, and New York city? Let me read it:

That Admiral David G. Farragut, Lieutenant General William T. Sherman, and Mr. J. E. Hilgard be, and they are hereby, appointed and constituted a commission to select a suitable site on or adjacent to the Atlantic coast for a naval station for the storage and repair of iron vessels and iron-clad vessels of the Navy, and for other naval purposes; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered to accept such selected site on behalf of the United States: Provided, The same shall be conveyed to the United States as a free gift, for their exclusive use and benefit, by a valid and indefeasible title. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized to take possession of and occupy said site for the purposes herein indicated, and in the preparation thereof to use such amount of money as may be necessary out of any unexpended appropriations for the Navy.

There is no limit as to the amount of land that is to be secured. These gentlemen may, if they choose, demand of one locality a large amount and of another two acres or five acres or ten acres. Then it confers upon the Secretary of the Navy unlimited power over the Treasury to expend just so much money as he chooses in order to put this navy-yard that we authorize these gentlemen to select in working order. I confess that I never heard of a bolder proposition presented to the Senate than this seems to me to be.

Mr. President, the country does not want another navy-yard. Neither the Secretary of the Navy nor the President of the United States has ever asked for one. We have navy-yards enough to-day. A simple proposition came to us from the Navy Department, asking that the present yard at Philadelphia should be enlarged; and the question was whether we should enlarge that yard by acquiring the adjacent property, taking it out of the business property of the city that is necessary for commercial uses, or whether we should move it a mile and a half off to another locality. We decided that it was best for the Government to move it to another locality; and then the question was where that locality should be, whether we should move it a mile and a half off to League Island, or further down the river to Red Bank or to Chester. But as to the propriety of removing the Philadelphia yard and having a larger establishment there cannot be a question.

We have been enlarging our yards ever since the foundation of the Government. In 1798 the Navy Department was established. An act of Congress was passed authorizing the construction of six frigates. At that time Benjamin Stoddard was the Secretary of the Navy. There was never any authority of Congress to establish the six navy-yards that we had in this country; but Mr. Stoddard, under the latitudinarian notions that prevailed in Mr. John Adams's Administration (as his enemies said) thought that the authority to construct the six frigates carried with it the power to purchase the land upon which they should be built; and therefore that Secretary of the Navy, the first one we ever had, bought a small piece of ground at different points, upon which the ships were built; and from that day to this we have been constantly enlarging these yards. Since I have been a member of this body we have made two purchases to add to the Philadelphia yard; and it is in that way that all our navy-yards have sprung up. We have never succeeded in getting a yard as an entirety except that noble one which we possess on Mare Island on the Pacific coast. Now there is an opportunity to secure a yard as an entirety, to lay it off as it ought to be, to make such a yard as is demanded by the commercial and naval interests of the country; such as is worthy of a great maritime Power.

When this subject shall be more thrown open to debate and the qualities and capacities of League Island shall be brought in question, I may have something more to say on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, the question before the Senate, whether it be regarded as the pending bill or the amendment moved by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, it seems to me is one of more importance than the Senate appear to consider it. The bill itself comes before us under rather peculiar circumstances. It seems to me a little singular that a bill so important as this should be reported to the Senate with no document connected with it from any Department, without one word from the committee reporting it; simply the naked bill. That, as it was sent to the committee, is reported back, without anything in the form of report to inform the Senate either of the necessity for the bill or of the ground on which the committee recommend its passage.

It is true, the honorable Senator from Indiana, a member of the Naval Committee, has stated with his usual clearness and force the reasons why the committee favor the bill; and the honorable chairman of the committee, not going into the general question, but speaking more directly to the amendment, has enlightened us, as he always does when he addresses the Senate upon any topic which may be under discussion. But certainly it is usual in this body, and I should be sorry to see that usage changed, when a subject of so much importance as this comes before us and we are asked to vote upon it, that we should have a report, something in an authentic and enduring form on which our action may be based. There is nothing of that kind in the present case, and I repeat that it is singular—peculiar.

The honorable Senator from Iowa, seems to think that in the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts there is nothing that can obtain the vote of any one but the Senator who offered it. Now, sir, if I mistake not, there is in the amendment, as it regards the general subject-matter, all, and indeed more than all, that there is in the original bill. What does the bill propose? The honorable Senator from Iowa says the amendment does not propose the building of a navy-yard, or indeed the doing of anything, or authorizing the Secretary to do anything. His objection to the amendment is that it amounts to nothing. Now, let us see what the bill proposes. It purports to authorize the Secretary of the Navy—

To receive and accept from the city authorities of the city of Philadelphia the title to League Island, in the Delaware river, and adjacent marsh land, including the whole of the creek known as the Back Channel, from the Schuylkill to the Delaware rivers, and all the riparian rights and privileges of said League Island, adjacent marsh, and Back Channel, together with so much of the opposite shore of the Back Channel from the League Island shore as shall in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy be ample to enable the Government to have the sole and exclusive use of said Back Channel and both shores thereof; the said island and appurtenances to be held for naval purposes by the Government of the United States.

That is all the bill proposes to do, that we shall acquire what I have read, "to be held for naval purposes" by the United States. That is about as vague and indefinite as anything can well be, and amounts to as little, my word for it, as the amendment can amount to, be that ever so little. But the amendment, in my judgment, is not at all obnoxious to the objection made to it. I call for the reading of the amendment again, that it may be seen in connection with this bill whether it be the pure nihilism which the honorable Senator from Iowa seems to suppose it is.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

That Admiral David G. Farragut, Lieutenant General W. T. Sherman, and Mr. J. E. Hilgard be, and they are hereby, appointed and constituted a commission to select a suitable site on or adjacent to the Atlantic coast for a naval station for the storage and repair of iron vessels and iron-clad vessels of the Navy, and for other naval purposes. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered to accept such selected site on behalf of the United States: Provided, The same shall be conveyed to the United States as a free gift, for their exclusive use and benefit, by a valid and indefeasible title. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized to take possession of and occupy such site for the purposes herein indicated, and in preparation thereof to use such amount of money as may be necessary out of any unexpended appropriations for the Navy.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, Mr. President, I submit—

Mr. SUMNER. Before the Senator proceeds, I will make a verbal addition to my amendment by inserting the words "and building" after the word "repair," so that it will read: "for a naval station for the storage, repair, and building of iron vessels."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. DOOLITTLE in the chair.) That modification will be made.

Mr. FOSTER. Without the modification which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts has now made to the amendment it certainly contains all that the original bill did, and much more; for all that the original bill contained, as the text shows, was that the Government should hold this Territory "for naval purposes." The amendment has that same expression, so that if there be any magic or comprehensiveness in that term "naval purposes," the amendment has all that the bill has. Besides, it had in addition prior to the present modification other conditions which the bill has not; but whether it had previously or not, surely now when the honorable Senator from Massachusetts adds the words "and building" it contains all that can be technically required, if the honorable Senator from Iowa were now about to specify what is required in order that we might have a perfect bill to acquire a navy-yard.

Mr. GRIMES. I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut if there is any requirement as to the quantity of land that shall be selected?

Mr. FOSTER. There is not.

Mr. GRIMES. And yet the Secretary of the Navy is directed, no matter how small that quantity of land may be, without regard to its magnitude, to go on and expend the money of the Treasury. In the other case there is included the whole of League Island, whatever that may be.

Mr. FOSTER. It is true that the amendment does not specify the amount of land. The Senator is right in that respect. But, sir, when we consider that the gentlemen named in the amendment are Admiral Farragut, General Sherman, and Mr. Hilgard, and that the amendment itself points out the purpose for which this site is to be selected, I do not think there is any very great danger that these gentlemen will select either too much or too little land, or select an unfit site.

Mr. SUMNER. They are to select "a suitable site"—comprehensive words, applicable at once to the locality and to the extent of the ground to be occupied.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; there is no doubt about that; but even if the language had been less well chosen when the subject is committed into the hands of three gentlemen like these it will not be in the power of the honorable Senator from Iowa, skillful as he may be in finding difficulties where he wishes to find them, to persuade the Senate that that board would not do their whole duty and do exactly what was necessary to be done to accomplish the purpose in view. There is no manner of danger that they would select a site so small that it could not be used with advantage, no danger that they would purchase so much that it would bankrupt the Treasury to pay for it. I think in regard to these gentlemen we may say what it is said the late lamented Chief Justice Marshall once said to a practitioner in the Supreme Court who commenced an argument of a cause by going back somewhat to the A B C's of the law. The learned Chief Justice, after hearing him with great patience, as was his practice, for some time, finally interrupted him and said, "Sir, from the peculiar organization of this court I think it may perhaps be presumed that the judges do know something." I think that we may presume that the three gentlemen named in this amendment do know something, and that when by an act of the Congress of the United States they are called upon and it is made their duty to select a suitable place for a navy-yard it will be safe to leave the matter to their discretion, and there will be no danger that that discretion will not be wisely exercised.

In regard, then, to the amendment, I think it is perfectly clear that it will accomplish all that it is necessary to accomplish under this bill.

But, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Indiana and the honorable Senator from Iowa object that here is really no other purpose than to change the navy-yard at Philadelphia from its present location to another location, and that is all which the Senate can now be properly called upon to consider. I do not understand that that is any question at all. Has there been any complaint in regard to the navy-yard at Philadelphia that it is not perfectly adequate for all the purposes for which a navy yard is required at that locality?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will say in answer to the Senator's question that that has been the burden of the reports of the Navy Department for four years.

Mr. GRIMES. For six years and longer.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The condition of our Navy at the commencement of this war was complaint enough.

Mr. FOSTER. The condition of our Navy at the commencement of this war was probably not chargeable to any lack of accommodation in the navy-yard at the city of Philadelphia. If that navy-yard had been ten times as great as it was I doubt whether the condition of our Navy would have been any more effective than it chanced to be when the rebellion broke out. If the Secretary of the Navy for four years or six years has been constantly complaining about the small size of the navy-yard at Philadelphia I have not happened to hear it. It is true that he has made recommendations in regard to a change of the navy-yard there to League Island, and there is something a little remarkable in the pertinacity with which the Secretary of the Navy has urged upon Congress from time to time the propriety of making League Island a naval station. It has been on the ground that we required some more accommodation than we now have for our iron-clad vessels; that for the purposes of protection and preservation we required different and additional accommodations in the way of a naval depot for our iron vessels, which, previous to the introduction of those vessels into our Navy, we had not required, but which afterward became a necessity. On that ground, as I understand, the honorable Secretary of the Navy has urged the acceptance of League Island by the Congress of the United States, because that could be made, in his judgment, a proper station for iron-clad vessels, not because the navy-yard at Philadelphia needed any particular change or enlargement, only that we required a different arrangement for our iron-clads from what we formerly had required for our wooden ships.

Here, perhaps, as well as anywhere else, I may say that I think it a little strange that after the Secretary of the Navy had appointed a commission of his own selection, under the authority of Congress, to examine this locality and he had been favored with the report of that board of officers condemning it in terms as an ineligible location, he was still as eager and as persistent in urging upon Congress the adoption of his former plan as before this report had shown how utterly unfit this place was for the purposes contemplated. The honorable Senator from Indiana, in quoting from one of the reports of the Secretary of the Navy, if I mistake not the report of December 4, 1865, quoted the Secretary as saying that this board of officers appointed by him, though they differed as it respected other points in connection with League Island, agreed in this, that League Island was a fit and proper place for an iron-clad navy-yard. It would puzzle anybody but the Secretary of the Navy to find any such agreement as that in the report of that board of officers. The honorable Senator from Indiana, astute as he is, aided by the astuteness of the honorable Senator from Iowa, will not be able to find any such statement in the report. I have the report before me and I will read the closing paragraph, from which it will be seen whether they agree to such a state of facts as the honorable Senator from Indiana quoted the Secretary of the Navy as saying was true. I read from this report, as contained in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, the majority and minority reports of the board of officers appointed under the act, approved July 15, 1862, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept the title to League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes." I read from the ninth page of that report:

"The board is aware of the importance of the advantages which League Island possesses over the harbor of New London in the immense supplies of iron and coal which can, without question, be delivered at that point at cheaper rates than at any other site examined, and also of the fact that the fresh water of the Delaware river would be very advantageous to the bottoms of iron vessels. Still, in view of the very great expense that must necessarily be incurred in filling up this island before it can be of practical use for a navy-yard, the probability that a large annual appropriation will be required for maintaining a sufficient depth of water at the island by dredging, the great cost of pile foundations for every structure required in the yard, the danger from drift-ice, and in view of the many advantages possessed by the harbor of New London over League Island, the board, after a very careful examination of all the points under consideration and mature deliberation, is of the opinion that the advantages of a more abundant supply of coal and iron at League Island, and at cheaper rates, together with the advantages of fresh water, are more than balanced by the superior advantages possessed by New London in other respects; and therefore—

"Resolved, That in the opinion of the board the public interests will not be promoted by acquiring the title to League Island for naval purposes.

"Resolved, That the harbor of New London possesses greater advantages for a navy-yard and naval depot than any other location examined by the board."

That was signed by S. H. Stringham, presiding officer; W. H. Gardner, commodore; G. J. Van Brunt, commodore; and W. P. S. Sanger, engineer. If there is anything in that which shows that the board agreed that League Island was the fit and proper place for a navy-yard for iron-clads, though they disagreed on other points, I should be glad to have gentlemen explain how they extract that fact from the report.

The Secretary of the Navy is quite authorized to make recommendations to Congress in regard to navy-yards, and it is the duty of Congress to consider those recommendations, giving them all the weight to which they are entitled; but when it turns out that the Secretary of the Navy appoints a board of most competent, intelligent officers to examine various sites, and the examination is made and a particular locality is by them condemned as unfit and ineligible, I say that the continued recommendation by a Secretary of the Navy of the same site, under those circumstances, is not entitled either to weight or to respect, especially when it is admitted that the Secretary of the Navy is not a nautical man, and has and can have no other skill and knowledge on the subject except what he derives from those around him who are skilled, intelligent, and able to form and express opinions.

Who has inspired the Secretary of the Navy with this opinion I undertake not to say. The honorable Senator from Indiana read from a pamphlet in which he quoted a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Fox. That pamphlet by his courtesy I have been enabled to look at, and I see that it purports to have been written "by a New England man." I shall be obliged to the Senator if he is willing to say if he knows who the author of that pamphlet is?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I believe I have no reliable information on that subject. I saw that it was a very satisfactory compilation of the reports and letters that bear upon this subject, and it furnishes these reports and letters and makes them of easier reference than if I was to go to the voluminous documents themselves. That is the reason why I read from it. I would not be authorized to say who was the author. I did not notice that it was written "by a New England man."

Mr. FOSTER. It only purports to be on the title page. I thought that fell under the gentleman's eye.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose that name was adopted by the writer of the document in order to give it force and weight with the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. I supposed the honorable Senator probably knew who was the author of the pamphlet he was reading from, and as it stands simply now vouched for "by a New England man" we must take it as we take other anonymous publications.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We may as well have this question correctly understood. I have read from this pamphlet quotations from official documents. If the Senator says that the quotations are not given correctly in this compilation there is force in his criticism. I have not relied upon any argument of the writer of this pamphlet. I have relied upon what the Secretary of the Navy has said, and upon what Professor Baché has said, and upon what Mr. Fox, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, has said. I do not care whether I find that in one document or another if I find truthful extracts from their reports.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President—

Mr. RAMSEY. Permit me to suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that I do not know who is the writer of the pamphlet to which the Senator from Indiana referred, but I presume it is Mr. Bolles, as I perceive that he is a gentleman who has been writing very largely on this subject.

Mr. CATTELL. I find Mr. Bolles's name at the head of a pamphlet laid on my desk. As a very large number of these publications are here, and as I find one on my table with the name of "John R. Bolles" upon it, I should not wonder if this pamphlet was written by him, although I am not positive of the fact.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be, Mr. President, that the honorable Senator from New Jersey is of opinion that Mr. Bolles wrote the pamphlet the honorable Senator from Indiana has quoted from. I do not know but that he thinks so. He of course is the best judge on that subject. It may be that the honorable Senator from Indiana thinks that that is the production of Mr. Bolles. Of course if he thinks so he will say so if he deems it proper.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What I read as entitled to some weight before the Senate was the production of the Secretary of the Navy, of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and of Professor Baché. Who compiled this document I do not know; I have heard it stated, but I do not know, and therefore I would not be authorized to connect any gentleman's name with it. It is a mere compilation so far as I have used it.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Indiana will pursue such course as he judges best in answering as to the authorship of the pamphlet, even if he does know; but as he says he does not know I of course admire his delicacy in not repeating a rumor. I have heard who the author of that pamphlet is; but I do not know, and I therefore shall not give his name. I hoped the honorable Senator from Indiana did know, and as he brought the pamphlet in and read from it I presumed he might know; but as he does not, it must stand of course as the anonymous production of a New England man.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That we may understand ourselves exactly right here, I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether any of the quotations from the official documents are incorrectly made, as I read them?

Mr. FOSTER. Not to my knowledge. I have not compared them, and have no knowledge but that they are correct, although I cannot from my own knowledge affirm that they are.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then, as I have read from the report of the Secretary of the Navy, and from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and from Professor Baché, I do not think it is important to know who compiled this pamphlet.

Mr. FOSTER. Except it should turn out that some one rather intimately connected with this project in some other form was the author of the pamphlet. Then I think it would be of some importance. In that point of view surely it would be; but not in the point of view to which the honorable Senator would confine it, namely, the accuracy of the quotations. If the quotations are accurate, and I am not disposed to question their accuracy, it makes no difference who wrote the pamphlet.

I repeat, Mr. President, that there is something strange and unaccountable in the persistency of the Secretary of the Navy in urging the selection of League Island as a naval station, in view of the evidence which was furnished him by the board of officers selected by him to make the examination, and it was by no means the only source of information that he had on that subject.

Commodore Pendergrast, an officer well known to many members of the Senate, was in command of the navy-yard at Philadelphia for several years, and while there in command of the navy-yard wrote in regard to the project of selecting League Island as a naval station for the Navy of the United States in language which I will read:

"This new project of the mayor and city councils of moving the yard to League Island is all a matter of speculation with a party here to draw four or five million dollars from the Government, out of which they would make splendid fortunes, while the United States would be a loser at every turn. If the city even buys the property and presents it to the Government the latter would still be a loser, for it would take at least four or five years to prepare the place before an attempt could be made to use it, and this, too, at an outlay of millions. Besides, the island is unfit for it, being constantly overflowed, which would render an immense expenditure necessary for filling in, wharfing, making docks, &c."

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator pardon me if I ask him whether he knows who is the author of the pamphlet from which he reads?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe I do, though I cannot say that I know it in such a sense that I should be qualified to testify to it before a court of justice. So far as my own opinion is concerned I think I do know who the author is. That, however, is not the point; for the honorable Senator has informed us that the question is as it regards the quotations read from the pamphlet and not who the man who wrote the pamphlet was. In the light of that information which the honorable Senator kindly gave me, I read also the opinion of Admiral Joseph Smith upon this same subject, which the Secretary of the Navy had the benefit of, besides the opinion of the board selected by him, and the opinion of Commodore Pendergrast. Admiral Joseph Smith, after a personal examination of League Island in 1863, said of it:

"Some of the objections to which [to League Island] are of so serious a character as to be at once discovered by the most superficial observer."

Again, the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives in 1864, reported—

"That the public interest would not be promoted by its selection, some of the objections seeming to your committee insuperable."

I thus give you the conclusion of the board of officers selected by the Secretary of the Navy himself, and so selected that no charge of prejudice or bias against League Island can properly be made as against them who reported that this island is unfit and improper for these purposes. I have also given the letter of Commodore Pendergrast, and the opinion of Admiral Joseph Smith. This last named officer, from his age and experience in the Navy, from his position as chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, is entitled to much consideration. It may be safely affirmed that when he is called upon to examine a subject of this sort he will understand it thoroughly, and he adds his high sanction to the objections which that board and Commodore Pendergrast had made to League Island. Then the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, who went personally upon the ground and made the examination for themselves, made their report condemning it altogether. And yet the honorable Senator from Indiana, and the honorable Senator from Iowa, say that the Secretary of the Navy still recommends, and has for half a dozen years recommended and urged upon Congress the selection of League Island.

Sir, in view of these facts, I would ask why he does it, what reason is there for it? Can the Senate see any such reason as should cause them to pay heed to the request? Is not the evidence overwhelmingly against League Island, giving to the recommendation of the Secretary all the weight that it should ever be entitled to? Ought we not to rely upon the reports of boards of officers who were sent there on purpose to examine the site, upon the testimony of the commander of the yard there, of the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, of the committee of the House of Representatives who went there and made a personal examination? Ought we not to take testimony of that sort as immeasurably higher than the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, which after all may have been inspired by the "New England man" who wrote that pamphlet? I do not say that it was; but I say it is possible. It is written "by a New England man," and the Secretary is from New England, a thing greatly in his favor; and the man who wrote this pamphlet manifestly thought it would give currency and strength to his opinions by placing "by a New England man" on the title page. Lest the honorable Senator from Minnesota should be misled, as he seemed to think this was one of the pamphlets which he had read in favor of New London, let me say to him that this is a pamphlet in favor of League Island, and that there may be no mistake about it, and no misunderstanding on this point, I will read the title page:

"Advantages of League Island for a naval station, dock-yard, and fresh-water basin for iron ships and other vessels-of-war, as recommended by public authorities, with all the objections heretofore officially advanced, substantially or textually reproduced and severally answered."

Now comes the astounding phrase:

"By a New England man. Published by the Board of Trade of Philadelphia. Philadelphia: Sherman & Co., Printers, 1866."

Now, Mr. President, it is quite possible that the author of that pamphlet, a New England man, inspired the Secretary of the Navy with the opinion that League Island was after all, first and last, the best place for a naval station. But is it so? And is the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy under these circumstances to weigh a feather against these contrary opinions? I think I can show by documentary evidence of the highest authority that this League Island, so far from being a desirable location for a navy-yard and naval station, is about one of the most unfit points that could be selected on our whole coast from Eastport to Cape Florida. And I have no question that it will cost more money to prepare properly League Island for a naval station and depot than to construct and complete all the works necessary for such an establishment at a fit and eligible site. That is my first objection.

My next objection to League Island is that when completed it is a most unfit and ineligible site for the purpose contemplated, the objections to it being permanent and fatal.

It is on these two propositions that I oppose this bill. But the amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts leaves League Island with all its advantages, if it has them, to be examined by the gentleman named in the amendment together with other sites along the coast, and they are to make a selection of the best site. Is there anything unfair, anything which should be excepted to in that proposition? If League Island has advantages over other points, will not Admiral Farragut, General Sherman, and Mr. Hilgard be as ready to discover and appreciate those advantages as even the honorable Senator from Indiana or the honorable Senator from Iowa or the Secretary of the Navy himself? I say there is no conflict of testimony; it is all on one side; there is not a shadow on the other. There was a suspicion of testimony on the other side, but on examination it proved to be a shadow. If, however, we go on the ground that there is a conflict of testimony, is it not perfectly safe to leave the decision to men such as are named in the amendment?

The honorable Senator from Indiana went into a calculation to show what the amount of filling was which would be requisite on that Island, and what would be its cost. I do not know whether he read this from the letter of the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Fox, or from the text of the pamphlet.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The letter.

Mr. FOSTER. The honorable Senator made it cost about nine hundred thousand dollars, or, as he said to speak in round numbers, $1,000,000, which he said was a less amount than was used in coaling and running the steamer Vanderbilt during the war, and he seems to think this is a small sum. I know that during the war we got into a habit of speaking of millions of dollars so flippantly that when we come to talk of a million now the honorable Senator from Indiana, as economical as most of us here, hardly seems to think that $900,000 is worth talking about, and therefore he spoke of $1,000,000 as being easier. It not being the ordinary way of speaking here to talk of $900,000, he speaks of $1,000,000, it being about as small a coin, if I may say so, as any currency used among us—I mean in current speech, for I do not think the current coin is quite as abundant as the currency of words. The honorable Senator, however, seems to think that it might cost $1,000,000, but I think I can show from evidence that that is an estimate greatly below what will be the actual cost of putting that island in any proper condition to be made a naval station and navy-yard.

There is, in the first place, quite a difference in the evidence with regard to the amount of territory which makes up this island. I think in this pamphlet "by a New England man" it is claimed that there are some six hundred acres in this island. Other pamphlets, and among them one which I believe the honorable Senator from New Jersey thinks was written by Mr. Bolles, makes out only some three hundred acres in the island. There is a difference of nearly one half as regards the area of the island; and I suppose from the character of the soil there and the location it is impossible to get nearer than within one or two hundred acres of the actual area. It depends entirely upon the condition of the tide and the state of freshets in the Delaware whether there are six hundred acres or three hundred, and, indeed, whether there is an island there at all if the wall gives way. While the wall is kept up, the wall being a number of feet higher than the surface of the ground, it keeps the river off, and makes, if you please to call it so, an island; but if the wall should give way in freshets or in very high tides there would be no island there. That island would be almost certain to escape under those circumstances, be submerged, go into solution, get washed down to Cape May. It might be heard of there, but not above. If, however, we take it to be six hundred acres, and if we consider the fact that that island of six hundred acres is from three to four feet below low-water mark, the idea of filling it up so that it can be useful for any purpose as a naval depot or naval station and navy-yard, with an expenditure of anything like $1,000,000, is perfectly preposterous. In the letter which the gentleman read the estimate was two feet and a fraction of filling. It is greatly below the amount of filling that the engineers report. They report all the way from three to ten feet; some say it would take from three to four feet; others say from nine to ten feet. And when the additional question of drainage comes into view it is perfectly apparent that nine or ten feet of filling on that island will be as little as will make it available for any useful purposes.

Mr. GRIMES. With the consent of the Senator from Connecticut, I wish to move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. I give way to allow the motion to be made.

Mr. GRIMES. I submit the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess till seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

PUBLIC PARK.

Mr. BROWN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 549) for the establishment and maintenance of a public park in the District of Columbia, to report it with an amendment and recommend its passage. I am also instructed by the same committee to submit a communication from N. Michler, major of engineers, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in relation to a suitable site for a public park and presidential Mansion, and to ask that it be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I was going to observe that if the committee are reporting plans for architecture, probably it would be best for us to have an extra number printed, if the general plan of the park is set forth.

Mr. BROWN. No; it is rather a description than otherwise of the ground. We do not think it is necessary to have any additional numbers printed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The cost will be very little.

Mr. BROWN. I will inquire about it during the evening.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 597) to amend an act entitled "An act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead and actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SURETIES OF JAMES T. POLLOCK.

Mr. LANE. With the permission of the Senator who has the floor on the bill regularly before the Senate, I should like to call up a private bill in which I feel some interest, and ask that it be passed. It is House bill No. 840.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can entertain the motion only by unanimous consent, there being another subject before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 840) for the relief of the sureties of James T. Pollock, late receiver at Crawfordsville, Indiana. It proposes to release Robert C. Gregory, Henry Crawford, William Galey, and the other sureties of James T. Pollock, late receiver at Crawfordsville, Indiana, by bond to the United States, dated January 30, 1837, from their liability arising from any defalcation, omission, or misconduct on his part as receiver, and it directs the proper officer of the Treasury Department to dismiss any and all suits that may have been instituted and are now pending in favor of the United States against them growing out of his default.

Mr. LANE. I will explain the bill in one moment. There is a full report from the House of Representatives, made by Mr. DELANO, explaining all the facts. I am personally acquainted with all the facts stated in the memorial and in the report. It happened in my own town thirty years ago. Colonel Pollock was appointed receiver of public moneys at Crawfordsville. He gave twenty securities upon his bond. Seventeen out of the twenty securities have since died. It was found out, some twenty-five years ago, that he was a defaulter to the General Government. The Secretary of the Treasury, under the then existing law, issued a Treasury warrant and took possession of property two or three times as much in amount as would have paid the whole debt; but the marshal of the State, in whose hands the warrant was, instead of levying upon the property, delayed until it was squandered, and there was a defalcation unsettled and unpaid. Some twenty-two years ago Congress passed an act releasing the marshal and his securities from all liability. Now it is sought to recover the amount from the original securities of the receiver after a delay of thirty years and after the death of all the securities but three. We think the Government lost any right to resort to these securities by their laches, by their delay, and from the fact that they did not appropriate the security which they had in their hands. The bill passed the Committee of Claims in the House unanimously; it passed the House unanimously; it passed the Committee on Claims of this body; and I am satisfied that it is perfectly just from beginning to end.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish to make one remark before this bill passes. I do not intend to oppose its passage. I do not assent to the bill upon the ground upon which it was mainly pressed in the House and before the Committee on Claims. That ground was that the United States had another security arising from the default of the marshal; and, inasmuch as they discharged the marshal from the payment of the debt, these sureties ought to stand, either in law or in equity, discharged; at all events, that arising from that fact, there was some obligation upon the United States to discharge the original debtor or his sureties. Now, sir, I think that is bad law and bad reason; that there is no ground whatever for the passage of this bill arising from the fact which I have mentioned. I think that if the United States have two securities for the enforcement of a pecuniary obligation, their failure to pursue one of their remedies can have no effect whatever upon their right to pursue the other; and that the original debtor and his sureties, being utter strangers to the case as between the United States and her own officer, cannot plead any action or any lenity exercised by the Government in regard to its own officer in discharge of their obligation; that it will stand unaffected altogether, either in law or in reason, by any indulgence which the United States may show in pressing against a defaulting officer the obligation which he may have incurred.

I vote for this claim upon a sort of equitable principle of limitation. I think that where the Government has stood by for a period of thirty years, and has not enforced or attempted to enforce its demand against the original debtors for the period of thirty years, and when most of the sureties are dead or have removed from the place or have become insolvent, it would be most unreasonable, perhaps inequitable and unjust, to enforce the whole of the original demand against the few sureties who remain alive; and not only to enforce the original demand, but the accumulations of interest, making the debt three times what it was originally. In a case of this kind, after the lapse of a quarter of a century, when the Government has not pursued its remedy, when it has not enforced its demands, when the circumstances of the parties have changed, and when the obligation of the few sureties who are still responsible is increased fifteen or twenty fold by the delay of the Government, it would be inequitable and improper for the Government to enforce the demand.

I speak on this subject because I apprehend that in other cases hereafter before the Committee on Claims and before the Senate the passage of this bill may be quoted as a precedent, and it may be insisted that inasmuch as we have discharged these sureties, and one of the grounds for such discharge alleged before us and pressed upon our attention was that we had discharged the officer, therefore in other cases we are to pass bills upon similar principles. I vote for the bill on the other ground I have stated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEMPEY REECE.

Mr. RAMSEY. There is a small resolution reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, for the relief of Dempsey Reece, of Indiana, which I hope the Senate will take up and pass at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks are unable to find the resolution referred to.

Mr. RAMSEY. While they are searching for it I will endeavor to explain it as well as I can. This man, Dempsey Reece, is a citizen of Indiana, an illiterate man, which is an extraordinary thing in that State, who bid for carrying the mail on one of the mail routes of that State. He bid $600 for it; but he had to employ some one else to make up his bid and that person made a mistake and made it read $300. The next lowest bid was $800, which itself is evidence that $300 was a mistake. The Post Office Department are satisfied that it was a mistake. He has been carrying this mail for several years at a great sacrifice, and the proposition now is to release him. The Post Office Department recommend that the route be relet, and after being relet that he be released. It is very evidently a mistake. There is among the papers, I believe, the affidavit of the party who drew up the bid for him stating that it was a mistake. He has been carrying the mails for several years. He is an honest man, and very poor, and has been endeavoring to carry out his contract at a great sacrifice.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution (S. R. No. 160) for the relief of Dempsey Reece, of Indiana, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the Postmaster General to receive proposals for carrying the United States mail on route No. 12068, between Newcastle and Mechanicsburg, in the State of Indiana; and when such bid shall be accepted, Dempsey Reece, the present contractor, is to be discharged from any further performance of his contract.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUFUS C. SPALDING.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 843.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 843) for the relief of Rufus C. Spalding, paymaster in the United States Navy. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury, in adjusting the accounts of Rufus C. Spalding, as paymaster in the Navy of the United States, to cause him to be credited with the sum of $14,563 78, being the sum of money stolen from the Government safe at the naval station at Mound City, Illinois, on the night of the 21st of December, 1865, which sum stands charged to his account as United States paymaster at that naval station; but nothing in this bill is to be so construed as to exempt from official or personal liability, or upon his bond, Assistant Paymaster J. S. Harvey.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like the honorable Senator from Ohio to give some explanation of that bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I can explain that.

Mr. WADE. Very well; the Senator from Iowa will explain it better and quicker than I can.

Mr. GRIMES. There were two paymasters belonging to the Navy of the United States stationed at Mound City. The Government furnished them a safe, which was used by them in common. The senior paymaster was the gentleman for whose relief this bill is now proposed to be passed. Each of them had a key to the safe. The other paymaster, whose name is mentioned in the last clause and for whom there is an express clause of exclusion that this bill shall not apply to his benefit, put his key in a drawer, where it was discovered by somebody, who took it out, and used it, entered the safe and took out the money that had been intrusted by the United States Government to Spalding. The loss was not occasioned, as was found by the Navy Department, by a board of inquiry of naval officers appointed to investigate it, and as was found by both the Naval Committees, through any neglect or laches of any description on the part of Spalding, but on account of the carelessness of another person who had a duplicate key of the safe. The money that was taken happened to be the money intrusted to Spalding. He had no place to keep it except this safe which had been furnished by the Government.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

LEAGUE ISLAND.

Mr. GRIMES. I now call for the regular order of the evening.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will allow us to act upon one or two little bills.

Mr. GRIMES. I think we had better go on with the regular business.

Mr. SUMNER. One or two little bills that the Senator will not be against.

Mr. GRIMES. I am against anything now except League Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. RAMSEY in the chair.) The bill (H. R. No. 452) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, is now before the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. It happened to be my fortune or misfortune to be on the floor at the time the recess was taken. According to usage, therefore, I suppose I am entitled to the floor when this subject is resumed. I do not know what the purpose of the Senate is in regard to sitting this evening. I notice there is not a quorum present. If it is merely to sit for a few moments, I do not care about occupying their time at all.

Mr. GRIMES. I presume there will be a quorum here shortly.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is understood that the debate is to be continued, of course I am willing to take my share of occupying the time.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest that the Senate proceed to the consideration of some of the bills on the Calendar, to which there is no objection, for a few minutes at least, until there shall be a quorum. I hope the Senator from Iowa will relax a little of his rigor.

Mr. GRIMES. I am satisfied there will be a quorum here in a few minutes, and the debate may as well go on upon this question.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest that we proceed with some of the business on the Calendar until a quorum appears.

Mr. GRIMES. It is not near as necessary that there should be a quorum here to hear gentlemen make speeches as it is that there should be a quorum here to transact business. The Constitution and the laws and our rules require that there shall be a quorum here when we transact business; but there is no such requirement as that in regard to speech-making.

Mr. SUMNER. I can understand why the Senator from Iowa should be glad there is not a quorum present to listen to the Senator from Connecticut, because the Senator from Iowa, I know, is against the Senator from Connecticut on this question, and he naturally would like to have a thin Senate, so as not to be impressed by the arguments of the Senator.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust the Senator will not attribute the motives which govern him to his associates in the Senate. I have given no evidence of being influenced by any such consideration as that, I trust.

Mr. FOSTER. I am perfectly willing to go on as far as I am concerned if it is understood that other gentlemen take their chances, too. I am not so ambitious of speaking as to speak to a body that cannot do business unless other gentlemen also take the same fate. If they do, I am content to go on and speak, or attempt to give my ideas, to a body that cannot transact business, cannot pass a vote. I do not wish to do it, however, unless other gentlemen are also prepared to do it and will go on with the debate. I do not think it is fair to one side of the question that the debate should go on on that side without a quorum and then adjourn, and go on with the debate in the presence of a quorum on the other side of the question.

Mr. GRIMES. So far as I have anything to say, I would just as lief say it when there are a few here as at any other time, because I do not flatter myself that any argument or any eloquence I may be able to use is going to influence a great many votes on this or any other subject; and I think I can speak for other gentlemen who entertain the same views that I do on the subject now under consideration. They are just as willing to discuss it now as at any other time. This bill has got to be considered, and we have got to get through the discussion, and I trust pass it, and I hope it will be passed before we adjourn to-night. If we do not, it will not be because I am willing to adjourn before it is passed.

Mr. FOSTER. If it be understood that the honorable Senator from Iowa and the honorable Senator from New Jersey, who, I understand, are intending to give us the benefit of their views at some length, are to go on this evening, I am perfectly content to go on now and make my remarks as briefly as possible, in order that the Senate may be more pleasantly entertained by hearing them than me.

Mr. GRIMES. It is not understood that the Senator from Iowa is going to make remarks of any length that I know of. I am not conscious of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course I did not mean to pledge the Senator, but I had supposed he was intending to address the Senate.

Mr. CATTELL. I desire to say to the gentleman from Connecticut that the Senator from New Jersey—I suppose he alludes to me—does not intend to speak at very great length on this question; but having lived all his life in the immediate vicinity of this island he is disposed to offer a very few observations, and will very cheerfully follow the gentleman, and at some time during the evening will say what he has to say on the subject.

Mr. DIXON. I suppose we might as well test the question whether there is a quorum present, and for that purpose I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CRESWELL. If there is no quorum present I suppose I can call up a bill that will occupy but a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is not debatable. The Senator from Connecticut moves an adjournment.

Mr. GRIMES. This sort of business I am not going to submit to. I suppose the design is to put this bill off so that it cannot be passed at this session.

Mr. CRESWELL. That is not my motive.

Mr. GRIMES. I know that.

Mr. DIXON. I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. GRIMES. Then I insist on the business of the evening.

Mr. CRESWELL. With the consent of the Senate I desire to call up a bill that will occupy but a moment.

Mr. GRIMES. I object.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor. Does he give way to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FOSTER. I do.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate postpone the consideration of the pending and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 457, for the relief of Hiram Paulding, rear admiral in the United States Navy.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Was that bill reported from the Naval Committee?

Mr. GRIMES. No.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What committee is it from?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Committee on Foreign Relations.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 10, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Dixon, Foster, Fowler, Howard, McDougall, Poland, Ramsey, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Creswell, Davis, Fessenden, Grimes, Hendricks, Howe, Lane, Morrill, Patterson, Willey, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Sausbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Williams, and Yates—28.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote discloses the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, and stated that he was unable to decide.

Mr. HOWE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; withdraw the call.

Mr. HOWE. I withdraw the call.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Fowler, Grimes, Howe, Morrill, Ramsey, and Trumbull—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Fessenden, Howard, Lane, McDougall, Patterson, Poland, Sumner, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Morgan, Kirkwood, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Sausbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Williams, and Yates—28.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to adjourn, but the vote still discloses the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg to remark that that cannot be done unless there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the motion cannot be entertained in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TRUMBULL. A motion having intervened, I trust the Senate will now adjourn. It seems to me to be useless to be sitting here in this way. I move to adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the motion I made is in order. It is not legislative business.

Mr. GRIMES. What is it?

Mr. HENDRICKS. To take a recess for fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No motion except a motion to send for absent members or a motion to adjourn is in order, and a motion to adjourn has been made and is in order.

Mr. McDUGALL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 7, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Dixon, Foster, Fowler, Morrill, Sumner, and Trumbull—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Catell, Chandler, Creswell, Fessenden, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Lane, McDougall, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Williams, and Yates—27.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to adjourn, but the vote still discloses the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CRESWELL. By way of varying the proceedings, I move to take up House joint resolution No. 251.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No business can be done in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CRESWELL. Now I suppose a motion to adjourn at least is in order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Perhaps we have tried as far as we can to get a quorum to go on with business. I do not want to sit here just for the fun of the thing; and I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 13, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WISCONSIN RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. McINDOE presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Green Bay and Lake Pepin railway; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

IMPORTATION OF IRON.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for reference to the Committee of Ways and Means:

Resolved, That it is incompatible with the policy of the protective system of the United States and detrimental to the industrial interests of the country to admit under any pretext whatever, free of duty, foreign iron, whether manufactured for railroad purposes or otherwise.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. I object.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to state that I was necessarily absent yesterday when the vote was taken upon the passage of the bill in relation to Louisiana. At the proper time I shall ask permission to record my vote in the negative on that bill.

LAWS OF MONTANA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a copy of the laws of Montana Territory; which were referred to the Committee on the Territories.

REVENUE IN MARYLAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of the 2d instant, relative to the amount of revenue collections in Baltimore city and the several counties of Maryland, during the years 1864 and 1865, from all sources, except duties on imports; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a telegram from Denver, Colorado; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The telegram is as follows:

DENVER, COLORADO, February 12, 1867.

To the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A large and enthusiastic mass meeting this evening unanimously adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas it has been falsely reported to Congress by interested parties that a majority of the people of Colorado are opposed to State organization; and whereas the same unscrupulous parties have misrepresented our Territory and people in many other ways by depreciating our wealth and prosperity and falsifying our actual population; now, therefore, we, the Union men of Arapahoe county, and many from other portions of the Territory, in mass convention assembled, do adopt the following:

Resolved, That to our certain knowledge the people of Colorado are very largely in favor of State organization.

Resolved, That we most respectfully and urgently urge upon Congress the passage of the bill for our admission as a State, recently vetoed by the President.

Resolved, That we pledge the faith of the great national Union party we represent for the prompt acceptance of its conditions and the ratification of the constitutional amendment proposed by Congress.

Resolved, That the president of this meeting be directed to telegraph these resolutions to the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, with a request to lay them before the respective Houses of Congress.

AMOS STECK, President.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

An act (H. R. No. 840) for the relief of the sureties of James T. Pollock, late receiver at Crawfordsville, Indiana; and

An act (H. R. No. 848) for the relief of Rufus C. Spalding, paymaster in the United States Navy.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The House resumed as the next business in order the consideration of House bill No. 1143, to provide a more efficient government for the States lately in insurrection, upon which Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, was entitled to the floor.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. Mr. Speaker, theories are all very well. We may have plans in relation to reconstruction as with reference to other matters of public interest, but if not put into practical operation and made efficient in results they accomplish little else than to attract attention for the moment and remove us from practical results. For some time past I have rather adopted the idea that it would be as well, if not better, to allow this Congress to expire before acting directly and positively upon the question of reconstruction; that as the Fortieth Congress was elected expressly upon the issue made up between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, and as the people had decided the issue so positively and undeniably in favor of the policy and purposes of Congress, and in addition had expressed their wish and determination that their representatives should control the question of the restoration of the States lately in rebellion so far as it legitimately belonged to them; to adopt such measures in addition to what had already been presented and indorsed by them as would in their judgment secure the grand result sought to be accomplished, that it might be as well to leave the work to be finished by the next Congress.

I had come to this conclusion for the following among other reasons: I desired to take from any one, friend or foe, loyal or disloyal, any complaint that we had acted hastily and not given a sufficient time for reflection and the second sober thought to take possession of the people lately in rebellion, and still very far from being our friends. I have been anxious, when the period for more positive action should arrive and more radical measures were demanded by every consideration of humanity, justice, and patriotism, and a regard for the vows we have all made to the Great Ruler to be just, and do justice, as I have for a long time been convinced, and as now the whole country must be convinced, that that period, if not already upon us, is near at hand, that there should not be a voice raised against such action or measures, but that with united action we might go forward, beginning at the bottom, and plant governments in those States upon the sure foundations of unconditional loyalty, and place them where they will ever remain, in the faithful hands of the friends of the Government and impartial liberty. I have not been opposed, so to speak, to action at any time since we began this session, but have of the two thought it advisable that we should take the course I have suggested.

But, sir, upon a careful survey of the whole field of operations, in view of my responsibilities to my country, knowing, too, as I do full well the one great and inspiring idea or thought that lifts the loyal people I represent above all time-serving considerations and attaches them with an unyielding purpose to their country, for whose interests and salvation they have yielded up their choicest idols and surrendered their very household gods, making their hearthstones a desolation and filling their happy homes with wailing and woe; in view, too, of the sad condition of affairs all over the South, and especially in some portions of it, disorder, proscription social and political, ruin, treason and death reigning supreme, with little or no love for the Government that has crushed the rebellion, it is true, but which deals gently and generously with its enemies; with a fixed determination on the part of those lately in rebellion and still in power to the exclusion of the loyal, to make their rebellion honorable before the country and the world, and forever fix upon the faithful friends of the Government the badge of dishonor and treason; with the sure and certain prospect of such a result being brought about if the present state of things be allowed to continue, which in the end must result in the overthrow of our Government and institutions, or such oppressions and misrule be wiped out; in view, lastly, of the solemn vows the nation has taken upon itself in the hour of its sorest trial, when its fate was trembling in the even balance, that it would be faithful to the sacred trusts of humanity, liberty, and justice committed to its hands, that every faithful heart should be a sovereign and no wicked hand should fall heavily and cruelly upon one of its true and faithful ones for want of its protection and care; and as we expect to perpetuate our national life by the practice of such principles and the faithful execution of such sacred trusts, I have come to the conclusion that we cannot act too soon in endeavoring to correct the evils that are upon us and ward off the dangers that threaten us.

Congress at its last session, after a long and faithful deliberation, presented a plan and enacted a portion of it into a law, which is known as the constitutional amendment. This amendment had merits in it, although it was not all that very many desired and believed to be absolutely necessary upon which to secure a safe and complete restoration of the lately rebellious States. Many believed that the people South were misrepresented, that they were not still rebellious, that they were anxious to return to a full and perfect allegiance to the Government they had tried to destroy; that while they accepted the situation they were heartily sorry for their treason, and would adapt themselves gladly to the new condition of things and forever abandon their rebellious spirit even, and adhere more strongly than ever to their country. In the hope that this might be so, that such an anxious hope might be realized, the constitutional amendment was adopted by Congress, if not as a complete plan of reconstruction, nevertheless as part of a plan, which, with the faithful cooperation of the people lately in rebellion, it was hoped might go very far toward if not fully accomplish the work we all so much desired.

Congress desired to put these people upon their professions of repentance and good faith toward the Government, holding at the same time, as we always must until the work is complete, the power in our own hands in behalf of the loyal people of the country; so that by no error or mistaken notion, resulting from fair promises or often repeated professions of loyalty, the chance shall pass from our hands to command the whole situation and secure the legitimate and just fruits of the great struggle through which our country has passed, to wit, a perfect Union and Government based upon right, with protection to all, with a full guarantee of the rights of manhood to all and a perpetual guarantee in favor of loyalty and the loyal as against treason and the disloyal. The people ratified our course, and in doing so declared their confidence in the Congress and its purposes as against any other policy proposed, and especially the one adopted by the executive government, and which to-day is the source of nearly all our evils and the confusion and crimes that desolate the South, as it places and keeps in power the sworn enemies of the Republic to the exclusion of its unyielding friends.

Congress never surrendered the right to do anything else that might be necessary to be done as time advanced, neither did the people at the last election decide that nothing else should be done. While they indorsed the amendment, they decided more than anything else that the work of reconstruction belonged to themselves through their representatives, and demanded that the work begun in the amendment presented should be finished by them, so far as it properly belonged to them, in such a way and at such a time as the peculiar advantages they had to determine when and how to act should justify. It is too late to argue the power of Congress in this work of reconstruction. All branches of the Government have acknowledged that the work is peculiarly a legislative work or the work of the people. The executive branch especially has so acknowledged it, and the people in their decisions upon the great questions in controversy so understand it.

Secretary Seward telegraphs Provisional Governor Sharkey, of Mississippi, under date of July 24, 1865, as follows:

"The government of the State will be provisional until the civil government is reorganized with the approval of Congress."

As late as September 12, 1865, the same high functionary telegraphs Provisional Governor Marvin, of Florida:

"It must, however, be distinctly understood that the restoration to which your proclamation refers will be subject to the decision of Congress."

As to both the right and duty the authorities are ample and abundant, aside from this express acknowledgment on the part of the executive government. Wheaton, 115, says:

"The right of self-preservation is not only a right with respect to other States, but a duty with respect to its own members, and the most solemn and important one which a State owes to them."

"This right of self-preservation necessarily involves all other incidental rights as a means to give effect to the principal end."

And again, Vattel declares:

"Every nation is obliged to perform the duty of self-preservation."

"Since, then, a nation is obliged to preserve itself, it has a right to everything necessary for its preservation. For the law of nature gives us a right to everything without which we could not fulfill our obligations; otherwise it would oblige us to impossibilities, or rather would contradict itself in prescribing a duty and prohibiting at the same time the only means of fulfilling it."

"By an evident consequence from what has been said, a nation ought carefully to avoid, as much as possible, whatever may cause its destruction, or that of the State, which is the same thing."

"A nation or State has a right to everything that can secure it from such a threatening danger, and to keep at a distance whatever is capable of causing its ruin; and that from the very same reasons that establish its rights to the things necessary to its preservation."

Will any one ask any higher authority than these, or can any higher be obtained? Certainly not.

Who is silly enough to demand that we must adhere strictly to the constitutional amendment as a finality without reference to existing facts, when it may be that a development of feeling and action in the South would justify a complete change of policy on the part of the Government, or as it does at least some modifications of or additions to it? There is but one safe way to reconstruct the rebel States and restore them to their former relations to the Government of the United States, and that is upon the principles of unconditional loyalty, and placing the power in those States in the hands of loyal men and those who are safe to intrust with power. No other policy will succeed. We may travel all around the point and try one scheme and then another, but in the end, if we do not let the question pass from our hands as we should not, we shall have to begin at the foundation, and upon the rock as we are doing in the bills now before us, and then the superstructure will be reared to stand forever.

I see in the discussions of the propositions now before us and the disposition of the House to act upon and perfect them, a desire to do something to correct the evils that are upon us, and to adopt a policy in the end, if not immediately, to give ample and complete protection to our friends throughout all the rebellious States, and intrust the governments to their hands, and place them under their control. While I am willing to go for the bill presented by the Committee on Reconstruction, proposing to govern these States for the time being by the military for the purposes of protection until we can erect suitable governments there based upon loyalty and loyal suffrage, still I greatly prefer that this measure may come in as part of a more comprehensive measure, which shall first provide for the establishment of such loyal civil governments, and then give all the military power necessary to more firmly establish them, and secure the more faithful execution of the great trusts to be executed by them. This would be more in accord with the genius of our Government.

That it is the first great duty, however, of the Government, and has been since the war closed, to protect its friends in the South, both white and black, all will admit; and to do this, if necessary, I would cover every acre of it with armed men until the earth quaked beneath their tread. But what hinders, at the same time the speedy erection of governments in all those States upon a basis of loyalty and loyal suffrage, with the express declaration on the part of the Government that such governments are to be maintained by its influence and power? In such case but little military would be needed; perhaps there is enough already in those States to give the protection needed; if not it could be very easily supplied. Those governments, thus established, and the loyal people feeling, as they do not now, that they had a faithful Government behind them to protect and defend, if need be, would very soon provide for themselves sufficient force to secure their own defense and execute the laws both State and national. The very fact that the Government had settled its policy and it was to be maintained and the law executed and loyalty sustained, would of itself be as strong as armies and navies and achieve more than anything else in the great struggle between right and wrong, loyalty and disloyalty.

When the war closed, those who are now in power in the South and responsible for the rebellion were ready to submit to any terms that the conqueror might choose to propose. They knew as they now know they justly deserved entire and complete exclusion from place and power, and that they were not so excluded surprised them more than it did us. This willingness to submit to our terms was on account of the fact that they were conquered, and that the Government was able to enforce its authority, together with the fact of the consciousness of their guilt and the enormity of their crimes. That we have failed thus far to treat the loyal men of the South as our friends and given the disloyal the control, or allowed the Executive to set up and perpetuate governments without any authority of law and in the interests of those who brought on the war and all its attendant disasters, is the reason why to-day a spirit of defiance and rebellion rules more or less everywhere throughout the South; and to be loyal to the Government, and especially to have been loyal and sustained and fought for it during the war, is the most certain badge of dishonor and lasting disgrace. We have got to come back again to the point in this great struggle which we abandoned and exercise our power and arouse in the minds of the people South who thus demean themselves, the awful memories of the past, and teach them that "treason must be made odious and traitors punished," or at least displaced from power, and that no arm raised against us shall prosper.

It is idle to talk of a final restoration upon the pretended governments now in those States. They are without any authority of law, and we never can legalize or recognize them as legitimate and republican so long as they are in the hands and under the control of our enemies and the enemies of the loyal people of the South. Such has been and is to-day the fact, and certainly they will and can never be any better. Those in power in them will never relinquish that power themselves; this is not in the nature of things, and the time never will come when they will consent even to share their power with those who have been opposed to them during the war and steadfast friends of the country during its hour of trial. I have no time now to find fault with the policy of the President in trying to give governments to those States; the people have expressed their opinion upon that policy and repudiated it; it is fraught with evil, and will work a complete social and political proscription of all the loyal men there, a result which can be justified in no way possible, and to be prevented even at the exercise of the whole power of the Government. These pretended governments being null and void, having no legal existence, having been set up where there were no governments, without any authority of law, it becomes the duty of Congress to gather together the loyal elements in those States and proceed through the coöperation of the loyal people therein to establish such governments as we can recognize, loyal in character, republican in form, and in spirit, so that they may be suitable channels through which we can coöperate, in complete harmony with the loyal sentiment of the country and of the Constitution.

The President himself declared by proclamation and otherwise, and acted, too, upon the fact so declared, that the rebellion overthrew all loyal governments in the disloyal States; that they were but a mass of ruins when the war closed, which is agreed to by all; and that a necessity existed for the interference of the Government to aid in the establishment of governments therein. So said Congress, and so we say to-day. That necessity exists still. To meet this necessity the executive government proceeded without law, without the consent of the people or their representatives, who alone have the right to initiate and put forth a policy of restoration in such cases as the one now upon our hands, to set up governments. It appointed provisional governors, which all agree was without any authority, and did other acts, however well intended, without law, none of which has ever been legalized or recognized by Congress, and cannot be. Had these governments proved a success and given ample and complete protection to all the loyal people South, and were they calculated to build up a social and political society there based upon unconditional loyalty, and secure the prosperity and happiness of all the people alike, there might be some apology for the effort made and some grounds for ratifying what has been done, as our great object would thus have been accomplished; but no such results appear, neither is there any hope of their ever being realized.

The delay thus long in giving such governments as are necessary to those States but makes our obligations the stronger to act, and act promptly, in this work of restoration. It is claimed that the theory thus advanced of erecting governments in these States, if carried out, will inevitably lead to the conclusion that the States lately in rebellion are out of the Union, or dead States, a doctrine hostile to our professions during the war, and all the policy of the party now in power. It does not follow at all that these States, as such, are, or ever were, out of the Union because we propose to establish governments where they have been destroyed. The President decided that their governments were destroyed, and attempted to and did set up governments therein through the coöperation of the people, but of the disloyal portion of the people, which is the rock upon which he split, and upon which we and the country have taken issue with him; but he did not so act upon the policy that these States were out of the Union—not at all; neither do we.

We all agree that the governments in the rebellious States were disloyal through and through during the war; all their agents sworn to support another government, so called; and that all loyal organizations existing before the war were destroyed. There was, then, no loyal organizations through which the United States could coöperate; and by treason and crimes against the Constitution and the country the people having forfeited all rights under that Constitution—first and foremost among which is the right of representation—the people against whom they have offended, and whose Government ours is, alone have the power to restore them to their forfeited rights; and they can do it in their own time and way. In doing this great work coöperation should be had with the loyal people in those States, and perhaps such as were never voluntarily disloyal, but forced to act against their country, and with such alone. It is not only our right to proceed to this work, but it is our duty, and we cannot avoid it. Mr. Lincoln said on one occasion, in substance, that it mattered not, so far as the question of duty was concerned, whether these States were out of the Union or not, all would agree that their functions were suspended by the treason of their people and the destruction of their governments; the duty being upon us (the Congress) to provide governments for them, or aid the loyal people in restoring governments to those States. The condition of those States is a serious disability, which the people brought upon themselves by their own crimes and treason against the country; and that disability must be removed by and through the operation of law, and can be accomplished in no other way.

Rights may be forfeited by organized communities that derive their powers from constitutions and laws, when their governments are overthrown by their treason and rebellion against such constitution and laws; but it does not follow that the States thus fall outside of the Union, as in the case before us, by no means. They may render themselves unfit and ineligible to the exercise of municipal or local authority, but they can in no case escape from under the Constitution and control of the United States, or the loyal people of the country, as in our case, who by their patriotism and devotion prevented their rebellion from terminating in a successful revolution, and the consequent overthrow of the Government. Taxation follows this right to control and govern. It is a power conferred by the Constitution, which rules supreme over all our people; and while the functions of these States are suspended and the disability of their people remains upon them and not removed, in consequence of their having forfeited their rights under the Constitution by treason and crime, still taxation goes with the Constitution and our power to control and govern. So during the war. Our right to tax was not diminished by the fact that we were not able to do so, by reason of the power of the rebellion at times and in places; but all the time this right given us by the Constitution was as supreme over all the country as the Constitution itself.

How silly the argument, then, that because representation is not and has not been allowed the States lately in rebellion before their disability has been removed and they are restored by law to their forfeited rights, therefore their people should not be taxed. The Constitution of the United States was made by the people and not by the States as such, as its preamble declares, and hence it operates primarily upon the people, and all are bound by it and at all times under its control. Whether in rebellion or not, loyal or disloyal, all alike are subject to its control and must submit to its authority.

It seems, then, that the President and Congress start out upon the same premises, admitting the same facts, and acting upon the same necessity, to wit, that all governments were overthrown in the South by the rebellion, and that a necessity existed for the establishment of governments in their stead. He proceeded without law and placed the States so disabled in the hands of our enemies and the enemies of the loyal men South who had stood by us and the Government during the long dark night of the war, which policy is fast eating out the last vestige of loyalty in those States and forever shutting out the last hope of social and political equality to those faithful ones who never faltered in their faith and support of our cause during all the years of trial and blood through which we have at last triumphantly passed. We, on the other hand, in behalf of the people we represent, and who saved the nation's life, declare that all this policy is wrong; its execution, as we see in the case before us, although not designed to be, is the crying evil of the hour, the greatest crime against humanity, loyalty, and justice of the age, and should be at once removed.

Neither can it be said that the action of the President thus far has given these people any additional rights. The placing of the rebels in power in those States without authority of law, and their exercise of power under the pretended governments thus set up, gives them no right that they did not have before under the Constitution, and so far as our duty is concerned they stand before us precisely as they did when the war closed, subject to our control. The question of reconstruction is precisely the same and our duty the same as then in regard to those States lately in rebellion.

It matters not either by whom such a policy was inaugurated, or by whom it may have been forced upon the loyalty of the South; the question with us is, what is our duty or the duty of the hour? Great trusts are committed to our hands; to us is intrusted the keeping of great interests, such as take hold on the nation's life; such, too, as a consequence that reach, in their tender relations to such life, to the hearth-stone of every family in the land, and to the heart of every patriotic and devoted child of the Republic. These questions, then, are practical. It is not what we think, but what shall be done. Action is demanded, positive action, such as will command the respect and obedience of all. The sovereign power of our great people should be brought into requisition to do what and all that the case demands and the Constitution will allow, to relieve the distresses of our people and establish our institutions and Government upon a loyal and an enduring basis. To accomplish all this they have commissioned us to act for them. That all this may be accomplished, certainly they have made sacrifices enough already, but are willing still to make more if needs be to secure this grand result. Until, however, we reap some fruits of the battles they have fought and the victories they have won, until we have asserted the powers they have given us, and exercised the authority they have clothed us with to secure the great ends of justice, the responsibility will rest with us and not with them.

I have said that the policy of discarding, now that the war is over, the Union men of the South, and shutting them out of place and control, is a great evil and the greatest crime of the age. I believe it. I know it is contended that there are not loyal Union men enough South to form and sustain governments in the States in question. This cannot be so, and is not so. When the war broke out and during the war many of the Union men were compelled to flee from the States in rebellion to the North for life and protection; others were forced into the rebel service, and very many joined the Federal armies. When the war closed the most of those who had been loyal were ready to return, and many did return, but did not find in the end that protection and favor to which they were entitled and which they had reason to expect at the hands of their Government, for which they struggled or to which they had been loyal. Had a different condition of things existed they would all have returned to their homes and their property and friends, and would still, could they be assured that they were to be preferred to traitors, and placed in power and position where they could protect themselves and be protected. The facts show that in every State there are an abundance of loyal men, who have been loyal, and who would gladly coöperate with the Government had they protection and power; and so in all the rebellious States there are thousands of men who have never given way to treason, and as many more of the masses of the people who were forced into the war against their will who would coöperate with them gladly under the control of the United States in forming governments that would be loyal and remain loyal.

I would place the power first in the hands of the unconditionally loyal, give them the control of the governments and the shaping of their policy, as Mr. Lincoln did in Tennessee, through and with the approbation of now President Johnson, allow all without distinction to participate in the framing of such governments who had been friends of the Government and loyal. Very soon all the better class who were forced into the rebellion would be absorbed by the policy of those who were invested with power and control, the whole system being based upon and supported by loyal suffrage, and thus treason would be made odious, loyalty honored, and the Republic and our liberties made secure. The leaders would then be cast out and placed upon their good behavior, and if ever it became safe, after we had secured all proper guarantees for the future security of the nation, and those States as thus restored had adopted all the amendments to the Constitution that have been or may be proposed for our safety, the disability of even these leaders of the rebellion might then be removed as provided by law. But what are our obligations with reference to this work? I have said in the light of the Constitution the work was ours and we were bound to perform it. It is ours to initiate and carry out the work to a completion, and we have no right to neglect or dodge it. It then belongs to the Executive to execute the law, and if he fail to do his duty the responsibility is not upon us, but upon him. If anything more be needed to stir us to duty, we find it in the actual condition of the people South, and especially those who have every claim upon our protection and favor that any people can have upon their Government.

That the spirit of the rebellion still lives and now thrives in the South no sane man can deny; that the determination exists to make their rebellion honorable and the loyalty of the South a lasting disgrace and a permanent badge of dishonor is equally true and cannot be denied. The leaders of the rebellion, being in power in all of the ten States unreconstructed, still defy the authority of the United States to a great extent, and deny the power of the loyal millions of the country, who have saved our nation's life against their treason and rebellion, to prescribe terms of settlement of this great controversy, and deny also that they have lost any rights they had before the war or committed any treason against the Government. We have offered to the country a constitutional amendment calculated to give us some security for the future, and asking through it but very little of what we had the right to demand and what a large portion of our people think should be required at the hands of the people and States South before they are fully restored to their former relations to the Government of the United States. The States where the people have not been corrupted by the curse and virus of slavery, and one or two where this evil has long existed, States that stood nobly by our Government when it was on trial before the world in our recent struggle with treason and rebellion, one after another, as they have opportunity, wheel into line and seal their devotion to our Union and liberty by ratifying this amendment; while one after another of the ten States lately in rebellion and unreconstructed, through their pretended governments in the hands of traitors, have all rejected with defiance this same amendment, giving scarcely a voice in its favor.

But we are told that the Executive has now evinced through his friends a disposition to change his policy and place it more in accord with the constitutional amendment, and that should be adopted. He, as the Executive, has no right to have a policy as against the people or their representatives to the extent to force it upon the country.

This proposition was presented in the Senate by the honorable Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. Dixon,] and is said to be such as the southern States will indorse. While there are some good features in this measure, embracing portions of the amendment presented by Congress and ratified by the people, the vital parts of it are discarded and care taken to leave the power now possessed by the late leading rebels in their own hands. The very announcement of this new scheme is a confession of weakness, which is encouraging to the loyal people of the country; but, like the other "policy," which has been repudiated by them and whose nakedness is now so completely exposed, it is only a movement the result of which would be to hold the power where it is now lodged by the pretended governments in the South, and rob the loyal men from any or very much control in them. It would thwart the will of the people, and secure a settlement of this great controversy upon other than the policy of justice and universal liberty, which the representatives of the people feel bound to demand and secure. Executives may recommend, the late leading rebels seeking to hold power that they have rendered themselves unfit to possess may indorse, and together they may go all around the main question and attempt to avoid and set aside the voice of the people who saved the Government and whose representatives we are; it is of no use, for here is the altar upon which the great offering must be laid; and here, in the name of the great people of the land, by virtue of their power, and in obedience to their will, must remain the citadel of their hope, for in this high place of the nation alone can they declare their will and execute their sovereign purpose. To force or attempt to force, by any means, any other "policy" upon the country than the people demand and approve as it comes from those especially delegated by them under the Constitution, is no less than an attempt to usurp their power, and will fail, as it already has, upon and crush those who persist in so doing.

There is no hope of ever restoring these States upon the principles of loyalty with the leaders of the rebellion in power; neither will they ever consent to make their rebellion dishonorable and lift to place and favor the loyal people of those States while they are masters of the situation and command the whole field of operations. Every gale that comes from the South is freighted with the pitiful cry of distress and help that breaks forth from the true, faithful, and trusty friends of the Government, who are fleeing still before treason or bowing with broken spirits and hearts under the heavy load of sorrow which our failure thus far to protect and care for them lays upon them. Every sighing breeze tells the sad tale of expiring life that is passing away without the care we owe it; and to have been a defender of the nation's life is a crime and treason against the State and fits one only to be an outcast and makes life not worth possessing.

It has been my privilege during quite a large part of the great conflict through which we have passed to hold a seat upon this floor, and when not here to have an important part in the no less important work of rallying the people at home, and thus aiding to strengthen the arm of the Government to crush the rebellion, and in all this work no consideration has had a greater influence upon me than the duty we owed the loyal men of the South whose cry was continually coming over to us pleading for help.

And so it was with all our people. The war was fought not only for the Government and its perpetuity, but as a means to this end, for the protection of loyalty and loyal men everywhere. And now, when the war is over, and our Government and their Government is triumphant by the joint efforts of the loyal men North and South, it is a crime against justice and right to leave the loyal people of the South at the mercy of our common enemy, when we have the undisputed power to protect them and while it is our duty to protect them. No duty can be plainer. All admit that it is upon us and that it ought to be performed. Some insist that order will come out of the chaos that now reigns if the present governments are allowed to remain, but for such a conclusion there is no good reason in the facts that now appear or have existed for the last two years, neither is there any hope that things will improve under the present rule and power that now reigns supreme. Where is there any chance for the Union men South who mean to stand by their integrity and not waver in their loyalty? In what State lately in rebellion are they even respected as much as others, much less allowed to hold any position or have a voice in controlling public affairs?

There may be localities which were more thoroughly scourged by war, and where the military have continually given evidence of a power that was able and would protect the loyal, that a different state of feeling to some extent exists or manifests itself; but the fact is undeniable, that in no locality throughout the whole South where the rebel element ruled during the war, and where the Government has taken away its restraint and left the people to do and conduct as they choose, but that the Union element is completely ignored so far as position in society is concerned, and the policy fixed and unchangeable to discard and wipe it out entirely. Is there an American citizen that will acquiesce in such a state of things? Who will fold his arms in his quiet and ease and because this fate is not his own have no pity for those who are thus treated, and will not raise his voice and arm if necessary to relieve their distresses and lift them up to the level of loyal citizenship and the recognition to which they are entitled.

The same spirit of persecution that during the war hunted down Union men in the South followed them to the mountains, caves, and solitary places, left their dead bodies hanging upon the trees in the woods or by the wayside as a warning to their friends that they would share a like fate, still lives, and as the power of the Government is removed shows itself from time to time in just such degree as the condition of affairs will justify. Rewards are offered for the heads of some, and others are more openly shot down by the wayside. The facts as they appear, connected with the riots at Memphis and New Orleans, clearly show the spirit of those who are now in power in the lately disloyal States, while they are but expressions of the ruling feeling all over the South if once allowed to exercise and develop itself. The following letter from the chief justice of Louisiana will justify me in all I have said upon this subject:

CITY OF JEFFERSON, LOUISIANA, January 7, 1867.

SIR: In compliance with your desire, I here state my knowledge and opinion of the loyalty of the people of Louisiana to the Government of the United States, and what would be the condition of those holding Union sentiments in the event that all local control should be permanently in the hands of those lately in arms against the General Government.

From conversations with the secessionists, I know that they hope that an issue will arise from some cause, either between the President and Congress, or between the United States and some foreign Power, which will precipitate a war, and through this hoped-for war they believe they will rid themselves of a people and Government which are odious to them.

Most of the persons with whom I have conversed would to-day join in any movement to rid themselves of the Government of the United States, provided there was a fair prospect of success.

The most of the people (I mean the rebels) of Louisiana honestly believe that in the late struggle they were only contending for the right of self-government; that the war carried on against them by the United States was to destroy that right; that it was an iniquitous war on the part of the Government; that it was waged with inhumanity and brutality by the Government and the people of the North, and that by both the people of the North and the Government they have been robbed and plundered of their rights and property.

With such impressions on their minds they can entertain no loyalty to the Government of the United States nor friendly feelings for the people of the North.

There is many an honest man who engaged in the late rebellion believing that he was right in so doing, but being now overpowered would submit to the decision of the sword were it not for the fact that most of their military leaders, some of whom are very bad men and murderers, now have control, and excite these well-meaning men, and if the United States military forces were to-day removed from Louisiana, and if there was no fear of interference by the United States, these base men, their military leaders—among the most conspicuous of whom is Richard Taylor, who has murdered many citizens of this State—would arouse the well-meaning citizens to violence and blood, and no Union man, whether white or black, would be safe in his person or his property.

So complete are the influence and control of such men as Richard Taylor and Mayor Monroe, who caused the assassination of so many citizens in New Orleans on the 30th of July, 1866, that the assassin's dagger is restrained at the present time only by United States bayonets, and I cannot believe that the Government will leave the Unionists and freedmen of the State in the hands of assassins.

The spirit of secession is as strong and defiant as it ever was, because the hope has been revived that it can succeed in maintaining power in each of the southern States, and that when a favorable occasion presents it can disrupt the Federal Government. It rests with Congress to adopt such measures as will destroy that hope and finally eradicate that spirit.

If the Government and the northern people intend that Louisiana shall be a part of the United States the power and influence of those who inaugurated and controlled the rebellion must be broken, a Union sentiment fostered, and personal security and absolute freedom of speech and of the press firmly established.

Respectfully, your obedient servant.

W. B. HYMAN.

Hon. THOMAS D. ELIOT, Member of Congress, Washington, District of Columbia.

All this is fully corroborated by our agents in those States. Generals Schofield in Virginia, Sickles in South Carolina, Sheridan in Louisiana, and Thomas in the West, all testify to one and the same thing in relation to the spirit of the ruling class in their departments. They all declare that there is no hope for the friends of the Union if left to the present systems of government for protection.

That lawlessness and crime will exist in those States to a great degree for a time no one will deny, but after making due and liberal allowance for all this, the evidence is overwhelming, filling every newspaper, is the burden of every letter, the complaint of every swelling heart that finds a refuge in flight and reaches us or a place of safety; it is the conclusion of every investigation we have had, the essence of the testimony of every impartial witness we have summoned, that the same spirit inspires and controls the dangerous men of the South to a great extent that did during the war, and left to themselves and their own control loyalty will find no protection nor realize any of its hopes. It is perhaps in the very nature of things that it should be so, but this is no excuse for neglect or delay on our part when the remedy is so simple and plain. Let the nation assert its power, and let the edict go forth that loyalty shall be the rule and treason the exception. This policy firmly settled and the work is half done. Governments can follow, as proposed by the measures before the House, placing the power in the hands of the loyal, supported by loyal manhood suffrage, disfranchising the leaders of the rebellion as unfit at least for a time to unite in shaping their destinies, and you have laid the foundations of institutions that will stand the test of time, and growing stronger and stronger with age, because justice and truth are the foundation-stones upon which they rest, they will stand forever.

Unless such be the result we shall lose nearly all the fruits of the great conflict through which we have passed triumphantly, and the sacrifices of blood and treasure to secure such a result will have been made in vain. Whatever may have been the objects and purposes of the war on the part of the Government at first, they bind no one at its close, in settling up the controversy, to abandon the great results that God wrought out by the struggle, and for the security of which He will hold all of us responsible. The whole world is moving onward to an advanced position, and for our nation, which seems to be the pioneer in the grand march of national progress, to falter and prove false to its vows and attempt to turn back the great revolution, would be to render itself unworthy of leading the nations onward to the grand realization of a more perfect national life. I am one of those who through all our recent struggle believed that the great God, having for our people a higher and a nobler destiny, preserved us, that by reaping the fruits of that struggle, and applying them to a more perfect system of government, where justice, liberty, and equality should reign, we might give evidences of a higher development of national life, and thus lead the world on to a still greater advance.

During all that struggle who does not remember the dark clouds and deep seas that shut out the light and almost buried our hopes, when feeling along in the darkness we were led by a way we knew not, always, however, making some sure and certain progress toward the grand result. He who was the support of our fathers in the days of old and defended their heads in the hour of battle because their cause was just, was with us through all our recent struggle, directing and guiding to such results as would fit us, if we were true, to be the instruments in His hand in accomplishing the ends designed. His footprints were seen all over the field of strife, and as the nation from time to time made its vows and promised to be just and do justice, the cloud lifted, the storm passed, and at last the full sun appeared in all its splendor. Who dare now deny the obligations we are under to stand firmly and nobly by our plighted vows and give efficacy and power to the nation's voice?

Too many of us seem to forget that "the battle is not to the strong and the race to the swift," but, influenced by the passions and prejudices born of old political notions and theories, stand up in our own sufficiency and power and try to force against the age and its advancing spirit those old notions and theories, which were too often perversions of right, justice, and liberty, in the main, having no authority in our great Bill of Rights or the Constitution itself.

The gentlemen upon the other side of this Chamber, who represent the so-called Democratic party of the country, for that party and in its behalf exhibit a zeal worthy of a much better cause in their advocacy and support of those old notions and theories, and in their opposition to every measure of progress and advancement. They struggle as with the tenacity of life against the swelling tide of progress that presses them, apparently never for a moment reflecting that behind and above all the struggle a divine purpose pushes on the rolling current, and will surely sweep away all who oppose its resistless tide. They cling to the dead, loathsome, stinking carcasses that the great revolution has and is leaving behind us as the blasted wrecks of the wicked, oppressive forms and systems of the past, and fail to catch the new spirit and life of the present and see in them the new creations of the future. We are now giving life and power to the true spirit of our Constitution and the liberties handed down to us by the fathers of the Revolution, who by day and by night, in the storm and in the sunshine, during all the eventful struggles of that Revolution, were inspired by the broadest liberty, the most unselfish patriotism, and a sense of the equal rights of all men, and equal and exact justice for all before the law. No other policy can live and thrive hereafter in this land of liberty, neither can the Republic long survive the overthrow and destruction of these certain and sure elements of national life. Why, then, struggle longer against the great God for mastery?

It is not a question longer of physical force, but of the supremacy of ideas and thoughts, tempered and fashioned by a true spirit and made noble and sublime by their exalted and divine character. It is in fact the same struggle that has been upon us ever since our Government was established, which for a time took the shape of strife upon the field of battle, but which again assumes its wonted field of operations to control the minds, consciences, and hearts of the people. In fact, it is the continuation of the world's great struggle between right and wrong, justice and injustice, which has always been going on, and which is now especially intensified in our own country. Let us briefly rehearse its history generally and as it relates to us.

Who that has read the history of the world's great conflicts, and carefully studied their nature, tendencies, and results, as affecting human character and human destiny, and the existence and perfection of human society and government, but can see the hand of the great God in them all defending the weak, for with the weak is very often the right in great moral conflicts. Men have gone forth to battle with their fellows, nations have been upheaved with the throes of great civil commotions until the earth has quaked and the skies been covered with the darkness of battle, but no physical causes produced the struggle. Antecedent to all this, thought has grappled with thought, purpose clashed with purpose, ideas battled with ideas, mastery being claimed for each side, until, as in our case, physical force came in as a last resort to settle the question at issue between the contending ideas and thoughts.

Always has this been the case, and it is impossible to be otherwise in such great moral and political conflicts. It has been very difficult at times in the heat and storm of the struggle to see the bearings of the conflict, it is true; but after the storm had passed and the elements had settled down into their new relations and combinations, we see that some great truth has been developed, some fetter upon humanity has been broken, and it may be a whole race or a nation born into a new life with a higher and nobler destiny than before. God, in the person of his Son, has given the world a guarantee that the great truths of His gospel shall triumph in the world, and woe to the nation or the people who thrust themselves against His omnipotent decree. Onward and still onward has the great thought of the universal brotherhood of man, a common immortality to all, an equal chance in the race of life to secure the highest hope of a common Christianity, all of which is the central, all-controlling idea of this gospel, been making its way, elevating by degrees, but surely, the thoughts of the people, producing here and there startling revelations and hastening the world on to still higher hopes and a more illustrious advance.

The struggle, though silent, is majestic and grand. It is the working of the great thought of Omnipotence in the minds and hearts of men, stirring them to the oftentimes wonderful developments of progress that astonish the world. While great struggles of physical force have wrought out grand results as they have given ascendancy to grander ideas and thoughts, still all the great achievements in the history of mankind have not been the results of such conflicts, but not unfrequently they have come to pass in the ordinary progress of events, the results of intellectual and moral forces. Prior to the Revolution the same struggle filled the colonies with apprehension and at the same time determination.

The great thought of civil and religious liberty that filled the hearts and swelled the bosoms of those early voyagers in the Mayflower lived and burned in the hearts of our ancestors, and strengthened them to demand in the name of that eternal justice that inspired them with holy ardor for the defense of the right, those things which of right belonged to them, and to wrench from tyranny's grasp their land and its liberty.

The young Republic in all the vigor and exuberance of its new and happy life, with bright prospect moved on in its orbit among the nations to reap the rich harvests of its more mature and illustrious days. How soon it found that it had only entered upon the threshold of its trials, that at best it had only started into life, and with the very start, evil, avarice, ambition, aristocracy, and a spirit of despotism were all struggling for the mastery over its better, nobler, and holier purposes and aims. How soon it found that the great central inspiring thought of a common humanity and equal justice to all, which thought by day and by night during all the weary and bloody years of trial that ended in our liberties, lifted up the sinking hearts of our people and made them strong amid disaster even, as they thought of the eternal justice of Him who had ever listened to the cry of his oppressed people, and to whom they had made their solemn vows. The same struggle that had existed for nearly eighteen hundred years between truth and falsehood, between liberty and oppression, still survived, and began to fill the young Republic with discord, contention, and strife. The shock of battle had been displaced by the close contact between antagonistic ideas and opposing thoughts. And still the war goes on. Parties rise and fall as the victory turns upon one side or the other.

And so on through all the long and tedious war of conflicting ideas and antagonisms we have passed, the right steadily gaining strength, until that great moral and political struggle came in 1860, which resulted in the ascendancy, in part at least, of the better idea, the heaven-born idea, that man is a man, entitled to his liberty and to rank with his fellow in a common brotherhood, and share at the same bar on earth, as in eternity the same, and an equal dispensation of mercy and justice. As in all time past oppression and crime, beaten before the bar of public opinion, has been loth to yield to the judgment rendered without a struggle, so in this case they flew to arms, bid defiance to the conquerors of the field of peaceful conflict, covered over the land with armed men, and under the plea and pretense of injury received, waged a cruel, unrelenting, and barbarous warfare against the nation's life and the defenders of civil and religious liberty.

The heaving, surging sea of angry, bloody strife has become still as the wave of battle has subsided, but down in its mighty depths the current rolls on and on, and still the war of antagonisms and conflicting ideas continues. God, my friends, has not abandoned the field yet, and will not leave it until every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that he is God forever more. His eternal justice is deaf to all appeals that come short of being inspired by the Divine precept embodied in the "golden rule," and it is useless to presume upon His forbearance and mercy while we regard iniquity in our hearts and practice it toward those for whom He has overruled this great conflict and directed it to a happy issue.

If, then, in the light of history, our own experience, and the present, these things be so, why contend longer with inevitable destiny? We shall surely be worsted, for no arm raised against the right shall long prosper.

The same struggle will go on. Constitutions may throw up barriers against it, laws may declare that peace shall reign through all the land, resolutions of great conventions may denounce agitation in advance, and parties, President, Congress, and people, may anathematize the man or set of men who may dare to break the constitutional silence, it matters not. No outward applications will cure the disease. The practice must be radical—I mean in no offensive sense—there must enter into the whole circulation, purifying the source and fountain head, and then all the streams will be sweet and pure.

When this nation ascends to the high position within its reach, fulfills the vows it has taken upon itself before the great Ruler when its fate was trembling in the even balance, and with uplifted hand swore to be just and do justice as well as love mercy, then will the light of a purer and a happier life shine upon its way, in which no obstacles shall arise to check its grand and sublime career. I say, again, we must be just; without exact justice to all after such a struggle as we have passed through, with such vows as we have made, and such sacrifices and costly offerings as we have brought to the altar and seen consumed, there will be no lasting peace, for it is not according to the ways of the Almighty so to deal with his people. Such is the struggle and such our relations to it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, let me say that we have no right longer to delay the work which we have begun, which is clearly before us, and which it is our duty to perform. By the vows the nation made in the day of its extremity, when the tide of battle rolled heavily upon us, that we would not fail to be just; by the battle-fields all over the South, over which have run rivers of blood, and are scattered the wasting and unknown forms of the nation's heroes who perished for its life; by the thousands of new-made graves that bellow the whole South, sad mementoes of loved ones fallen in our defense and to secure what we now ask; by the tears and sorrows of widowhood and orphanage the land over, produced by the crimes of the very persons we propose to displace from power; by the wailings and woes of the whole nation during more than four years of dreadful war for the express purpose of crushing out rebellion that the Government might not only live, but that it might protect its friends and reward its loyal defenders; finally, by the sacrifices, toils, sufferings, blood, and death of over three hundred thousand noble sons of the Republic, who went down beneath the great conflict on the field of strife, at home, in the hospital, on land and sea, starved in prison-pens, and tortured by poison, I demand that this work be pressed on as now begun, until all the legitimate and just fruits of the great struggle and decisive victories we have won be appropriated to the proper use and benefit of all the people of the land, and especially those who amid more than ordinary trials have proven their devotion to the Union and liberty.

Sir, within the shadow of this Capitol lie the wasting forms of many thousands of those who have given themselves for the salvation of our Government and our liberties; and standing by the very side of these sacred relics, who dare refuse to move forward to lay hold of the high duties that press upon us, and press upon us now? Whatever others may do, and however false they may prove to the occasion upon which we have fallen and the great duty of the hour, let us move forward, strong in the right, seeking and doing justice to all as we shall see the light, "though the earth shall quake and tremble beneath our feet and the heavens o'er us fall."

Mr. BOUTWELL obtained the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will do so.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of making the pending bill more acceptable in its phraseology to other gentlemen, I desire to submit several amendments; and in order to offer them I withdraw the motion to recommit. For the sake of convenience I will offer my amendment in the form of a substitute, embracing the several changes which I propose to make. I therefore move as a substitute what I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That said late so-called confederate States shall be divided into military districts and made subject to the military authority of the United States as hereinafter prescribed, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district; North Carolina and South Carolina the second district; Georgia, Alabama, and Florida the third district; Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district; and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That five officers of the Army, each of whom shall be of the rank of major general or brigadier general, be, and they are hereby, detailed to the command of the several districts by this act created and established; and the General of the Army is hereby authorized and required to designate said officers and assign them severally to their respective commands. The General of the Army is hereby required, under the direction of the President, to detail a sufficient military force to enable each officer so assigned to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, anything in the constitution and laws of any of the so-called confederate States to the contrary notwithstanding; and all legislative or judicial proceedings or processes to prevent or control the proceedings of said military tribunals, and all interference by said pretended State governments with the exercise of military authority under this act, shall be void and of no effect.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That courts and judicial officers of the United States shall not issue writs of habeas corpus in behalf of persons in military custody, except in cases in which the person is held to answer only for a crime or crimes exclusively within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States within said military districts and indictable therein, or unless some commissioned officer on duty in the district wherein the person is detained shall indorse upon said petition a statement certifying, upon honor, that he has knowledge, or information, as to the cause and circumstances of the alleged detention, and that he believes the same to be wrongful; and further, that he believes that the indorsed position is preferred in good faith, and in furtherance of justice, and not to hinder or delay the punishment of crime. All persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That no sentence of any military commission or tribunal heretofore authorized affecting the life or liberty of any person shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district, and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, for the information of members I will indicate the changes embraced in the substitute just read. In the first place, I have in the third line inserted before the words "so-called" the word "late," and before "States" the word "confederate;" so that the phrase will read, "said late so-called confederate States." This change I have made to meet the views of some gentlemen who thought that the language of the bill as it stood might imply what was not intended.

I have struck out the second section and inserted another allotting five officers to the command of the several districts, instead of simply authorizing the General of the Army to make the allotment, to which some gentlemen objected.

In the third section I have inserted before the words "civil tribunals" the word "local." I do not think this of any importance, but other gentlemen do.

Then I have adopted one of the suggestions of the gentleman from Ohio, which seemed to be well taken, and inserted in the fourth section, after the words "military custody," these words:

Except in cases in which the person is held to answer only for a crime or crimes exclusively within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States within said military districts and indictable therein.

Mr. Speaker, having indicated my amendments, I renew the motion to recommit.

Mr. SCHENCK. If I have correctly understood the effect of the gentleman's substitute for the second section, it proposes a distinct exercise by Congress of the military power to detail an officer. Undoubtedly Congress may direct others to detail officers; but this proposes that Congress shall give the order. I would like to hear that section again read.

The Clerk read the second section of the substitute of Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I trust the gentleman will strike out that portion of the section which proposes that Congress shall detail officers. The language of the section is that five officers "are hereby detailed," and then it authorizes and requires the General of the Army to designate those officers. By the provisions of the section the act of detailing the officers is one thing and the act of designating them another. Now, if we can command the President, or some other officer, to designate officers for duty, we can also command him to detail them for duty. I undertake to say that such a thing as Congress detailing officers is unprecedented. We might as well attempt to post a picket by act of Congress or drill a regiment by act of Congress.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will allow me, I put it in that shape to satisfy several gentlemen, who thought it the best way to obviate their objections. I found on examination that we did it often during the war, detailing them by rank, though not by name. I hold Congress has the right to send them anywhere it chooses. But it seems in trying to accommodate everybody I find myself in the condition of John Thompson's hat in the anecdote of Dr. Franklin. I withdraw the amendment to the second section, and ask that the section shall stand as it was originally reported.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The bill was reported by the Committee on Reconstruction, and under the rule, as I understand, the gentleman cannot make any modification of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can modify his own substitute.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania another question.

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. SCHENCK. This bill stands now on a motion to recommit, which of course precludes all further amendment. The gentleman has renewed the motion to recommit, which was withdrawn for the purpose of making the amendment we have heard, and as I understand he intends to follow that motion by a demand for the previous question, I ask him whether we are to have any vote on any other than the amendments before the vote on the third reading? Will he not allow us, before calling the previous question, and I put the inquiry specifically, to have a vote on the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] last night?

Mr. STEVENS. All I can say is that after full examination the committee think the bill cannot be made to suit them better and the country than it is; and the last one they would favor is the amendment of the gentleman from Maine. It will be for the House to say whether it is good enough as it is. If they want to amend it they will refuse to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I desire merely to ask what will be the effect of different votes on the original amendments? I understand the gentleman from Ohio desires to get before the House for a vote of the House the amendment moved by the gentleman from Maine, which is to make the constitutional amendment the basis of restoration together with suffrage. I desire to know how that can be reached by a vote of the House? If the previous question be voted down, then do the amendments come in?

The SPEAKER. They would not.

Mr. RAYMOND. Would voting down the previous question and the motion to recommit allow us to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would.

The Chair will state, as the question is proposed to him, that the pendency of the motion to recommit, if the previous question be seconded, brings the House to vote first on the motion to recommit, and then on the various amendments, and next on the third reading of the bill. The previous question does not exhaust itself till the third reading of the bill.

Mr. RAYMOND. Then to vote down the previous question will substantially open the bill for amendment.

The SPEAKER. It will open the bill only for debate. The gentleman can arrive at his object if the majority of the House desire to amend the bill, after seconding the previous question, to go through with it until the third reading of the bill, and then reconsider that, when the bill will be open for amendment, for the previous question cannot be reconsidered when partially executed.

Mr. BLAINE. When that is done, cannot the motion to recommit be again interposed?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to reconsider be carried the Chair would recognize that as an indication the House desired to amend the bill, and would give the floor to some gentleman who had an amendment to offer.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the previous question is seconded would not the vote be taken first on the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then if it is voted down we could reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The previous question could not be reconsidered until it was entirely executed.

Mr. BINGHAM. So I understand.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am aware that no measure can be more unpalatable to the American people than one which provides for a military government, and there is no position in which I can myself be placed in the performance of a public duty more disagreeable than that of an advocate of military rule. I shall, however, make no apology for proceeding to the discussion of the measure before the House by the aid of common-place and inartificial processes of examination and reasoning. My purpose, in the first place, is to examine this bill in connection with the amendments that are now pending, moved by the chairman of the committee on the part of the House, for the purpose of relieving, if possibly I may, the force of some objections which have been made on this side of the House to the passage of this bill. I then purpose to consider the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] and the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] for the purpose of showing how those amendments are inconsistent with the vote of the House taken yesterday in reference to a bill for the reconstruction of Louisiana, and that they are also vitally and dangerously inconsistent with any measure for the permanent restoration of the rebel States to their position and influence as loyal members of the Government. I then purpose, in conclusion, to present certain general views bearing upon the question of military authority in the ten rebellious States, showing that in a large degree the necessity for the present condition of things has arisen from the policy of the President, a policy for which we are in no proper degree responsible, but which in its effect compels us, as the Representatives of the people and as the law-making power in the Government, bound to protect all persons within the jurisdiction of the Union in their rights of person, property, and liberty, to resort to measures which otherwise we could neither approve nor contemplate.

It has been objected that the committee did not propose, in connection with this bill, a measure or measures for the restoration of civil authority in the ten States recently in rebellion. That is true, and it may have been a mistake on the part of the committee. If so, it is due in some degree, as far as I am concerned, to an error of opinion as to what this House was prepared to do. I refer now to the vote of this House on the passage of the bill for the reorganization of Louisiana.

It will be very well remembered that on former occasions during the existence of this Congress any proposition contemplating universal manhood suffrage was not only unanimously opposed on the other side, but failed to receive the united or even the general support of this side of the House. If therefore naturally came to be believed in the committee that if we should report a measure which provided for universal manhood suffrage, either in one of these States or in the ten States, we should fail to combine the entire support of the loyal party in its favor. I have now to say that it is one of the most noteworthy facts in the history of this great contest that the bill providing for civil government in Louisiana, which passed this House yesterday, was discussed to some extent on this side, and for two consecutive hours without interruption on the other side, and was not, I believe, opposed by any gentleman upon the ground that it provided for universal manhood suffrage in the State of Louisiana. Only one gentleman on the other side adverted incidentally, as far as I heard, to the fact that there was such a provision in the bill.

Mr. FINCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. FINCK. One of my objections to the bill was that it proposed to disfranchise the white people of Louisiana and confer suffrage on the colored people. I made that point distinctly.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I referred to the gentleman, [Mr. FINCK,] and I believe I did not misinterpret the force of his observations. It was a passing incidental objection, instead of being in the forefront of the reasons why the bill for the reconstruction of Louisiana should not be adopted by the House. I have therefore to say for myself that I was in error as to what this House, representing the country, was prepared to do; and without submitting to the interruption which is indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HISE,] I have to say further that I congratulate the House and the country, and give notice to the gentleman from Kentucky, and to all those of the border States who sympathize with him in opinion, that the time manifestly has passed when there can be any longer a question or a struggle as to whether the colored people of this country are to participate, as other men participate, in the government of the country.

Speaking generally of the bill under consideration, it has two advantages which I think of primary, nay, I may say of vital importance, to the future welfare of the country. One is that it contains a distinct declaration for all political purposes that the governments which have been set up in the ten States recently in rebellion are mere pretenses, pretended governments, having no vital or binding force upon the people of the respective States in which they have been set up, and being in no sense entitled to the recognition of the country.

The declaration is of importance to the future of the country considered with reference to its effect upon these governments, but it is of more importance considered with reference to the possible action of the Supreme Court of the United States. If it be true, as has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM,] that on former occasions, and especially upon the reenactment of the Freedmen's Bureau bill, Congress did virtually admit that those ten States were States in the Union, then the reasons for the passage of this bill are vastly increased in force. If Congress, being the political department of the Government, entitled under the Constitution to decide what government in any State is the legal government, has heretofore used language which can be properly interpreted to support these pretended State governments at the South, then it is of vital necessity that that policy should be reversed and another declaration made. If it should happen, as possibly it may, that the Supreme Court of the United States should declare that those ten States are States in the Union, entitled to all the rights and privileges of States, and should base that declaration upon any act of Congress, then those States are restored as far as the judiciary can restore them, and nothing remains for Congress and for the people but to accept that conclusion, or else to enter into an undesirable and dangerous controversy with the chief judicial tribunal of the land.

In the preamble of this bill these words are found: "Whereas the pretended State governments of the late so-called confederate States," &c., thus declaring that these governments are merely pretended State governments. While this preamble will not in itself, as matter of law, bind the legal tribunals of the country, the text of the bill is connected with the proposition in the preamble by the use of such language as that there can be no mistake as to the true import of the whole bill considered as a measure of legislation. In the third section, we have said:

And all legislative or judicial proceedings or processes, to prevent or control the proceedings of said military tribunals, and all interference by said pretended State governments with the exercise of military authority under this act, shall be void and of no effect.

We have declared, then, in the preamble, and in the text of the bill, that these are pretended, not real State governments. How will that declaration made by Congress affect the action of the Supreme Court? As is very well known, in the case referred to yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] (Luther vs. Borden,) the Supreme Court held that Congress was the department of the Government that was to decide in case of two governments set up in a State which of the two was the republican form of government. They also decided another point which has not yet attracted the attention of the country. It was held in general terms that it was in the power of Congress to inspect the constitution of a State where there was but one form of government, and to decide whether that particular constitution was republican or not. The Court illustrated the proposition by saying that if a State should establish a military government it would be in the power of Congress to set that government aside and to institute proceedings for the organization of a government republican in form.

The Supreme Court, looking at these ten States before it can discern judicially the existence of States, must find State governments; and if this bill be passed it will fail entirely to find any State government whatever. They must also further find that the State government existing in any State has been recognized by the Congress of the United States, and therefore, judicially, the Supreme Court will have no capacity to see in either of these ten States any government; and therefore for judicial purposes there will be no State. It follows, then, that for the purpose which we have in view, which is to keep in our own hands, as the political department of the Government, the reorganization of these ten States, this bill in its present form is of vital importance to the future welfare of the country. It keeps in the hands of Congress and of the people the control of a most important question; none other than this: whether these ten States shall be admitted into this Union under the lead and control of disloyal men, or whether they shall be admitted under the lead and control and by the direction and influence of loyal men. This is the question before the country.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to ask the gentleman whether, in his judgment, a bill which establishes in these States a military government is consistent with the duty of Congress to guarantee a republican form of government to those States?

Mr. BOUTWELL. A very proper question, and one in reference to which I hope to present my views.

The remark has been made that the committee did not contemplate anything but a military government for these States. This statement is negatived by the concluding clause of the preamble, which is in these words:

And whereas it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said so-called States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established, &c.

I may remark here that the gentleman from

New York [Mr. RAYMOND] admitted the other day that life, liberty, and property were not protected in these ten States; and it follows as a matter of course that somebody for the time being is bound to furnish that protection. What I ask the House to accept is, the fact that there is no other practicable way of furnishing protection to life, liberty, and property in these ten States except through the instrumentality of a bill conferring great powers upon the military department of the Government; but powers not to be exercised without authority of law, powers not to be exercised independent of Congress, but to be exercised precisely as the police of a city exercise the vast powers confided to them. They derive their authority from the law and they exercise the powers intrusted to them in obedience to principles of law. They are always responsible to the people as the source of law. The military department in its operation in these ten States, whether considered with reference to the people of the whole country or considered with reference to the powers that they exercise, will be but as the police of a city acting under authority of law and in consonance with the principles of law, possessing vast power, exercising great authority, but always in subjection to law. The moment they depart from the principles of law, the moment they attempt to assume or assert any authority not confided to them, they become utterly powerless in the presence of the majesty of the people, who will revoke the delegated authority with the same judgment and the same certainty with which they conferred it. It follows, therefore, that fifty or sixty thousand men of the Army who may be intrusted with these powers in those States will be, with reference to the people of those States and of the country, but as the police of a city.

I pass over the second section of this bill. I believe that as reported by the committee it is constitutional, and I believe also that the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have been constitutional also. But the main feature of this section, whether accepted as reported by the committee or amended as suggested by the chairman of the committee, is that which gives to the General of the Army, subject, of course, to the authority vested by the Constitution in the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, authority to designate five officers of the rank of major general or brigadier general, and appoint them to command the five districts created and established by the bill.

In passing I venture to make a single observation for the purpose of relieving gentlemen upon the point suggested by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] that it was not competent for Congress to detail officers of the Army by rank. I do not at all concur in that idea if by "detailing" is meant designating certain officers by name or by rank and assigning them to the performance of certain services. The President is undoubtedly Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy; but by a provision of the Constitution Congress has power to make rules for the regulation and government of the Army and Navy. The President is required to command the Army in subordination to the rules and regulations which Congress prescribes. There would be no doubt of the authority of Congress to send a fleet to the Indian ocean for the protection of American commerce, and to detail Admiral Farragut by name and assign to him a certain number of vessels belonging to the Navy, and direct him to proceed to the Indian ocean for the purpose of protecting the commerce of the United States. The authority of the President over the Navy is precisely the same as is his authority over the Army.

Objection is made to another provision of this bill, found in the third section, which authorizes the military officers to allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and try offenders. It has been suggested that this provision is equivalent to a recognition of the State governments which have been set up in those States, and that in some way or to some degree it conflicts with the provisions contained in the preamble and in the text of the last paragraph of the third section of the bill. I think that this provision is not justly subject to any such interpretation. We establish military authority in that vast district of country. We give to our military officers supreme, but not necessarily exclusive, jurisdiction over all local affairs; and by this provision we put it in the power of the military officers to use the existing legal tribunals. The officer does not use a local tribunal because it was instituted by the State and derives its powers from the State; but he uses it, if he uses it at all, because he finds it there, because he finds the people acquainted with its mode of administration, and because he can make it useful in protecting the property, the liberty, and the lives of the people within his jurisdiction. But no authority or argument can be deduced from this provision in favor of the pretended State governments which have been set up. Our action in this case will be precisely analogous with the conduct of President Lincoln when my friend and colleague [Mr. BANKS] was in command in Louisiana. I remember that at that time a proclamation was issued, I suppose by the President, declaring the constitution of Louisiana, except those parts of it which related to slavery, the law of Louisiana for the time being. I was myself slightly disturbed at that time by the fear that the President recognized the old constitution of Louisiana as binding upon the people of that State because it had been the constitution; but with his usual clearness he made the distinction, and said that finding the constitution there, and finding the people familiar with it, he recognized it and caused it to be enforced; and not because it had any vital power or legal existence arising out of the fact that previously it had been the constitution of the State.

Mr. BANKS. Will my colleague [Mr. BOUTWELL] allow me to say the constitution of Louisiana was recognized, as he has suggested, only for the purpose of the election, or with a view to the establishment of a government immediately by the people, and not as a semi-frame of government. It was recognized for a special purpose.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Undoubtedly it was for a special purpose. I did not introduce the subject with the design of saying that it was otherwise; but only for the purpose of showing that it was competent for the authorities of the United States to use institutions and frameworks of government found in the rebellious States for the purpose of accomplishing what is desired; whether it be the protection of life, liberty, and property, or whether it be the reconstruction of the government itself. They are used not because they have been established in those States at some previous time, but because they are convenient instruments of accomplishing what we desire to have done. They derive their power not from the fact that they have been established as institutions of the State at some previous time, but because of the fact that we endow them with life for certain purposes, whether those purposes are temporary or permanent. In this case, as in the case of Louisiana, we propose to use these institutions and tribunals for certain purposes, for a limited period of time, and only until another system can be introduced.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to say a word further.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will first yield to my colleague, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. BANKS. There is one other distinction to which the attention of my colleague [Mr. BOUTWELL] ought to be called. That distinction is that the constitution of Louisiana which was recognized was in the hands of loyal men. But the civil governments indirectly recognized in this bill are in the hands of the enemies of this country.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well; that for our purpose is a distinction of no consequence whatever; for the reason that the military officers having control over these tribunals will deprive them of power from time to time, and to such extent as may be necessary for the purpose of securing protection to life and liberty and property. If the tribunals referred to so fail under such circumstances and for such periods of time as to render it probable that they cannot be used as instruments of good government, then they will be thrust aside altogether. And so it would have been with the constitution of Louisiana if in the experiment which was tried it had failed to accomplish that which the President desired, to wit: to aid in the restoration of civil government in that State. Had it failed to do that the President would not have hesitated to put the hand of military power upon that constitution at once.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] will now allow me a moment, I will say that I understand the gentleman to admit that the whole government of these people will be under the control of the military officer who may be in command of the district or department, subject alone to his supreme will, unless he shall concede, if he shall see fit, a certain amount of jurisdiction to the civil officers. Now, I would inquire of the gentleman, in the first place, what laws these military officers are to administer? whether they are to be the laws of their own will which they are to administer upon their own impulse and discretion, or whether the laws and Constitution of the United States and the laws and constitution of the State of Louisiana? Are these the laws that they are to administer, or are they to administer martial law alone?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think I understand what the gentleman desires to express. I may say in one word that the supreme power will undoubtedly be for the time in the military officers. But that power is limited by this bill in various ways, and by the Constitution of the United States, as I will undertake to point out.

But before entering upon that branch of the subject I desire to refer to what has been said in reference to the suspension by this bill of the writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. BANKS. Let me say just one more word right here.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to say one word in confirmation of what my colleague has said: that it was the distinct understanding of the military authorities and those they represented in the experiment in Louisiana that if it had resulted in placing disloyal men in office the whole affair would have been immediately suppressed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have no doubt of it. As I was about to say, there is not in terms in this bill any suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. If it be true, as is asserted in the preamble of the bill, that these are pretended State governments and not real State governments, then these State governments have no power whatever over the privilege of the writ.

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is a privilege which can be enjoyed only under those governments which are legitimate and recognized. Therefore, when we declare that the governments in these ten States are pretended governments and not real governments, as far as those governments are concerned they neither have nor can have any power over the writ of habeas corpus in any form. Hence it follows that this bill is broader in its provisions than the mere suspension of the writ of habeas corpus as far as the tribunals of the so-called States are concerned. The bill not only suspends their functions in that particular, but it suspends by its power all their functions. So far as the courts of the United States are concerned there is no suspension of the writ of habeas corpus but only a regulation of the mode in which the privilege of the writ shall be enjoyed by the people. With reference to this point the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] seems to me very proper; and I trust that it may be adopted.

I come now to certain provisions of the bill which limit the authority of the military officers. It is declared first—

That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals.

Then it is declared in the fourth section that—

All persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted—

Using in this respect the language of the Constitution.

Then the fifth section provides—

That no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district.

Under the general principles of law and practice no capital punishment can be inflicted until the sentence shall have been approved first by the military commander of the district, and then referred to the President of the United States and approved also by him. Thus we impose upon these officers those obligations which are imposed upon other departments of the Government by the Constitution of the United States. We have, then, always in the presence of these officers the political power of the Government to arrest their proceedings at any time if they are harsh, unjust, unwise, or oppressive in any degree.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he considers that this bill secures to a person accused of a capital offense the right of trial by a jury of his peers?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It does not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it not, then, in direct conflict with that provision of the Constitution which declares that a party charged with crime shall be entitled to a trial by jury, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, &c.?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution provides—the provision was quoted the other day—that “the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.” Now, sir, there is a distinction which can properly be made, but which, so far as I have observed, has not been indicated upon this floor. It is this: that the power of Congress to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is not confined to periods of rebellion or invasion; but it arises when there is a case of rebellion or invasion and it ceases to exist only when in the judgment of the law-making power the occasion has passed. Therefore the people of these ten States are to-day not only without civil governments—that has been declared by the executive department, and it is also affirmed in this bill—but they are also in that condition, even if the existing governments are valid, when it is in the power of Congress to suspend the writ of habeas corpus for the reason that a case of rebellion exists. Although war is no longer flagrant in that part of the country it still is true, as is confessed by gentlemen on all sides, that as an effect and consequence and incident of the rebellion, there is no real protection to life, person, or property. There was a case of rebellion and the consequences remain.

Therefore the case of rebellion having arisen, the consequences, incidents, and facts of that case yet continuing, the power of the Government over the people of these vast regions of country, aside from the rights of conquest, is as supreme and exclusive as it was over the sections of the country subjugated by the arms of the Republic during the time while the rebellion was flagrant in other portions of the South.

Mr. RAYMOND. If it does not interrupt the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I understand it does not, I desire to ask him a question on one point which seems to me a point of distinction in that matter. The gentleman maintains inasmuch as the invasion, the rebellion, the endangerment of the public safety continued, therefore the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus continued.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The power to suspend. Mr. RAYMOND. But as I understand it, by proclamation duly authorized by law, that state of rebellion has been legally ended, and therefore this is a new exercise of power. It is not the continuance of a previous exercise of power, but a new state of things having arisen, the war having been ended and proclaimed ended in accordance with law, this is a new exercise of that power.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The proclamation by the President had no other effect, as I understand, than to declare that flagrant war was at an end; but no proclamation of the President, whatever may be the terms in which it is couched, can ever deprive the legislative department of its constitutional authority to decide for itself in the case of rebellion that the privilege of the writ shall be suspended. The President cannot deprive the legislative department of the Government of the power of deciding for itself when the case of rebellion exists and when the effects and consequences of that rebellion terminate. The power is here, and no paper proclamation of the President can ever divest us of it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE rose.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I fear all my time will be consumed with these interruptions. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin and then decline to yield to all others.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understand the gentleman to claim that the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus itself justifies the holding of the person charged with crime and the depriving him of an immediate trial. I do not understand that the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus has any such effect; but on the contrary, I hold the provisions of the Constitution still applies, that he is entitled to be tried speedily by an impartial jury, and be confronted with the witnesses against him, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I decline to yield further. I have only to say that in my view, as far as these ten States are concerned, when the exigency exists it is competent for Congress to declare that they shall be governed by martial law; to declare that pretended State governments have no power to grant writs of habeas corpus or do any other act of government except as they derive it from military authority. The military government for the time being will be supreme, but not necessarily exclusive, because these military officers may, as provided in this bill, grant to the local tribunals an opportunity to dispose of questions as they may arise among the people.

Mr. Speaker, passing from the provisions of the bill, I wish to call the attention of the House to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM,] and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] which are similar in character. I observe these amendments are supported by quite a number of gentlemen on this side of the House. Without examining into the details of the amendments I have this to say, that any general proposition for the restoration of these States to the Union upon any basis set forth in an act of Congress is fraught with the greatest danger to the future peace and prosperity of the Republic.

The reason is apparent: yesterday we passed a bill providing for the admission of Louisiana to the Union. I will refer now to the provisions of this bill for the purpose of deducing therefrom an argument against the proposed amendments of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM.]

In the first place, we have taken the utmost care in that bill to secure a loyal governor for Louisiana while the process of reconstruction is going on. We have taken the utmost security that the legislative council shall be composed of loyal men; that no person shall be elected a delegate to the constitutional convention or legislature who has ever had anything whatever to do with the rebellion.

And for what purpose have we taken all these securities? For this purpose alone, as I apprehend, that we set up as the principal figures in the reconstruction of Louisiana loyal men. We clothe them with power so that all the people of Louisiana, loyal and rebel, may see that all power in that new State, under the policy of Congress, is given to loyal men; and also that disloyal men are carefully excluded. I need not dwell upon what is a well-known and potent fact, that when you create a State, when you give power to a Governor, when you appoint a legislative council, when you select judges, it is of the first importance that they be loyal men if you desire to construct a loyal State.

How is it, how will it be under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio? He lays down a general rule under which each of these nine States is permitted to reconstruct itself and obtain admission into the Union. What is to be the effect of this measure? The legislative departments of those nine States are all in the hands of disloyal men. Every Governor, every judge, is a disloyal man. The majorities in each of the Legislative Assemblies is composed of disloyal men. As soon as it is ascertained, as it will be if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio prevails, that certain things are to be done in order to secure admission into Congress, what happens? These disloyal authorities proceed at once to do that which the gentleman from Ohio says they must do before they are admitted into Congress. Disloyal men in these States become the central figures in the Government. They become the source of power.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannot; I have only a few minutes left. The effect of this will be that these nine States will appear here with their constitutions framed as you demand, the constitutional amendment adopted, and negro suffrage provided for, but every officer in the States will be a disloyal man. Am I told that the pending amendment to the Constitution excludes certain persons? To be sure it does; but the number excluded is very small in proportion to the whole number of disloyal people in those States. Nothing remains except for the disloyal people to select men who are disloyal but who will not come under the ban of the constitutional amendment. The consequence is that the timid people, black and white, who adhere to authority, who naturally place confidence in men of power, will be the sport of disloyal men. Thus you permit disloyal men to set up and control the governments which are to be formed in these nine States. Therefore I protest with all the power I can command against any general proposition for the admission of these States into the Union; and in that protest I do not mean to be understood as entertaining the opinion that these States ought not to be restored as speedily as possible. But I do assert and maintain that either the bill which passed yesterday should be passed for these several States as they may appear qualified to take their places in the Union, or one somewhat like that proposed by my colleague, [Mr. BANKS.] Take each State and provide that the men who are intrusted with the organization shall be loyal men; secure a loyal government, loyal judges, loyal Legislatures, a loyal convention for framing the State constitutions, and thereby you secure loyalty among the people of each of the new States. If you allow power to go into the hands of the disloyal people of the South they will without doubt reconstruct governments as you demand. They possess all the means of information; they command in a large degree the intellect of the South; they control the institutions of learning; the clergy is in their interest. And having all the means of influence and power, if in addition we allow them the offices in the incipient State, they will rally to their support enough of the people to control the State for a long period of time. Therefore I am of the opinion clearly that if we were to pass bills to-morrow for the reconstruction of every one of these States, those bills should be separate; they should be framed like the bill passed yesterday in relation to Louisiana, that thereby we may have the influence of the military officers in support of the new State governments we desire to establish.

I hold further that we are driven to this extreme measure because the policy of the President has failed, for some reason or other, to secure to the people of the South protection of life, liberty, or property. I have in my desk a statement in detail which I suppose and have reason to believe is very imperfect, but which contains the names of forty persons murdered, and the places are named where they were murdered in the State of Arkansas, within a comparatively brief period of time. Although many of the murderers are known not one of them has been brought to justice or even arraigned before any tribunal.

There are now, as far as I can understand, but four methods which can be resorted to for reconstructing the governments of the rebel States. The first mode is to admit all the southern States upon the plan suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM.] I have already indicated as clearly as I am able the objections I entertain to that plan. I consider it nothing more and nothing less than a proposition to put all those State governments into the hands of the rebels.

The second plan is to leave those States as they are now. Are gentlemen prepared to do that? Are they prepared to continue this grand carnival of disquiet, disorder, bloodshed, and murder throughout the South? We shall be false to our duty if we permit the existing condition of things to continue one day beyond the time when we can relieve ourselves from the circumstances in which we are placed.

The third plan is to follow the example set in the case of Louisiana by the bill which we passed yesterday. We may follow that example as speedily as possible, even though we pass the bill now before the House. The bill for a military government over the insurrectionary States does not interfere at all with the reconstruction of North Carolina or Arkansas, or any other State, should Congress deem either in a fit condition to be received into the Union of States.

But in the mean time, as I believe, it is necessary to establish some sort of government there which shall protect the people in their rights; and I know of no means whatever except to employ for that purpose the military force of the Government. I do not participate at all in the idea that the military will in any degree deviate from the strict line of their duty. I do not apprehend that they will oppress any man, or that it will do anything from malice, or for any unjust purpose. I believe that temporarily it will be a safe depositary of the public power, and that we can at least do that which thus far the Government has failed to do since the suppression of the rebellion, protect our friends against the injustice and wrongs under which they have suffered for now more than two years, and under which they are writhing in the very agony of death.

I have promised to yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WARD.] But there is so little of my time left I do not know that he will want it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I can hardly say in five minutes anything worthy of the subject. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. I will ask him, if he has no objection, to yield the five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will do so with pleasure. Mr. SCHENCK. It seems exceedingly difficult to get the privilege of some four or five minutes of time; but I will avail myself of it for necessarily a few remarks.

I wish to say, in the first place, that I heartily assent to the necessity of martial law being extended over these States that have been in rebellion; but I am just as decided in the opinion that, in extending martial law over them with a view to keeping them in a condition of peace and good behavior until civil governments can be established, we ought at the same time, as a part of the system, to indicate to them what we require them to do. And here seems to be the point on which gentlemen who want to press this bill naked to a vote differ with myself and those who agree with me. If I understand the sentiment of the country and of the Republican party of the country, Congress is called upon to adopt and declare some policy, some scheme, some plan upon which these States are to be restored. Now, sir, it is proposed upon the one hand that the whole plan shall consist in putting them under martial law until they are in fit condition to have representation. I aver that this is only half the work. I aver that while you are subjecting these men to the rule of the bayonet you ought, at the same time, to indicate to them what you require them to do in order that they may be rid of the bayonet. This is proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] and explained by him yesterday. I understand my colleague [Mr. BINGHAM] is willing to withdraw his amendment in order to let this distinct, succinct proposition come in.

Mr. BINGHAM. I accept the words giving universal suffrage, letting the amendment remain otherwise as it was.

Mr. SCHENCK. Now, what do the friends of this amendment propose? They say, "Pass your bill declaring martial law, but accompany it with an additional provision which shall indicate to the States that have been in rebellion what you expect them to do in order that they may get rid of martial law by showing their fitness to have it lifted from them." This amendment is of itself an argument which, it seems to me, appeals to this House and to the whole country, and especially to that party in the country that has sent the majority to this House. It proposes that whenever the constitutional amendment which has been submitted by this Congress to the States "shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects," this shall be one of the conditions upon which that State shall be relieved from martial law. Now, sir, what is that proposed amendment to the Constitution? Just what this Committee on Reconstruction gave us at the last session of Congress—securing equality of representation; debarring from the privilege of holding office the dangerous men of the South until their disqualification shall be removed by two thirds of both Houses of Congress; providing for maintaining inviolate the public faith; prohibiting payment for slaves. It is unnecessary for me to recapitulate the provisions of that amendment. They are familiar to every gentleman here.

But, sir, the condition I have specified is not the only condition proposed to these States as that upon compliance with which they shall be relieved from martial law. It is further required that the State "shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed equally and impartially by all male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion"—thus securing what this measure providing for martial law does not secure, and what is not clearly secured by the bill in relation to Louisiana.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to call the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the gentleman to grant me a few moments more before he demands the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am sorry to be restricted in this discussion to so brief a time; but I suppose I must be thankful for small favors.

I will complete what I was about to say of the character of this amendment in its several parts. This constitution thus made, pending these provisions, must itself have been submitted to the vote of the State that desires to get rid of martial law, and ratified by a vote of the people of that State; and when the constitution thus ratified by the popular vote shall have been thus sanctioned by the people of the State, it is still to be submitted to Congress for examination and approval; and that State then, if its constitution be approved by Congress, shall be declared, but not till then, entitled to representation in Congress on taking the oath on the part of the Senators and Representatives who shall be sent here.

What I claim—I must say it in a word, for I am allowed no longer time—is that if you present this in the shape of law you ought to provide a complete scheme, to say to these men they shall be put under martial law until they properly deport themselves; and when that is manifest, what they are to do to get rid of martial law. Anything less than that would be mockery, and but partial legislation. We ask, therefore, for a scheme; we ask for consistency; we ask for a plan; we ask for a policy to be adopted by Congress. But instead of meeting the expectation of the country, the only reply seems to be it is sufficient to give us half a scheme, and not to present it in its whole entirety.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask the House whether they are ready to close this matter by taking a vote on it. I therefore call for the previous question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the previous question will not be seconded. I want to explain to the House why we should have a vote on the pending amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 70.

Mr. BOUTWELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BOUTWELL and Mr. BINGHAM were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 79.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I owe my thanks, Mr. Speaker, to the House for giving me the opportunity of presenting to the issue which is thus sharply made between the honorable gentleman who has charge of this bill and myself. And before I proceed further in this discussion I thank the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania for so far conquering his prejudices as to deem one amendment proposed by me to the bill as not unworthy of his acceptance. I refer, sir, to the amendment offered by me to the fourth section of the bill as reported by the gentleman, and which amendment is in the words following:

Except in cases in which the person is held to answer only for a crime or crimes exclusively within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States within said military districts, and indictable therein.

This amendment having been accepted by the gentleman, there remains, therefore, Mr. Speaker, in controversy the additional amendment which I propose to insert, and which is as follows:

Whereas it is expedient that the said States lately in insurrection should, at the earliest day consistent with the future peace and safety of the Union, be restored to full participation in all political rights; and whereas the Congress did, by joint resolution, propose for ratification to the Legislatures of the several States, as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, an article in the following words, to wit:

ARTICLE.—

SEC. 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

SEC. 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two thirds of each House, remove such disability.

SEC. 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, nor any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

SEC. 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Now, therefore,
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever the above-recited amendment shall have become part of the Constitution of the United States, and any State aforesaid lately in insurrection shall have ratified the same, and shall have modified its constitution and laws in conformity therewith, and shall have presented to Congress a constitution of government republican in form and not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and which shall secure equal and impartial suffrage to all the male citizens of the United States twenty-one years of age resident therein, without distinction of race or color, except such as may be disfranchised by reason of participation in rebellion or for felony at common law, and which constitution shall have been approved by the qualified voters thereof as aforesaid and by Congress, the Senators and Representatives from such State, if found duly elected and qualified, may, after having taken the required oaths of office, be admitted into Congress as such.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That when any State lately in insurrection as aforesaid shall have ratified the foregoing amendment to the Constitution any part of the direct tax under the act of August 5, 1861, which may remain due and unpaid in such State; may be assumed and paid by such State; and the payment thereof, upon proper assurances from such State to be given to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, may be postponed for a period not exceeding ten years from and after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That until said States shall be admitted to representation in Congress as herein provided, &c.

If this amendment be adopted it leaves the gentleman's bill to follow the words "herein provided" just as the gentleman presents it.

I did take some objection when the bill as reported by the gentleman was first before the House for discussion to the phraseology which was employed therein, and the House yesterday, in the passage of the bill known as the Louisiana act, recorded their vote against ascribing the theory adopted by the gentleman, that the States were foreign or domestic Territories. For that vote of the majority on that question, although I could not approve the Louisiana bill, I thank the majority of the House for declaring in that bill that Louisiana is a State by adopting the words therein, "the State of Louisiana;" not the so-called State, not the conquered territory of Louisiana, not a territory occupied by alien enemies and conquered by arms, but "the State of Louisiana." The gentleman has so reformed his bill as to describe those States lately in rebellion by the words "late so-called Confederate States."

Now, sir, the House having settled that question by a decisive vote yesterday, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania having so far changed his bill, I waive any further objection to his bill on that ground.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully ask attention to the importance of allowing the vote to be taken on the amendment proposed. Here is a bill the object of which, as I said when I had the honor of addressing the House before, meets my hearty approval, as I believe it meets the approval of others, in that it makes some provision by law to protect life and property in the disorganized States. It is the duty of Congress to provide such protection until constitutional State governments in accordance with the requirement of the Constitution of the United States shall be established therein by the people. On that question I have no controversy with gentlemen; but, sir, I have some controversy with gentlemen who declare that, either by direction or indirection, Congress can make State constitutions for the people of any State of the Union. That is a power that belongs exclusively to the people of those States respectively, and by their act alone can such constitutions of government be adopted, and not by act of Congress.

The formation of a State government must be the voluntary act of the people themselves. I desire to give the people of those States, all the people thereof, an opportunity to exercise this right even in the presence of that military rule which it is deemed needful to set up in their midst. To secure this privilege to the people is the effect of the amendment which I propose to the bill. The amendment is in accord with the grand imperishable words of the Declaration of Independence: that all Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. The amendment but reaffirms the words of that declaration. It secures to every male citizen of the United States over twenty-one years of age, resident within each of those States, and who may not by the laws thereof be disabled by reason of participation in rebellion or by having been guilty of a felony at common law, the privilege to vote and to have equal voice in the adoption of a constitution of government for themselves, to be presented to Congress for approval or rejection.

I thought the gentlemen who favor the military bill would accord manhood suffrage, but it seems that the special champions of this bill are now for suffrage restricted and restricted to a minority of the people of a State, a large majority of that privileged minority being emancipated slaves, now happily free men, and about to be righteously clothed with the highest rights of citizens of the Republic. Has it, indeed, come to this, that gentlemen are not content to secure to the emancipated citizens of the Republic the elective franchise, and all the rights of citizens and men, but by act of Congress insist farther by like act of Congress to secure to them even in a minority the whole political power of the State, and by like legislation compel the majority of white citizens to be their subjects for life? By the Louisiana bill, which you passed yesterday, you require that this shall be the law in Louisiana, and that the majority of white citizens in that State shall by coercion of the bayonet pay the expenses of the minority's administration. If the majority in that State will not consent to equal rights and equal justice to all, compel them to yield to the just government of the minority. To deny them the privilege even to do this right and just thing seems to me an act of tyranny. There is not, in my judgment, an emancipated slave in America that would ask any such legislation at your hands. These men only ask equal rights and equal protection. They ask that that decree of the people who saved the nation's life, and which, thank God, by the recorded legislative act of twenty represented States of this Union has become a part of the supreme law of the land, shall be enforced by act of Congress. That is all the freedmen ask, that is all that the great people authorize or require in this work of restoration. That decree is obeyed when in every State every man, being a citizen of the United States, shall have equal rights and full and equal protection until he forfeits it by crime, and no person shall be denied the equal protection of the laws.

"But," say gentlemen, "you do not want to allow rebels to vote, do you?" Certainly not while in rebellion; but those who were enemies in war, but in peace friends and citizens, should vote. Why not? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWWELL] says they will control the State. How? In what State are they in a majority except Louisiana? unless you include in your law of proscription and exclusion those who were friends of the Constitution, but who in fact aided the rebellion under an enforced conscription. When we enfranchise, as I trust we shall, and as I propose to do, all the emancipated citizens of those States, will not the loyal men be in the majority, and can you not trust the majority? Is the principle of republican government, the right of the majority to govern, to be abandoned?

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman permit me to put a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask him if in the reorganization of the civil government in these revolted States he is in favor of having the rebels take part?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am in favor of having them vote according to the terms of the constitutional amendment which we have proposed; and I will give my reasons why.

Mr. SLOAN. I wish to put another question. Does that constitutional amendment you now propose allow rebels to vote in the reorganization of civil governments?

Mr. BINGHAM. It allows them to vote unless they shall be disfranchised for participation in rebellion by the act of the majority.

Mr. SLOAN. By themselves.

Mr. BINGHAM. By themselves, the gentleman says. Are the hundred thousand majority in South Carolina of emancipated slaves rebels?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I am not quite sure but I may vote for the gentleman's proposition. I certainly will if I can. I therefore ask this question for information. I understand the effect of his amendment will be that all the processes of organizing governments in these States prior to their admission to representation will be left to the control of those who are now electors in those States. This amendment provides no way by which the entire people, including the black, whom he is in favor of permitting to vote, can participate in the exercise of authority in the organization of government there or in presenting a constitution for our acceptance.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, the gentleman has manifestly not read the amendment or heard my statement of it; otherwise, his general intelligence would have furnished him with an answer to his inquiry without troubling me.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Will the gentleman explain how it is the basis of universal suffrage?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will tell the gentleman how it is. In the first place, the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] remains untouched by the amendment.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The military bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir, the military bill now under consideration, and which I propose to amend. The amendment contains this provision:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States; and when any one of the late so-called Confederate States shall have given its assent to the same and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects; and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed equally and impartially by all male citizens of the United States twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion, or for felony at common law; and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined, for ratification or rejection; and when the constitution, if ratified by the popular vote, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law.

Now, the gentleman says the bill makes no provision for taking the votes of the people. It makes just this provision: that the military authority under this bill may permit the local authorities to submit the whole question of amending their existing constitutions to the vote of the people enfranchised by the terms of this bill, for approval or disapproval. But the gentleman asks if that compels them to make a constitution? Why, sir, you cannot compel a people, either black or white, to make a constitution.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The method of the gentleman, I submit, does not provide that the people may take part in forming the constitution.

Mr. BINGHAM. That the people are secured the right to vote upon the whole question, I submit has something to do with forming and adopting a constitution. They take about as much part in it as they do under the Louisiana bill, supported and voted for by my colleague, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] which was passed yesterday, under which the laws are made for them by a body of nine men appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate. Now, it will not do for the gentleman to signify at this time his anxiety for the people to have a voice in their laws, statutory or fundamental, after such legislation as that.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Will my colleague permit me—

Mr. BINGHAM. I decline to be inquired of any farther about the matter.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Permit me to say—

Mr. BINGHAM. I have answered the gentleman when I say that this amendment offered by me gives to the people of those States an opportunity of framing such a constitution as is therein specified, to be submitted for approval or disapproval to the vote of all male citizens, irrespective of race or color, over twenty-one years of age, within the State, except such as may be disfranchised for crime; and they are to be protected by the military power of the United States in casting their votes and thus declaring their will. I submit, sir, that if the gentleman were to write from this hour till the going down of the sun he could do no more toward giving those people an opportunity to adopt a republican form of government.

The amendment gives the people the opportunity to act in the premises. If they will not act, reform, or amend their constitutions, you cannot make them do it; you cannot make them form and adopt a constitution. Constitutions of government are made by the voluntary act of the people, not by rifled ordnance and the bayonet. By incorporating this amendment into the bill you say to the people, "Until you do make a constitution you shall all be under the protection of the Federal Army; every man alike shall be protected in his person and in his property until that day comes when you present to Congress a republican form of government, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, securing equal and impartial suffrage to all male citizens of the United States of full age, without respect to race or color, except such as forfeit their right by crime."

I said before, and I repeat it now, that I do not desire to interfere with the other provisions of this bill; but I desire a vote upon the question whether the people shall have an opportunity to rid themselves once and for all of military rule and martial law by complying with the just and equitable provisions of the proposed amendment.

Oh! says some gentleman, you want rebels to participate in this government. Sir, the nation has decided this question, and let gentlemen beware how they trifle with the twenty-five million people who have decided that very question by the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution which you proposed. What sort of a record are we presenting here for the consideration of the country? No longer ago than the last session of Congress the very question was submitted to this House, whether you would allow the question to be submitted to the people of the Republic, to decide whether citizens lately in rebellion should be disfranchised or not permitted to vote for the short period of three years, until 1870, for Representatives in Congress or for presidential electors.

What was the result? At least twenty, if I recollect aright, of the Republican majority of the House voted against any such proposition of disfranchisement. You sent it to the Senate by a combined vote of our friends on the other side, and of a minority on this side, of which I make no complaint. The opponents of the proposed constitutional amendment thought it their duty to make that amendment odious by retaining in it that provision of disfranchisement of all rebels until 1870. It was sent to the Senate, and there stands your printed record to-day, that in the Senate, on the motion to strike out the proposition to disfranchise all rebels until 1870 from giving a vote for Representatives in Congress or for presidential electors, every vote in the Senate of every party present was recorded for the motion save one.

If that vote in the Senate—that almost unanimous vote—against the proposition to disfranchise the whole body of men who participated in the late rebellion in those ten States until 1870 was right last June it remains right to-day and cannot be made wrong. You went to the people on that. You notified the people that you did not propose to disfranchise these men, and to take from them the privilege of voting in common with the majority of the loyal people, black or white, in these States. The people sustained you in that declaration and ratified the amendment imposing only the disability of holding office, and that only upon those who had broken by participation in the rebellion an oath, taken at one time or another, to support the Constitution of the United States.

The express enumeration of disabilities in the fundamental law of the land excludes all other disabilities by every rule of interpretation. Not that if hereafter these men should be disturbers of the peace you may not control them by the strong arm of the law, and take from them whatever rights they may otherwise enjoy. But this action of the people gives even late rebels an opportunity to put themselves upon their good behavior, and to participate meanwhile in a Government as just as any beneath the sun; a Government that secures to every human being the equal protection of its laws; a Government that gives to all citizens who do not forfeit the privilege by crime, being male persons over twenty-one years resident therein, equal suffrage.

But gentlemen say that they propose to vote this down. I am glad that my colleague [Mr. SHELLABARGER] has made the suggestion he would vote for it if he could. He voted for it when he voted to strike out the third clause of the constitutional amendment to which I referred, which disfranchised these rebels until 1870. He voted for it again when he voted for the constitutional amendment as amended in the Senate. He voted for it again when he went before his own people, as I did before mine, declaring our purpose to stand by that amendment.

But gentlemen say you call this a finality. No, sir; that is a word I never use. There is no finality to a nation's power. But let the nation speak and not their delegates in Congress. I pray gentlemen to remember, when they come to consider this question, that we are but the servants of the people, not their masters. That our business is to regard their decrees, to obey their will. I would remind gentlemen that legislators "are but the servants of the popular will;" that one condition of the people's prosperity is that their servants shall use very economically their delegated power and not presume to raise themselves into supreme judges of the national interests or deem themselves authorized to defeat the wishes of those for whose benefit, and I may add by whose will, alone they held their trust.

If this amendment goes into this bill the force of the measure is in no way impaired. It simply notifies the North and South, the East and West that military rule is exercised there for the protection of all persons alike, only until the people by a solemn vote at the polls, under the authority of the national law and the protection of the national Army, shall have assented to the constitutional amendment and set up a just and republican government.

I have accepted, as the House will doubtless notice, the express words of my friend from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE;] they are incorporated and do not substantially change my amendment, the only difference being that I set out also the constitutional amendment itself, and retain the preamble thereto as it was originally reported to this House by the Reconstruction Committee, in these words. That preamble is as follows:

Whereas it is expedient that the said States lately in insurrection should, at the earliest day consistent with the future peace and safety of the Union, be restored to full participation in all political rights; and whereas the Congress did, by joint resolution, propose for ratification to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, an article in the following words, to wit:

I set out the amendment, and then set out the sections as amended by me and reported by the Committee on Reconstruction last session. I retain what is omitted by the gentleman from Maine, the provision that upon compliance by any State lately in rebellion with the terms set out in my amendment, and upon giving security for payment thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury, such State shall be allowed ten years within which to pay its portion of the direct tax assessed by the act of 1861. There is no departure in this from what was reported at the last session to this House from the Committee on Reconstruction. There is no compromise in it.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] was pleased to speak of the action of the Reconstruction Committee in closed session, I beg leave to say this amendment which I offer, except the verbal changes made therein by me, received assented a vote in that committee as any bill that ever came from it.

In addition to what I have said I beg leave to add that an attempt was made by me in that committee to have it reported to the House with the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and that gentleman moved to lay it upon the table, which the committee refused to do. This was on last Wednesday, the day upon which the gentleman reported the bill to the House. In so far, then, sir, as that committee has weight in this House, the amendment which I offer has its approval substantially.

I ask what objection there is to having a vote by yeas and nays. I do not see any. I will bow with pleasure to the decision of the House, but I do ask the poor privilege of having a vote by yeas and nays on the question, shall the amendment pass, and thereby notify the people of the insurgent States whether it is our purpose to allow them on any terms whatever to reform their constitutions and be restored to their political relations to the Government of the United States as States of this Union.

Mr. BLAINE. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio and the one I have submitted embrace substantially the same idea, and I wish to ask my friend from Ohio whether he would be willing, when it reaches the parliamentary point where such a thing is practicable, to take mine as a substitute?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection if you propose the constitutional amendment with it.

Mr. BLAINE. I have a suggestion to make in order to disentangle what now seems to be so much entangled. I move the bill be recommitted, with instructions to report back immediately the pending amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. If this were a House committee that could be done, but the Chair doubts, as this is a joint committee of the two Houses, whether it can be ordered by a vote of the House to report immediately.

Mr. BLAINE. I move, then, that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report back immediately the following:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States; and when any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects; and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion or for felony at common law; and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined, for ratification or rejection; and when the constitution, if ratified by the vote of the people of said State shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

Mr. HILL. Must not the reference under the rule be to the Committee on Reconstruction?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion, as the Committee on Reconstruction has reported this bill and it is now before the House, is it within the province of the House to send it to another committee. As an original proposition it would have to go to the Committee on Reconstruction.

Mr. BLAINE. I demand the previous question.

The question being put on seconding the previous question, there were—ayes 44, noes 58.

Mr. BLAINE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. BLAINE and FARNSWORTH.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 57.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the yeas and nays on ordering the main question.

Mr. SPALDING. I suggest to my friend that we can have a test vote on a motion to lay the whole matter on the table.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman can move that afterward.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPALDING. I think we have spent time enough on this matter to have a test vote; I therefore move to lay the bill and pending motions on the table, and on that I demand the yeas and nays. I shall myself vote against my own motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on laying the bill and pending motions on the table; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 39, nays 115, not voting 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chandler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glessbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hise, Hogan, Edwin H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, Lettwich, Marshall, Nicholson, Noel, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, and Andrew H. Ward—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shollabarger, Spalding, Starr, Stokes, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John T. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—115.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Baxter, Bidwell, Brandegee, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Davis, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Le Blond, McCullough, McIndoo, Morrill, Niblack, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Rogers, Stevens, Stillwell, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—36.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DEMING stated that his colleague, Mr. BRANDEGEE, was paired with Mr. McCULLOUGH.

Mr. NIBLACK said he had paired on this vote with Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana.

Mr. ALLISON. I would inquire if this motion prevails and the bill is referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee reports it back again according to the instructions, will it then be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. If the bill is immediately reported back, as it must be according to the order of the House, if the motion prevails, it will then be open to amendment, unless the previous question is seconded.

The question was taken on ordering the main question; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 78; not voting 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Deuing, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Garfield, Goodyear, Hayes, Hill, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin H. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Jenckes, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lettwich, Marvin, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Nicholson, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Schenck, Stillwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Andrew H. Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Arnell, Barker, Beaman, Boutwell, Bromwell, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullom, Dawson, Denison, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Glessbrenner, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Koontz, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Maynard, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Noel, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Rogers, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Shollabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Strouse, Taber, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—78.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Baxter, Benjamin, Brandegee, Conkling, Culver, Ferry, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Hawkins, Hise, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Jones, Kasson, Latham, McCullough, McIndoo, Pomeroy, Sitgreaves, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—27.

So the main question was ordered.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. BLAINE to commit the pending bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions.

Mr. STEVENS. I will call for the yeas and nays on that motion. But before doing so, I will ask whether the hour will ever come to which I am entitled by the rule after the previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to his hour now if he claims it. The Chair will state in this connection that the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary, one of the standing committees of this House, takes precedence as an independent motion of the motion to recommit to a select committee.

Mr. STEVENS. If this is the only chance I shall have I will say now what I have to say on this subject.

The SPEAKER. After the House proceeds to act under the previous question, and the order is partially executed, it is not in order to debate the question.

Mr. GRINNELL. Is it in order to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. STEVENS) have leave to speak at some other stage of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent could be given for that purpose. But should the motion to commit prevail, the bill will not then be before the House for discussion.

Mr. STEVENS. In the present state of my health a few words must suffice for what I have to say at this time. Besides my physical inability, I feel a moral depression, possibly without sufficient cause, when I see the condition of the great party that is responsible for the doings of this Congress, and to which I belong; to see it, in my judgment, about to destroy itself, to place itself in a condition which ought to destroy it.

For the last few months Congress has been sitting here, and while the South has been bleeding at every pore, Congress has done nothing to protect the loyal people there, white or black, either in their persons, in their liberty, or in their property. Although we are insensible to it, the whole country is alive to the effect of the supineness with which this Congress has conducted itself. I of course have no right to reproach anybody. I do not reproach any one. I simply grieve that such is the condition of the country, one which is not realized apparently by the House, and especially that part of it which is responsible to the nation. We are enjoying ourselves in a tolerable way, those of us who have health and spirits, while the South is covered all over with anarchy and murder and rapine.

The President has sought to establish what he says will effect the union of these States, if yielded to by Congress. The Congress has declared that the President has usurped powers which do not belong to him; that all that he has done is void in the face of the law; and that Congress alone has the power to protect these people and to create governments, and yet we sit by and move no hand, we sit by and raise no voice to effect what we declare to be the duty of Congress. I know not how other gentlemen may view it, but so far as I am myself concerned—I charge none else with it—I view it as great dereliction of duty.

We are asked by gentlemen why we who are upon the joint Committee on Reconstruction have not presented some plan upon which Congress could act. We have been asked it with some acrimony by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] and others on this side of the House; we have been asked it with more propriety by gentlemen on the other side.

Now, it must be remembered that during this session of Congress we had no opportunity of acting until after the holidays, and since that time we have had but little over a month. It must be remembered that when the holidays had passed and Congress had again assembled there was a plan, whether good or bad, presented to this House for consideration, upon which a debate of three weeks took place without any attempt to amend it. And then there was a course of action pursued on the part of a gentleman, [Mr. BINGHAM,] who, it seemed to me, in a most unparliamentary and discourteous manner took charge of that bill when it had been reported, before the author of it had any opportunity to make any motion in regard to it; and with a vigor, an energy, and if I may say so without offense, with a doggedness which would have done great credit to Stonewall Jackson in his palmiest days. Although appealed to, time after time, he refused to allow the bill to be open to amendment. It will be remembered that I asked that the motion to recommit should be withdrawn, to give an opportunity to the House, if they did not like the bill in its then condition, to go on and perfect it. But it was defiantly refused; and inasmuch as this House sustained the refusal I of course have nothing to say. I accept the position, as the rebels do, because it cannot be helped.

But we have been told that we do not offer anything. I do not know whether that bill was good or bad; I thought it was a good bill; I had labored upon it in conjunction with several committees of loyal men from the South for four months, I had altered and realterd it, written and rewritten it four several times; and found that it met the approbation of numerous societies and meetings in all the southern States. It was, therefore, not altogether my fault if it was not so good a bill as might be found; but I did think that, after all, it was uncivil, unjust, indecent not to attempt to amend it and make it better, to see whether we could do something to enable our friends in the southern States to establish institutions according to the principles of republican government.

I warned the House that if that bill should go back to the committee it must die. My vigorous friend from Ohio assured us that such would not be the effect, that the bill would come back here fresh and blooming in the course of a couple of days. Where is it now? Why have we not something in lieu of it that suits the gentleman? for I may say that this bill came from that same committee, after careful examination, with the unanimous consent of every member of the committee belonging to this side of the House except one. It came here with a perfect understanding that if it was to pass and become a law it must pass without amendment. It was not intended as a reconstruction bill. It was intended simply as a police bill to protect the loyal men from anarchy and murder, until this Congress, taking a little more time, can suit gentlemen in a bill for the admission of all those rebel States upon the basis of civil government.

But, sir, this bill encounters precisely the same obstacles as the other, and is met in precisely the same spirit. There are in it some words in regard to which there is a difficulty about the spelling. Several of my friends cannot accept the bill because adverbs are improperly placed; and while on this side of the House gentlemen do not pretend to object to its main features, yet they do object to its particles and its articles; and what is worse than all, for I have tried to alter the language to suit my friends around me, they have with a pertinacious determination taken every possible step to pledge this Congress to what we are pleased to call a constitutional amendment, as a finality, so that its adoption by the South shall secure their admission. Gentlemen on this side have maintained that these conquered districts are States; and my friend from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] declared this morning with proper exultation that he had succeeded in passing through this House a bill which uses the word "States" precisely as the President uses it in his theory as to the right of admission of those claiming to represent the rebel States.

But, sir, the gentleman's announcement was no news to me. It was only in accordance with what I have seen all winter. I saw it in the magnificent peroration of the gentleman in the last discussion with regard to the bill to which I have referred. It is now proposed to pledge Congress in advance to that to which we have no right to pledge them—the admission of those States when certain things shall be done. Why, sir, are we to pledge future Congresses?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The gentleman will permit me to say that there was embodied in one section of the Louisiana bill a distinct declaration that if the State should seek representation here under the Constitution provided for in that bill, its admission shall be on such terms as the Congress to which application is made shall demand. That provision was inserted for the very purpose of excluding the conclusion that Congress when the time comes shall not declare what it may deem the proper terms of admission.

Mr. BLAINE. And my amendment leaves the question entirely to future Congresses, just exactly as that does.

Mr. STEVENS. What I am speaking of is this proposed step toward universal amnesty and universal Andy-Johnsonism. [Laughter.]

If this Congress so decides, it will give me great pleasure to join in the io triumphe of the gentleman from Ohio in leading this House, possibly by forbidden paths, into the sheepfold or the goatfold of the President.

Now, sir, what do we propose by this bill? We propose simply to protect them, and if any gentleman chooses to introduce to-morrow a joint resolution based on the bill of the gentleman from Ohio, the New Orleans bill, and making it applicable to all these States, I have no doubt that it will be passed through this House in a few hours and will become law. If the other can become a law, so could it.

But why tie us up by this pledge in advance to the constitutional amendment? I do not like to say anything against that amendment, sir, although I have no respect for it. But why touch it? There is a difference of opinion; why distract the party, unless it is for the benefit of others in other quarters?

Mr. Speaker, I feel quite unwilling to discuss questions of this kind after seeing the foregoing conclusion of the House, but I am so clearly impressed with the importance of this bill that I have thought proper, unwell as I am, to say this much.

If, sir, I might presume upon my age, without claiming any of the wisdom of Nestor, I would suggest to the young gentlemen around me, that the deeds of this burning crisis, of this solemn day, of this thrilling moment, will cast their shadows far into the future and will make their impress upon the annals of our history, and that we shall appear upon the bright pages of that history, just in so far as we cordially, without guile, without bickering, without small criticisms, lend our aid to promote the great cause of humanity and universal liberty.

I know that the gentlemen upon the other side of the House believe that this is a harsh measure; and so does the gentleman from Ohio on this side, who to-day, and the other day, made beautiful appeals to our sense of humanity, and depicted the glory of a great nation forgiving great criminals for unrepented crimes.

I am aware that gentlemen, here and elsewhere, have seemed to be ambitious to enunciate principles of forgiveness, benevolence, and mercy still more startling and saintly than those of the Athenian or the Galilean sage. Sir, generosity and benevolence are the noblest qualities of our nature; but when you squander them upon vagabonds and thieves you do that which can command no respect from any quarter. The sublime, I might almost say divine, doctrines or religion promulgated by Socrates, and so much more nobly and divinely expressed in the Sermon on the Mount, seem to require acts of self-restraint almost beyond the reach of man. And yet in urging forgiveness they refer simply to private offenses, to personal transgressions, where men can well forgive their enemies and smother their feelings of revenge without injury to anybody. But what has that to do with municipal punishment? What has that to do with political sanction of political crimes? When public tribunals, municipalities, nations pass sentence for crimes committed and decree confiscation for crimes unrepented, there is no question of malignity. When the judge sentences the convict he has no animosity. When the hangman executes the culprit he rather pities than hates him. These acts have no faculty of cruelty in them. Cruelty does not belong to their vocabulary. These officers of the law are but carrying out what the law decrees. The law commands, the law executes; but the law is unimpassioned. The law has no feeling of malignity, no feeling of vengeance. Gentlemen mistake, therefore, when they make these appeals to us in the name of humanity.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to say what perhaps had better not be said, that gentlemen who are thus, either by direction or indirection, defending the cause or palliating the conduct of these rebel traitors are making for themselves no good record with posterity. They, sir, who while preaching this doctrine are hugging and caressing those whose hands are red and whose garments are dripping with the blood of our and their murdered kindred, are covering themselves with indelible stains, which all the waters of the Nile cannot wash out.

Mr. Speaker, a single word as to the number of amendments. There are seven of them; and I am satisfied that any one of them, if ingrafted upon this bill will be sure to kill it. This bill proposes to do certain things. If there is anything further desired, let it be accomplished in some other way. The bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] may be a good bill, but it has no business here, it is not pertinent to this question. Of the amendment of the other gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] I have already spoken. The amendment of his colleague [Mr. LAWRENCE] shows great care and wisdom; but I implore that gentleman not to thrust it upon this bill to its utter destruction. Just so with the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. TRIMBLE.] The bill of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] is a very desirable one and more effective than that of his colleague from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] and could I vote for either, did I not know that either would be ruinous to this bill, I would accept that in preference to any other.

The amendment of the distinguished and gallant gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] has undoubtedly much talent in it. It applies, however, only to a single State—

Mr. BANKS. I did not propose any amendment to this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I know; but it is on the file of amendments. I fear that that bill would not succeed. It proposes to set up a contrivance at the mouths of the Mississippi, and by hydraulic action to control all the States that are washed by the waters of that great stream. [Laughter.]

So I might go on with two or three more. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] as I said before, lets in a vast number of rebels, and shuts out nobody. All I ask is that when the House comes to vote upon that amendment it shall understand that the adoption of it would be an entire surrender of those States into the hands of the rebels.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have already trespassed too long upon the House; and as there may be a wish to take the vote now, as it is about four o'clock, I shall sit down, so as to leave it to the House to determine.

Mr. BROOMALL. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. If this bill is committed to the Committee on the Judiciary, and immediately reported back, as it will be, will it then be in order to move, as a substitute for the entire bill, the substance of the Louisiana bill applied to the rest of the States?

The SPEAKER. After it is committed to the Committee on the Judiciary, the chairman of that committee will report it back instantly under the instruction of the House; and then if the House does not close the debate by seconding the previous question that amendment will be in order.

Mr. BROOMALL. Then I give notice that I will offer that amendment when I have the opportunity, should the motion to commit prevail.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, and Mr. MILLER asked and obtained leave to print some remarks upon the bill under consideration. [Their remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. JULIAN. If the motion to commit the bill to the Judiciary Committee should be voted down, what would be the effect?

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered, if the motion to commit is voted down, the previous question will not be exhausted until the third reading of the bill.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. BLAINE, to commit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with certain instructions.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to recommit to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions, and there were—yeas 69, nays 94, not voting 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Hawkins, Hill, Hise, Chester B. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Hunter, Jenckes, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Luffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Leitch, Marvin, McKee, McKuer, Morrill, Morris, Nicholson, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rousseau, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Warner, Whaley, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—69.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Barker, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Boutwell, Boyer, Brownell, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Kootz, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Radford, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spaulding, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—94.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Banks, Baxter, Brandegee, Conkling, Culver, Dawson, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Jones, Kasson, Latham, McCullough, McIndoe, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, Shanklin, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—27.

So the motion to recommit to the Committee on the Judiciary was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on the motion to recommit to the Committee on Reconstruction.

Mr. FINCK demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes twenty; not sufficient.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER suggested, as there were more than enough on ordering tellers to order the yeas and nays, that the yeas and nays be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 38, nays 121, not voting 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Latham, Le Blond, Leitch, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, and Andrew H. Ward—38.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brownell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. So the motion was disagreed to.

During the vote, Mr. HILL stated his colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, was paired with Mr. WRIGHT. The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] as modified, will be considered as the original bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STEVENS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 109, nays 55, not voting 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brownell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Mr. STEVENS. Before making the motion to reconsider I wish to inquire, Mr. Speaker, if it is in order for me now to say that we endorse the language of good old Laertes, that Heaven rules as yet and there are gods above? The SPEAKER. It will be in order for the gentleman to say it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Messrs. DAVIS, J. L. THOMAS, and LAWRENCE, of Ohio, asked and obtained leave to print remarks on the bill just passed. [Their remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

RELIEF OF DRAFTED MEN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message of the Senate of to-day, requesting the return from the House of Representatives of House bill No. 811, for the relief of certain drafted men, which was indefinitely postponed by the Senate on the 11th instant.

No objection being made, the bill was accordingly returned.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to call up the motion which I had entered on the 16th of January, to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 998, in regard to the war debts of the loyal States, was recommitted.

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged motion. The next business pending before the House is the bounty bill, but that was reported with the understanding that it should not interfere with the morning hour. There has been no morning hour to-day, and of course it will not come up till after the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not intend to consume any time at all on the bill in regard to the war debts of the loyal States, but to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal as soon as the House is full I shall ask a vote upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. It is my purpose to have the tax bill considered to-morrow morning, and if possible finished within two days.

The SPEAKER. If the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the tax bill, the bounty bill will be thereby postponed until the Committee of the Whole report the tax bill to the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I give notice that I shall call for the regular order so as to go through the morning hour to-morrow and then take up the bounty bill, and I hope the friends of the bounty bill will not permit me to be taken off my legs by a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That will be a question between the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means and the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. I would inquire if the bill in regard to which I have risen will not go over as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. It will be pending at the adjournment unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. SCHENCK. I give notice that to-morrow morning I shall insist upon the regular order.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House take a recess to-day until seven o'clock.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend by making it half past seven.

Mr. FINCK. Is a motion to adjourn in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FINCK. Then I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. Do I understand that this motion to adjourn, if it shall prevail, will cut off the evening session?

The SPEAKER. Certainly it would. Even where there is an order of the House for an evening session to be held each day a motion to adjourn, if successful, has always been regarded by the Presiding Officer as carrying the session of the House over to the next day to the regular time of meeting.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I hope that the members who are in favor of carrying on the business of the House will vote against the motion.

Mr. FINCK. I object to any debate.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 33, noes 70.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. THAYER to the motion of Mr. MORRILL, to take a recess; the amendment being to take a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m. The amendment was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL, as amended, was then agreed to.

Accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until seven and a half o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House, pursuant to order, reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

COMPENSATION OF CIVIL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and have referred to the Committee of Ways and Means the amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 224, giving additional compensation to certain employees in the civil service of the Government at Washington.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I object. I am opposed to that bill, and therefore I am not willing to give it any advantage in any way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] that by keeping this bill upon the Speaker's table will in no way tend to accomplish his object. Should a motion be made at any time to go to business upon the Speaker's table, and it should prevail, these amendments could be taken up and disposed of at once.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Then I withdraw my objection.

No objection being made, the motion of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

PAUL S. FORBES.

Mr. PIKE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for consideration at this time, the amendments of the Senate to the bill for the relief of Paul S. Forbes. They are merely verbal amendments, and will take no time to dispose of.

Mr. COOPER. I object to any business being done except the consideration of the tax bill, for which this evening was set apart by the order of the House.

MAIL ROUTE IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to establish a mail route in the States of Virginia and West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I have no ambitious speech to make on the present occasion. I propose merely to submit some business-like statements, if I can do so, in explanation of the principles and details of the bill.

The Committee of Ways and Means, in reporting the present bill, have sought to afford the greatest possible amount of relief to the country consistent with a prudent regard to the public credit, and were led in the outset to consider what would be the most feasible mode of accomplishing this object and leave at the same time the fewest impediments in the way of general industry.

If the tax on distilled spirits, tobacco, and cigars were fully paid or collected, the taxes on the major part of all other articles of manufactures could have been at once remitted; but unfortunately necessary changes in the law, followed by unnecessary and more unfortunate changes of internal revenue officers, have proved that two dollars, whether above the price of whisky or not, is certainly above the price of those who make it; that no spirits have been sold by the maker for as much as the cost of production; and the tax betrays the fact that whoever is in the business somehow corruptly evades the payment of some part of the tax, large or small, due to the Government. Trusting that the amendments proposed now to this branch of the law will hereafter secure a more effectual collection of the revenue from spirits, for the present we are forced to lean temporarily upon many other articles, which will doubtless be released at no distant day.

Two obvious plans present themselves: either we must reduce a percentage of the tax on all manufactures or entirely exempt those articles having the strongest claims to exemption, in consequence of inevitable duplication of taxes or of directly swelling the cost of living. From the first and by intentment very little revenue has been sought by any tax upon property as such, and therefore the agricultural and mining interests have been shielded, but commerce, manufactures, and the gains of realized capital have made by far the most bountiful contributions through multiplied taxation for the support of the nation. Licenses or special taxes, stamp taxes, and the tax on manufactures are at once advanced and paid by the parties engaged in business, and they have to trust to their chances whether any portion of these large sums are ever recovered or not. In prosperous seasons, or when prices are advancing, the ultimate consumer pays his due proportion; but in adverse seasons, or when prices are falling, losses by the producer are inevitable, leaving out of the question whether aggravated by taxes or not.

The Committee of Ways and Means have adopted the second plan alluded to. It is certain that to reduce the rate of taxation from five to four per cent.—and we could not at this time afford anything beyond such a reduction—would have afforded a very inconsiderable amount of relief, and yet the same labor and expense of collecting and paying the revenue, both to individuals and the Government, would have been perpetuated. It is true that this course would have greatly simplified and lessened the labors of the Committee of Ways and Means, but they have felt that the advantage of the whole country was to be studied rather than their ease or comfort. When the articles remaining on the tax list shall be found entitled to equal favor this course may be properly pursued.

By adopting the other alternative and exempting entirely from taxes such articles as salt, clothing, leather, pottery-ware, tinware, and coöperage of all sorts, with a large number of other articles upon which a tax was a petty annoyance to the payer as well as to the Government, the committee feel that they propose to distribute equal favor over the whole country, and by removing the tax from some of the common necessities of life we shall perhaps indirectly actually aid all branches of industry quite as much as they would be aided by a direct one per cent. diminution of the tax. The theory is well settled that all taxes in the end are distributed, and if heavy taxation increases the cost of production of raw materials or of manufactures, so a reduction of taxation diminishes the cost in an equal ratio. Whatever lessens the cost of living is a palpable benefit to all branches of industry, as much so as whatever lessens the cost of production. By pursuing the plan indicated we shall soon reach the point where taxes may be levied only upon a very small number of articles, and the cost, vexation, and annoyance of revenue officers, greatly reduced in numbers, will be roundly diminished.

If the example of the country oftenest held up for our imitation is valuable for anything, and I am not disposed to overvalue it, it is in favor of confining excise laws to the narrowest limits. Last year we liberated a very large number of articles, the benefit from which has only just begun to operate, and now we shall have added to the number to the extent of surrendering an amount of revenue equal to nearly one half of all we obtained in the first year of the operation of the internal revenue law.

For what we have done in each case of exemption I trust satisfactory reasons and explanations, if required, will be at hand as the cases arise in the progress in the bill; but there are a few items which I shall attempt to explain in advance.

I recognize the fact that our taxes for the past five years have been excessive, and nothing but the danger which menaced the life of the nation justified the heavy drain upon the pockets of our people. Now we feel the keenest joy of legislators when they can again lighten the weight of taxation. But a little more than six months ago we gave relief to the extent of not less than $75,000,000, and now shall give still further relief fully equal in substance if not in amount. The boundary where we pause is the point at which we reach the amount which will pay our ordinary expenses, the interest on the public debt, and leave a snug balance for some diminution of the public debt. This is absolutely essential to the public credit, essential to public faith; and beyond this no lover of his country would dare to go. For one I fully recognize the truth that no tax is so small the payment of which does not either impose increased toil upon the tax-payer or deprive him of some indulgence or enjoyment of life. But notwithstanding the unprecedented amount of our taxes, the exhibit of our income tax—which is after all but little more than what each individual chooses to pay on his own estimate of his income, leaving out the earnings of at least three fourths of our people, who by our minimum are exempt—shows that they have not fallen upon the capital nor even absorbed the annual income of the country. The ambition of the American people is to improve their condition and every year to know more, earn more, and have more. This prominent characteristic is endangered by the paper fever and ague which now afflicts the country; but hitherto our people have made great exertions, not only to maintain their capitals undiminished in spite of increased taxation, but to add thereto their usual annual surplus. We have reached the point when this cannot be continued. The income of the country for the present and coming year will be heavily reduced—no sane man can doubt it—and we must reduce our taxes and our expenses correspondingly.

Although I cannot congratulate the House upon an entire and persistent consistency in its course as to a speedy return to the old limits of our annual expenditure, yet we have not done altogether ill. We may at least not fear a contrast with the position of the finances of some other countries. France raises about four hundred and fifty million dollars, and yet annually exhibits a small deficit. Italy, however unfavorable her balance-sheet, is too young to be severely criticised. Austria, where a depreciated currency has largely contributed to the degradation and dismemberment of the nation, is an example so excessively bad that to cite it would not be refreshing even to those whose condition was much less forlorn. Prussia is in a far sounder position and comes out of a successful war with no increase of taxation, but when Prussia wages battle her soldiers are paid a sixpence per day, forage upon the enemy, and an indemnity is demanded of the vanquished. England is a fairer example. She increased her national debt by the Crimean war $450,000,000, and her annual expenditure has since been larger by about one hundred million dollars per year, and instead of being diminished since the close of the war is now nearly twenty million dollars more than it was in 1858, at the close of the war. Besides the annual charge of $850,000,000, Great Britain raises $40,000,000 in a single item for poor rates.

Though we were forced to create a large national debt, yet since the close of the war we have steadily and largely reduced the sum of our expenses from the point at which they stood at the close of the rebellion. Our expenditures were in 1865 $1,290,312,982; in 1866 $520,750,339; and in 1867 (estimated) $284,317,000. This shows as well the elasticity of our Government in rising to the height of the emergency as a facility in returning from the track of war to the inexpensive and more genial paths of peace. The people have already beaten their swords into plow-shares. The colossal expenditures of years of war have not become altogether chronic and are not transmitted to succeeding years. Yet I must insist that much further retrenchment is practicable and should be rigorously pursued. Our expenses for next year are estimated at nearly seventy-five millions more than the present year. The cost of government has been only increased in exceptional departments, and elsewhere it should not be permitted to go beyond its accustomed limits. Large expenditures mean large taxation, and diminished expenditures mean diminished taxation.

The important question in relation to the rate of the tax on distilled spirits now as heretofore presents all of its usual points of embarrassment. As an original question, it was my opinion, in view of the insuperable difficulties in the way of enforcing the law, that a less rate than two dollars per gallon was advisable, and if whisky frauds should continue to be successfully perpetrated it is not impossible that a lower rate may be at some future time accepted; but now the Committee of Ways and Means reached the conclusion to recommend an adherence to the present rate, and have proposed some very stringent provisions, believed to be necessary if we expect any considerable revenue, and without which we may as well retire vanquished from the attempt to enforce this part of the internal revenue law. As a beverage it may be estimated that the consumption of the United States is about one and a quarter to one and a half gallons per capita; or a total of about forty-five to fifty million gallons. In 1860 we produced nearly ninety million gallons, of which it was estimated that seventy-five million gallons were consumed as a beverage. The large increase of cost has unquestionably somewhat reduced the amount consumed, and if it were wholly to extinguish it there would be few regrets and we might patiently bear the loss of all revenue from this source; but in a community tolerably prosperous an increase of duty has been found not to diminish consumption so much as to increase smuggling and illicit distillation. Father Mathew by his temperance labors from 1835 to 1841 reduced the consumption of spirits in Ireland nearly five million gallons, when the duty was only 2s. 4d. per gallon; but raising the duty in 1860 from even 8s. to 10s. per gallon did not reduce the number of gallons charged only about one million gallons, although the resources of the Irish population were notoriously of the most meager sort. In spite of all we can do it would appear to be mainly a revenue question, and as such it does not appear to be advisable to put down the rate of tax so low as to leave no temptation to smuggling and illicit manufacture, as the logical result would be to wholly abandon the tax. We have very boldly attempted to obtain the largest sum of revenue possible from the distillation of spirits, and guided by this principle it is but fair to give the highest rate of duty an ample and effectual trial, at least, before receding from it. It is true that the consumer has had to pay almost the entire amount of the increased cost added by the tax, but hitherto other parties than the Government have collected and pocketed much the largest share of the tax. If the Government have got $29,000,000 the whisky princes have got $50,000,000. The struggle now is to protect honest men, if any can be found, who may engage in the business, and to punish with a pitiless impartiality all of any other sort.

Among other measures it is proposed to raise the special tax from $100 to $500. While it is known that many small-sized distilleries are at work, concealed in garrets, cellars, and remote places, it is also known that distilleries which are duly authorized practice little integrity beyond paying the special license, but find an outlet for the largest quantities of the contraband article. If the number of distilleries can be diminished we shall undoubtedly diminish the sources of fraud, and an increase of the special tax is a step in the right direction.

We raised last year from distilled spirits $29,188,578 15. If we had collected on the full amount consumed it would have been perhaps $90,000,000 or over.

The tax on sugar made from the sugar-cane it is proposed to reduce to one uniform rate of one cent per pound. All other sugars being exempt, it may, without examination, seem that this is sectional and unfair, but when we examine into the facts and find that we import of competing sugars about nine hundred million pounds, from which we derive more than twenty-five million dollars of revenue, and thus protect Louisiana sugars by a duty of three and four times the amount of tax, the charge of sectionalism and injustice at once vanishes. True, we might do more, but it would be unjust that Louisiana and Texas should do less. By the unfaithfulness of Louisiana and other States we were involved in an expensive war to put down the rebellion, and now our own loyal people submit to an unusual tax of never less than three cents per pound on all the sugar they consume, while the people of Louisiana and Texas, though subjected to a tax of one cent per pound on the sugar they produce, receive as compensation an addition of not less than three cents to the price of all they sell by virtue of the facts already recited. The sugar business of the South is surpassingly profitable, and immensely more profitable than it would have been had we not been compelled to adopt the high tariff on sugars. The prices which must prevail will stimulate production largely. Southern sugar-planters have no cause of complaint, and could much better afford to pay the internal tax of one cent than to see the tariff reduced to one cent per pound.

Nor have we proposed to change the tax on cotton. This is about the only considerable tax we collect in the South, and I fear not one half of this is actually collected. We collected last year from all sources in the ten States which rebelled $20,599,749 05; but from New England, New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, nine States only, we collected $170,876,246 26, and from nine western States—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, and Kansas—we collected $64,259,662 89.

But for the great crime of the South no tax on cotton would have been required, and now it is very certain that upon what goes abroad foreigners are paying the lion's share of the tax, and as much the largest amount of the remainder is consumed in the loyal States, ultimately southern planters are very lightly charged. What is sold to go abroad is undoubtedly enhanced in price by reason of the tax, but exactly to what extent must at present remain undetermined. Should the tax ever be found oppressive to loyal men it will be repealed. The cotton mills of the South were seldom busier or more profitably employed, and new mills are constantly springing up. Only last week I saw a notice of twelve mills in operation in South Carolina. The time when the South, with the provision in relation to the drawbacks on manufactured goods in force, will be likely to insist upon the perpetuation of all our laws intact on this subject may be assumed to be not more distant than the time of repeal. Other countries have been stimulated by extraordinary prices to increase their production, and with some success, but not much more than equal to the increase of the world's consumption, which appears to be growing with marvelous rapidity. The price also remains dear.

The disposition to understate the crop of cotton is chronic and universal. Last year the amount in the country was so adroitly concealed that the experts were all deceived, and so greatly exceeded expectations that all who laid in stocks for a rise came to grief. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McCulloch, estimated the cotton remaining in the country and the new crop of 1865 at one million three hundred thousand bales, but it proved to be about twice as much, or two million five hundred thousand bales. The Liverpool cotton-brokers estimated the amount which they might receive from America at but little more than half of the amount they got. An accurate inventory even of the stock on hand in Liverpool is a pursuit of knowledge under difficulties. When the price falls the stock is hidden, and only comes out when it is safe to uncover the actual facts. The India crop was similarly underestimated, the public being misled, too, by the Indian government. The amount already brought to the sea-board and the amount of the weekly shipments show that the crop of last year has yet by no means been brought to market, and the expectation of two million bales is likely to be fulfilled. The crop cannot be hidden forever, although both the planters and speculators conspire to mislead. The price is too tempting to allow cotton lands to remain idle. Next year, if the season should not be unpropitious, we may anticipate a handsome increase over the present. The crop of the past year, after paying the three cents per pound tax, will have been sold for three fourths as much in gold as that of the largest crop (1859) ever produced in the United States.

Liverpool is the great cotton market, and although the stock on hand is larger than for five years, yet the price is higher now and growing firmer than it was last May, selling for middling uplands at about twenty-nine cents per pound in gold, and tending upward, and it is selling in New York at thirty-four cents per pound, currency.

The promise for cotton from most other countries for 1867 is not improving. Egypt and Brazil will not increase their crops, notwithstanding the temptation of high prices, and India will, it is estimated, fall short of the crop of the present year by four hundred thousand bales. There is no discouragement in the way of the production of cotton in the United States, and the tax should no sooner be removed from it than that on petroleum.

The manufacture of leather is hardly less extensive than its use. Nearly every State and Territory has more or less capital embarked in its production. The outlay for boots and shoes in the log-cabin is not infrequently greater than in the four-story brown-stone mansion. The harness, trunk, and carriage maker also use it as a raw material, which if taxed duplicates their burdens. Before we were compelled to levy internal taxes we had a prosperous and growing export trade of several millions in boots and shoes, which, of course, must be nearly or quite annihilated by the tax on leather, no part of which could be returned by virtue of a drawback; but with leather free this trade may again have a better chance of being recovered.

Tinware, hollowware, stone and crockery-ware, employing large numbers of workmen, is used by all classes of people for domestic purposes, and by those in moderate circumstances perhaps beyond their fair proportion. If exempting tin pails and tin pans shall tend to diminish the cost of good butter who would be likely to complain?

Last year we exempted all dry casks and barrels; but why should not a pork or beef or oil or fish barrel be free as well as a flour barrel? It is proposed to answer this question by making all the work of the meritorious class of coopers free.

I have before had occasion to say that a tax in the nature of an excise tax on manufactures could have been resorted to only from the imperative necessity of at once placing in the hands of the Government an unusual and large amount of revenue. This resort has been successful. Last year it produced $178,356,661 37. But the exigency has passed, and measures designed to be but temporary must be replaced by others of a more satisfactory character in the speediest time possible. I do not doubt that we shall at a very early day be able to relieve iron, cotton, woolen, and all other general manufactures from any internal tax. It is with this prominent idea that the committee have diligently labored in framing the present bill. A reduction of expenditures and a more effectual collection of taxes on the few articles which the judgment of the world consigns to such burdens will hasten the day when there will be full relief to the industry of the country from all such taxes. Meantime, in addition to concessions in various other directions, it is proposed to reduce the tax on woolen manufactures from five per cent. to two and a half per cent. Some may think that bar-iron should have been liberated instead of woollens, but the tax on bar-iron has been in the form of a specific, and is not now and never has been equal to the ad valorem tax of five per cent." The trade in each branch of business is equally depressed, and the action now proposed will make the distribution of favors not unequal. But a higher motive, perhaps, moved the committee, and that was to place woollen manufactures in the hands of the consumer at reduced cost. By reducing the tax on home manufactures of woollens two and a half per cent. a reduction of the rates otherwise asked for by manufacturers can be made in the duties on imported woollens of five per cent. as an equivalent. This will tend in some degree to satisfy the just claims of consumers. The amount of internal revenue from woollens last year at six per cent. was $8,814,101 08; but in the act of July last it was, with all other manufactures, reduced to five per cent. The loss to the revenue this year by the proposed reduction to two and a half per cent., if our production remained the same, as it is not likely to remain, would be $3,172,542 10.

The revision of the income tax, it will be seen, presents the subject in the main as it was presented last year, or, the differential rate excepted, as it passed the House, though not then accepted by the Senate. That every person should contribute to the support of the Government in the exact ratio of the interests protected by the Government is a principle that will be universally admitted. An income tax is based on this theory, and yet it is beset with all sorts of difficulties in its practical application. Inequalities appear at every step. One man's skill is taxed as much as another man's property. To-day one man pays no income tax, and to-morrow dies leaving a fat estate to his heirs though for the moment it had been unproductive. To-day one man pays a liberal income tax, his brains have given a generous support to a large family, and to-morrow he dies and all his heirs are penniless. An equal income tax in such cases can hardly be reconciled with justice. If an income tax was to continue as a permanent tax it should be based upon the value of the whole property possessed by each person. I am disposed to think, however, that a tax of the vexatious character which must adhere to an income tax should rightfully place it on the list of those to be abandoned first in order after the tax on manufactures has been removed. In fact it is one of the resources which ought not to be appealed to except in great exigencies, but should be held in reserve. No nation can for any length of time afford to tax without exception all its available sources of revenue. Something must be left for extraordinary occasions.

For the present it is merely proposed to amend the income tax and remove from it some of its most exceptionable features. The exemption of $600 is enlarged to $1,000, and, in addition, an allowance is to be made for all rents, taxes, insurance, and repairs. To be taxed at all any person must be in the receipt of something above this minimum amount, and which certainly must be deemed as very liberal, and it will prove a large loss to the Government, as it will exempt entirely the vast majority of persons with moderate means; yet it is believed that the increased amount of the exemption would meet with favor even from a majority of those who will remain subject to the tax. Another change is proposed to relieve the manifest injustice of taxing incomes above $5,000 twice as much as those below; but one rate, and that five per cent., is now recommended. To do more than this is to provoke a controversy as to the constitutional right to do it, and to lodge in the mind of every man, who finds himself as he thinks unjustly oppressed, an excuse for understating his income to such an extent as will avoid the wrong with which he is threatened. To such persons it seems sheer confiscation, and if justifiable to the extent of five per cent. then justifiable to the extent of fifty per cent. They offset wrong for wrong. Few nations tolerate an income tax at all, and there is no nation which has any other than a uniform rate. The Treasury needs money; but on a question of taxation justice must be dealt out with an even hand, and the rule of perfect equality should be as immovable as the poles.

The estimates of the receipts for the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, as recently revised by the Treasury Department and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, reduce the estimates from the sums originally estimated ninety days ago to the following figures, namely:

From customs.....	$130,000,000
From internal revenue.....	240,000,000
From lands.....	1,000,000
From miscellaneous sources.....	20,000,000
Total.....	$391,000,000

This last item will almost entirely depend upon the amount of coin we may have to sell and the premium obtained upon it. Looking at the general depression of trade, as well abroad as at home, and the recent falling off of customs and internal revenue, the revised and reduced estimates would appear to be fully justified. The same revision of the expenditures for the year ending 1868 brings out items to the original estimate already ascertained of not less than $7,000,000, or making the total at $357,247,641 82, besides any claims passed upon by Congress. This leaves to apply on the public debt and for reduction of taxes less than thirty-four million dollars. That some positive sum should be devoted to that object in order to restore our public credit to the level of the world, or even to keep it from sinking below the point at which it now stands, is a principle so plain that it does not seem to require argument so much as correspondent action.

The committee have ventured to use up the entire surplus or margin in various reductions of taxes and exemptions, believing that we have secured such an increase of revenue from other sources, by amendments designed to stop the waste-gates of different portions of the law, as will beyond all doubt leave something to apply on the public debt, provided we pass no bills which throw any considerable additional charges upon the Treasury.

The committee have felt willing for the coming year to give the largest possible amount of relief to the business interests of the country, and have also been willing to so reduce the revenue that no large balance would remain in the Treasury to tempt any one to disregard the wisdom of economy—not that cheese-paring economy which higgles at trifles and then swallows millions, but that which looks to the means of payment for every debt contracted.

Having gone in the line of reduction to the extent as estimated, of $36,730,500, and as far as it is prudent to go, it follows that if any other reduction should be proposed it will be our duty at once to seek something of equal amount to be restored to the list of taxable articles. It is possible, in spite of an earnest solicitude to avoid any mistakes as to what should be relieved from taxation, that the judgment of the House may make a different selection, and any improvements of the bill will be regarded with as much favor by the Committee of Ways and Means as by any other member of the House.

If there are any gentlemen who disbelieve the recitals concerning idle factories, forges, furnaces, and foundries, and who think that we are still on the top-wave of prosperity, and so may be willing to venture a deeper cut into our revenues, I invite them to look at the comparative returns of some of our principal railroads, to the present state of our navigation interests, to the decline in the commerce of our canals, to our diminished export trade in cattle, horses, hogs, beef, butter, cotton, and manufactures of cotton, iron, copper and brass, together with numerous other articles. This is an exposition of which I have the details, but which I shall not, unless compelled to do so, place upon the records. Depressed as trade must be conceded to be, the depression is no greater, perhaps not yet so great, as might have been expected to follow the recent exhaustive struggle of the country. Nor is it at all equal to what has been the experience of Great Britain for the past year, where cholera, cattle plague, cotton famine, bad harvests, and a commercial crisis have all successively culminated; where the bank rate of interest was for three months kept at the ruin point of ten per cent., and where thousands of workmen are now only kept from starvation by daily charities from the Queen as well as those who are hard pushed even to pay their poor rates.

But I am by no means despondent of the future. The people of the South in no long time, it may be hoped, will return to loyalty and the Union, knowing that it is as "fixed as fate or foreknowledge absolute" that this is to be their and our common country and Government forever; a country and Government as formidable in war as beneficent in peace. They will speedily find how much more rapidly will be their growth with free institutions than when linked to one of the last relics of barbarism. They will then have, as we have now, a just pride in all that contributes to the prosperity of the nation, the grandeur of its position, and the splendors of its history. Our facilities for the development of wealth and power can only receive temporary checks, and the load we bear of taxation to-day with some weariness will ere long become light, and in a little more than thirty years, when our people will number one hundred millions, there will not be more than enough left of our public debt to remind our children of the honor of the legacy.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Vermont takes his seat I wish to submit to him one question. If I understand correctly his remarks, this is a bill for revenue alone.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman probably did not hear what I stated. This is not the tariff bill, but the tax bill; and it proposes to reduce taxation.

Mr. LE BLOND. Exactly; but the object is to raise revenue. Now, I will state the inquiry which I desire to submit to the gentleman from Vermont. The latter part of the forty-fifth section provides that—

If the officer having such spirits in charge shall have been unable, for a period of ninety days, to sell the same for the price equal to the tax, such spirits shall be destroyed, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

Now, I would like to know how the gentleman proposes to raise revenue by the destruction of the very article upon which he seeks to raise revenue?

Mr. MORRILL. I was aware that whenever we reached that provision of the bill it would excite the gentleman's regret. [Laughter.]

Mr. LE BLOND. This is only a contest as to locality. We think these rules and regulations are designed to withdraw the liquor into New England, to be consumed in the way of drinking. [Laughter.] That is the only way we in the West can solve the proposition.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield to the gentleman from New York. [Mr. DARLING.]

Mr. DARLING. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to occupy the time of the House with any extended remarks upon this bill. It is to be regretted that the select committee appointed by this House, of which I have the honor to be chairman, have not been able to prepare their report and submit it to the House in advance of the presentation of this bill. That report would have been heretofore presented but for the fact that the labors of the committee are just concluded; and the vast amount of testimony which they have taken and which is just written up requires some days more for examination and analysis and the preparation of a report.

I am glad to see, however, that the Committee of Ways and Means, although there has been no consultation between that committee and the one of which I am chairman, has substantially anticipated in some measure the views which I intended to submit to the House. There is, however, one portion of this bill to which I take exception, although I do not know that at this late period of the session there is time to prepare a bill with sufficient care to embrace in all its details what would be required to give efficiency and force to the provisions of the law. I regard the present system of collecting the tax upon distilled spirits as a perfect failure; and I regret to see that by this bill the Committee of Ways and Means propose to retain substantially the provision of the present law in reference to the appointment of local inspectors for each distillery, these inspectors being paid by the distillers. If the object of the committee had been to facilitate frauds and defeat the collection by the Government of its due amount of revenue, they could not more successfully or skillfully have devised a provision for accomplishing that object.

Now, sir, I contend that it is the duty of the Government in the assessment of internal revenue to impose the highest amount of tax upon such articles as are not necessary for the health, comfort, or existence of the people. If such tax is imposed, and the necessity for it is apparent, the collection of it becomes a necessity, and the creation of law to enforce its collection also becomes a necessity. And if such tax is imposed and is collected the people are released at once from tax upon all articles that do affect their health, comfort, and well-being. I hold it is the duty of the Government to impose upon such articles as distilled spirits and tobacco the highest amount of tax, a tax in the aggregate that will secure to the Government a revenue that will release all other articles from any tax whatever. Until all legislative ability is exhausted, until officers can no longer be found whose fidelity in the discharge of their duty can be relied upon, until every means has been tried, until crime can no longer be discovered and its perpetrators punished, I shall vote for the imposition of that tax.

The honorable chairman of the committee proposes to increase the license of distillers only $500. I hope this House will raise it to $1,000, and I hope the collectors of districts will not be allowed to give a permit for distillation that shall extend for more than three months. If at the end of three months the distiller shall not have demeaned himself properly he shall not have his license renewed, and shall lose the $1,000 paid; and if he has demeaned himself properly he shall have a renewal for three months.

It will be seen at once the appointment of these local inspectors, paid by a distiller, become at once his paid agents and confidential intimate friends. He is his witness, and when he is detected in illicit distillation by outside parties and brought into the Federal courts he brings up this very man appointed by the Government as his witness to defend and protect him. He is his witness, and he cannot be anything but his witness unless he criminales himself, for the moment he complains of any irregularity in that distillery in which he is placed that distillery stops and his pay ceases. The strongest temptation to fraud is held out by the Government when they appoint a man to office under such circumstances.

Gentlemen upon this floor will remember when this subject was before the House at the last session I endeavored faithfully to strike out this provision, in which I was sustained by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky. All I said then, all I predicted then, has come to pass. The law appointing these officers stinks in the nostrils of the people. No man at all familiar with the daily routine and practice of these distilleries in our large cities and towns but knows this is an open door for fraud. This man stands there protecting the distiller in his illicit manufacture.

It is not mandatory on the distiller now to pay a tax, but optional. Under the present system he pays what he thinks will keep the inspector quiet. In one district in Brooklyn in three months subsequent to September thirty-three licensed distilleries, running with a capacity of ten thousand gallons per day, on which the tax would be $20,000 per day, but $3,000 was paid into the Treasury for the whole three months. And since this law has been in effect, three months subsequent to the 1st of September in ten districts in New York, where this system of local inspection is carried out in its most pernicious practice, the revenue from distilled spirits has fallen off half a million dollars in three months. How can you trace a barrel of spirits without a brand? The inspector is aware there is no testimony to criminate him.

I contend this bill should be amended so that those officers should be paid by the Government, and they should not be permitted to remain for any length of time in any one distillery. I am willing to abrogate this whole system. I would reach it in the intermediate result between fermentation and charging the still. I think there can be a system devised, I think science will yet devise a plan, by which we can tax the specific gravity of all the fluid that passes into the still.

Why, sir, we collected tax last year on fourteen million gallons only. In the year 1810 this country distilled over twenty-three million. In 1860 the amount of distilled spirits was ninety million. Now, sir, I contend that the consumption to-day is as large as it was in 1860, if not larger. The demoralization growing out of the war, the taste that has been engendered for the use of ardent spirits, has tended to increase the consumption. At all events, I maintain that the Government does not get more than one eighth of the tax that it would get if the whole of the spirits were reached and the tax imposed. The reason why the Government does not get it is because of this pernicious system of appointing local inspectors in the pay of the distillers, who are their agents and confidential friends and their witnesses interposed between charges against them and the Government to protect them when they are arrested for illicit practices.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the first reading of the bill be suspended.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating all general debate, so as to leave the debate open to the five-minute rule.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that when the House shall again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the special order, all general debate be terminated in ten minutes, and that the debate be under the five-minute rule.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, and particularly House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. McKEE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall occupy the attention of the House for even the ten minutes allowed for general debate. I desire to say a few words in relation to the topic discussed so ably by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DARLING,] and to give my assent to all he has said upon this subject. I have examined this bill thoroughly, and it strikes me that if the committee had sat for six months, and had been the whole time endeavoring to devise a system by which frauds might be perpetrated in the distillation of spirits, they could not have accomplished their work more thoroughly than through this system of appointing an inspector for each distillery. Sir, if I had not had some experience and some personal knowledge of these things my assertions might go for naught. I reside in a district altogether rural, in which there is not a single city, a district where all the distilleries are very small concerns and always have been. I know something about the character of the inspectors who are appointed. The recent investigation of the committee of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DARLING] is chairman must certainly show conclusively that these inspectors are men put over distilleries for the purpose of enabling them to perpetrate frauds rather than prevent them. An inspector who is under no bonds, under no obligations, who owes nothing to anybody, who is accountable to nobody for his action; and, Mr. Speaker, the corruptions of human nature we all know, and it is a fact which these investigations when published will certainly bring to light that in one single distillery—yes, I will venture the assertion in one single distillery in the city of New York or Philadelphia or Brooklyn—more frauds have been perpetrated than in all the small distilleries throughout the length and breadth of the land.

One other point in regard to this measure. It strikes me that it is a law made for one other purpose: to throw the distillation of spirits (which as a branch of manufactures is perhaps more profitable than any other in the country) into the hands of a few men of capital to crush out those who have not large capital, and to prevent the poor man, who would honestly desire to make a few barrels of whisky—which, if any such liquor is fit to drink, is the only kind that is—from pursuing the business of distilling.

So far as I am concerned individually, sir, I cannot be accused of any personal object in this matter, for if I could have my own desire gratified, and could by a single effective law sweep away this whole traffic, I would make the law and strike the blow. But I do not believe such a thing practicable; and if this branch of manufacture, which is a curse to all concerned, is to be indulged in and recognized as a legitimate business, then I protest against this policy, which strikes down the honest poor man and places the whole business in the hands of a few men of moneyed interest. While the possession of money does not necessarily make men rascals or dishonest, I have yet to learn that money alone has ever been found to be a promoter of honesty. Although distilling is a business that I would never engage in, yet I know that as a general thing the men who are engaged in it in a small way are as honest as any in the land; and I do not wish to see them driven out of their business by the power of capital aided by this law.

Again, sir, I repeat that this inspection law, the whole machine from beginning to end, is a measure to create fraud, not to prevent it. It is a law in the interest of a few favored men in this nation, who by their immense capital can establish great concerns and pour out their thousands of barrels of poisonous liquor, which runs daily down the throats of millions, leading them to destruction, and it prevents poor honest men, who would almost of necessity make a pure article, from engaging in the business at all. In my own district the advocates of this measure say that it is to increase the revenue; but the records show that by its operation the revenue has been diminished. Under the operation of the law of 1865 vastly more revenue was collected than has been collected under the operation of the present law. Does any man therefore suppose that less whisky has been made, that less whisky has been drunk, or that less is consumed daily? By no means, sir; the only difference is that much of it is now smuggled under the working of this law. Let the law be open. Put on whatever tax you please, as far as quantity is concerned, but let the law be open.

To show how it affects the revenue, let me give one or two examples. In my own congressional district, under the law of 1865, the revenue collector calculated that it would produce $240,000 revenue. Under the law of 1866, his estimate is that it will produce less than $60,000. And notwithstanding this falling off in revenue more whisky is consumed throughout that section of the country, twice as much, perhaps, as was consumed the preceding year. And is there any less made? Not at all. But this law prevents them from making it in such a manner as that they can report what they do make. I have a letter upon my desk from the collector of that third congressional district. He says that in 1865, under the operation of that law, for the year the total amount of revenue would approximate to two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. Under the operation of the law of 1866 for the next year, the revenue, he says, will fall below seventy-three thousand dollars. Take the State of Kentucky alone, and you will find that under the operation of this inspection law we lose more than six hundred thousand dollars revenue. And the same applies all over the land.

I only make these general remarks in regard to this subject. I believe, as the gentleman from New York has intimated, that a law may be prepared by which we may collect the revenue from this source upon the material which is put in to be manufactured before it goes through the process of fermentation at all; and by doing that we might evade these frauds.

The CHAIRMAN. All general debate is now closed by order of the House. The bill will now be read by sections for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all acts required in relation to the assessment, return, collection, and payment of the income tax, special tax, and other annual taxes now by law required in the month of May, shall hereafter be required on the corresponding days in the month of March in each year; all acts required in the month of June, in relation to the collection, return, and payment of said taxes, shall hereafter be required on the corresponding days of the month of April of each year.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend this section by inserting the words "to be performed" after the word "required," where it first occurs; also to insert the same words before the words "in the month of June."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] that he better modify his amendment so as to insert after the word "required," where it first occurs, the words "to be performed;" and to strike out the words "now by law required," before the words "in the month of May."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman, and modify my amendment accordingly.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would make another suggestion to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] that the better way would be to strike out the word "required" where it first occurs in this section, and insert the words "to be performed" after the word "required" where it next occurs in the section.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think that is still better; and I modify my amendment accordingly.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. McRUER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] if it is the intention of the committee that this section shall apply to the coming months of March and April of this year? The provisions of this law can hardly be known in the States on the Pacific by that time.

Mr. MORRILL. I think there will be no difficulty in having it go into effect at that time.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That apothecaries, butchers, confectioners, and plumbers and gas-fitters, whose annual sales exceed $25,000, shall pay, in addition to the special tax now required by law, one dollar for every $1,000 in excess of said $25,000; and the taxes on such excess shall be assessed and paid in the manner provided in the case of wholesale dealers.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That in all suits or proceedings arising under the internal revenue laws, to which the United States is party, and in all suits or proceedings against a collector or other officer of the internal revenue, wherein a district attorney shall appear for the purpose of prosecuting or defending, it shall be the duty of said attorney immediately at the end of every term of the court in which said suit or proceeding is or shall be instituted, to forward to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a full and particular statement of the condition of all such suits or proceedings appearing upon the docket of said court: Provided, That upon the institution of any such suit or proceeding it shall be the duty of said attorney to report to said Commissioner the full particulars relating to such suit or proceeding; and it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue (with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury) to establish such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the observance of revenue officers, district attorneys, and marshals, respecting suits arising under the internal revenue laws, in which the United States is a party, as may be deemed necessary for the just responsibility of those officers and the prompt collection of all revenues and debts due and accruing to the United States under such laws.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have charge of all lands and other property which have been or shall be assigned, set off, or conveyed, by purchase or otherwise, to the United States, in payment of debts arising under the laws relating to internal revenue, and of all trusts created for the use of the United States, in payment of such debts due them; and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may sell and dispose of lands assigned or set off to the United States in payment of such debts, or being vested in them by mortgage or other security, for the payment of such debts; and in cases where real estate has already become the property of the United States by conveyance or otherwise, in payment of or as security for a debt arising under the laws relating to internal revenue, and such debt shall have been paid, together with the interest thereon, to the United States, within two years from the date of the acquisition of such real estate, it shall be lawful for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to release by deed, or otherwise convey, such real estate to the debtor from whom it was taken, or to his heirs or other legal representatives.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert before the words "to the United States," where they last occur in the section, the words "at the rate of one per cent. per month" as the rate of interest.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "one" and inserting the word "one half," as the rate of interest per month.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, that is precisely the legal rate of interest—six per cent. The object of the amendment which I propose, is that it shall not be to the interest of a debtor to have his property sold and then at the end of two years redeem it by simply paying six per cent. interest.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] whether or not the "debt" referred to in this section does not include whatever penalty may have been assessed? As I understand it, the interest accrues, not only on the amount of taxes, but on the penalty.

Mr. ALLISON. It is quite possible that under certain circumstances the penalty may be included; but in many instances the penalty, from necessity, would be very light. Certainly, if the debtor is allowed the privilege of redeeming his property at the end of two years, he ought to be satisfied to pay one per cent. per month for the time during which he has withheld the money.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend by inserting after the word "of," in the ninth line, the words "at public vendue upon not less than twenty days' notice;" so that the clause will read as follows:

And, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may sell and dispose of at public vendue upon not less than twenty days' notice, lands assigned or set off to the United States in payment of such debts, or being vested in them by mortgage or other security for the payment of such debts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend by inserting after the word "thereon," in the sixteenth line of this section, the words "and all expenses incurred by the Government in collecting said debt;" so that the clause will read as follows:

And in cases where real estate has already become the property of the United States by conveyance or otherwise, in payment of or as security for a debt arising under the laws relating to internal revenue, and such debt shall have been paid, together with the interest thereon, and all expenses incurred by the Government in collecting said debt.

Mr. HILL. I desire to inquire of my colleague whether this amount is intended to include such expenses as compensation of detectives, fees of counsel, &c., or whether it simply is designed to include what is understood by "costs?"

Mr. FARQUHAR. The object of the amendment is to cover all the legitimate expenses which the Government is necessarily obliged to incur in the prosecution of the suit, and the disposal of the property. I do not understand that the amendment which has been adopted includes these expenses. It simply covers the interest upon the money during the time for which the use of it has been enjoyed.

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. The proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARQUHAR] is too indefinite. It uses the term "expenses." Now, what are "expenses?" Does the term include attorneys' fees, the compensation of detectives, and costs of court, or what does it mean? In my view, it is better in all such cases as this that there should be a specific amount fixed as a penalty, so that the debtor may know what he is obliged to pay and the Government what it has the right to demand. I am opposed to the amendment because of the uncertainty of its language.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "expenses," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "costs." The latter is the legal word and is well understood.

Mr. FARQUHAR. This is designed to include more than mere costs.

Mr. MILLER. I move to amend by adding "all costs and necessary expenses."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order. An amendment to the amendment is already pending.

Mr. ALLISON. I think, Mr. Chairman, that neither of these amendments should be adopted. The provision of this section is intended only to cover a class of cases in which the Government makes a compromise with the delinquent party or where property has been sold upon execution or process of a court. Of course whatever sum the property may sell for would include the proper costs of the suit, and would be a part of the debt due to the Government. It seems to me, therefore, the section is as well as it could be with any amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MAYNARD's amendment to the amendment was disagreed to; and then Mr. FARQUHAR's was also rejected.

Mr. COOPER. I move to amend by inserting in line seventeen of section four, after the word "estate," the words "by the debtor, his heirs, assigns, or other legal representatives, or any mortgagee or judgment creditor of the debtor;" and inserting in line twenty-one, section four, after the word "representatives," the words "mortgagee or judgment creditor so redeeming."

The object of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to confer upon the creditor of the debtor the same right to redeem that the debtor has. Of course the only object the Government has in view is the security of the debt for which the real estate has been taken. If it can get its money from any source it is that much to the advantage of the Government; so that by giving the judgment creditor of the debtor the right to redeem you thereby furnish additional means to the Government to get its money.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to insert "mortgagee" before "judgment creditor."

Mr. COOPER. I accept it.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to oppose the amendment. This amendment should not be adopted for various reasons. This is a personal privilege tendered for the benefit of the debtor and his creditors. If a judgment creditor shall have the benefit, which one shall it be? Suppose a judgment creditor proposes to come in and redeem in three months, what will become of the debtor and his creditors? It seems to me this should be confined to the debtor and his representatives.

Mr. INGERSOLL. It is variously understood as to whether the first amendment of the gentleman from Iowa was considered as adopted or rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. It was adopted.

Mr. INGERSOLL. It was understood by the gentleman from Iowa to have been rejected, and he withdrew his amendment. The Chair announced 40 in the affirmative and 44 in the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. It was 44 in the affirmative and 40 in the negative. The Chair understood the objection was withdrawn, and the amendment was declared adopted. If there is doubt, however—

Mr. INGERSOLL. There is doubt, and I ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he did not understand the amendment to be rejected?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois can have a vote on the amendment in the House.

The pending amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PAINE. I move to strike out the word "being" in line ten.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That if it shall at any time be ascertained that the manufacturer of any article upon which a tax is required to be paid by means of a stamp, shall have sold or removed for sale any such articles without the use of the proper stamp, in addition to the penalties now imposed by law for such sale or removal, it shall be the duty of the proper assessor or assistant assessor, upon such information as he can obtain, to assume and estimate the amount of the tax which has been omitted to be paid, and to make an assessment therefor, and certify the same to the collector; and it shall also be the duty of the proper assessor or assistant assessor in like manner to assume and estimate the amount of taxes which may be due from any manufacturer of distilled spirits on account of any spirits manufactured by him upon which the tax has not been paid, and to make the proper assessment therefor, and the subsequent proceedings for collection shall be in all respects like those for the collection of taxes upon manufactures and productions.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend in the first and second lines by striking out after the word "that" the words "it shall be at any time ascertained that."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move at the close of the section to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no tax shall be collected on any spirits manufactured in the State of Tennessee and disposed of by the manufacturers before the 1st day of August, 1866.

I beg the attention of the House to the reasons for this amendment. There are a great many small distilleries in Tennessee that make but a few barrels of spirits. They were in operation before any system of internal revenue was extended to that section by the appointment of assessors and collectors. The distillers were in fact ignorant of the provisions of internal revenue law. Most of the time they were under military rule and were regulated by what were called permits. The liquor was made and sold at prices not exceeding a dollar or a dollar and a half a gallon, and was actually consumed in the neighborhood. Now, to impose a tax upon those people for their arrearages would, as they are men of small means, break up and destroy their business. I have had a communication from the assessor in my own district urging as a matter of justice that prior to the time fixed by this bill the tax should not be imposed upon liquors that were not then in the hands of the manufacturers, such as have been disposed of and consumed. The amount of revenue raised by the Government, if we attempt to pursue these people, will be very small, and to impose this tax would be a great hardship. We had no internal revenue officers there to enforce the law and the manufacturers were in fact ignorant of it. I have seen letters from persons engaged in this business desiring to know whether the law imposes a tax of two dollars a gallon. I trust they may be relieved from the imposition of this tax so far as I have proposed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman to waive this and let the committee consult the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and bring it in again at another point.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I suggest to the gentleman to have it read "disposed of by the manufacturer and consumer." [Laughter.]

Mr. DARLING. If it is consumed, how can you collect the tax on it? The gentleman complains of this being a hardship. Now, all taxes are hardships as a matter of course. Tennessee is reconstructed, and I think she ought to be willing to pay her share of the tax. I see no reason why there should be exemption or discrimination in regard to that State. The tax should bear equally on all sections. There will of course be hardships in individual cases, but that cannot be avoided.

Mr. MAYNARD. For the purpose of answering the gentleman, I move to strike out the last word. The state of things in Tennessee is unlike that of any other State. The liquor manufactured by these men was actually sold for much less than the amount of tax, while there was no officer there to make the demand for the tax. Now, it is proposed to send an assessor to impose this tax, which will be unjust and ruinous to the manufacturers.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask by general consent that we pass over this section until to-morrow, in order to have the committee confer and consider it, leaving the amendment to be renewed if necessary.

No objection being made, the section was accordingly passed over with that understanding.

Mr. BEAMAN. I ask leave to suggest another amendment, by striking out in line eight and also in line twelve the words "assume and." I only make the suggestion.

Mr. PAINE. Is it understood that this section is passed over with a view of returning to it for the purpose of making any amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whenever he shall deem it expedient, to designate one or more of the assistant assessors in any collection district to make assessments in any part of such collection district for all such taxes as may be due upon any specified objects of taxation, and in such case it shall be the duty of the other assistant assessors of such collection district to report to the assistant assessor thus specifically designated all matters which may come to their knowledge relative to any assessments to be made by him: Provided, That whenever two or more districts or parts of districts are embraced within one county it may be lawful for such assistant assessor or assessors to make assessment anywhere within such county upon such specified objects of taxation as he may be by said Commissioner required: Provided further, That such assessment shall be returned to the assessor of the district in which such taxes are payable.

No amendment being offered to the above section,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to pay such sums, not exceeding in the aggregate the amount appropriated therefor, as may in their judgment be deemed necessary for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws, or conniving at the same in cases where such expenses are not otherwise provided for by law. And for this purpose there is hereby appropriated $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

No amendment being offered to the above section,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That hereafter for any failure to pay any internal revenue tax at the time and in the manner required by law, where such failure creates a liability to pay a penalty of ten per cent. additional upon the amount of tax so due and unpaid, the person or persons so failing or neglecting to pay said tax, instead of ten per cent. as aforesaid, shall pay a penalty of five per cent., together with interest at the rate of one per cent. per month upon said tax from the time the same became due, but no interest for any fraction of a month shall be demanded.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read the first clause of section nine, as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as amended by the act approved July 13, 1866, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows, namely:

That section twenty-two be amended by striking out after the words "assistant assessor" and before the word "actually" the words "four dollars for every day," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "five dollars for every day;" and further, by striking out the following words: "And assistant assessors may be allowed, in the settlement of their accounts, such sum as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall approve, not exceeding $300 per annum for office rent; but no account for such office rent shall be allowed or paid until it shall have been verified in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require, and shall have been audited and approved by the proper officers of the Treasury Department; and assistant assessors, when employed outside of the town in which they reside, in addition to the compensation which they are now allowed by law, shall, during such time so employed, receive one dollar per day." This amendment shall take effect upon compensation for the month of March, 1867, and thereafter.

Mr. McRUER. I move to amend this clause by striking out "$300" and inserting "$1,000" as the salary of the assistant assessor.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is merely the portion of the section of the present law which this bill proposes to strike out. The gentleman does not certainly propose to amend that portion of the law which we propose to strike out.

Mr. McRUER. I was under a misapprehension; I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL,] or some other gentleman, what is the meaning of this clause; whether or not it increases the pay of the assistant assessor?

Mr. MORRILL. It leaves the pay about the same as it is now by law; only it makes it five dollars per day without any allowance for rent.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I withdraw my amendment.

No further amendment being offered,
The Clerk read as follows:

That section seventy-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person who shall exercise or carry on any trade, business, or profession, or do any act hereinafter mentioned, for the exercising, carrying on, or doing of which a special tax is imposed by law, without payment thereof, as in that behalf required, shall, for every such offense, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be subject to a fine of not less than ten nor more than five hundred dollars. And if such person shall be a manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or a distiller or a rectifier, or a wholesale or retail dealer in liquor, he shall be further liable to imprisonment for a term not less than sixty days and not exceeding two years.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to amend this clause by striking out the words:

And if such person shall be a manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or a distiller or rectifier, or a wholesale or retail dealer in liquor, he shall be further liable to imprisonment for a term not less than sixty days and not exceeding two years.

I am not aware that it is any more of a crime to carry on the business of manufacturing tobacco, snuff, or cigars, without paying the license therefor than it would be to carry on the business of the practice of law or of medicine or of any other employment or profession for which a license is required. Neither can I discover any necessity on the part of the Government to impose a severer punishment upon persons in this particular business who violate the law than upon persons in any other business. It is not a kind of employment which can be carried on with any more secrecy than many other kinds of employment, or an employment that works any greater detriment to the public interest than many other kinds of employment. It would seem to be a reflection by this House upon a great number of respectable men all over the country, but more particularly in the cities, who are engaged in this particular branch of business. I cannot see any reason for it, either in the way of benefit to the revenue or for the suppression of crime, if this is to be regarded in that light.

I hope, therefore, either that the part I have indicated will be stricken out or that the section will be so amended as to make the extreme punishment which is attempted to be affixed to this particular branch of business applicable to a violation of the license law in respect to all other classes of business.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] will not be adopted. It is very well known that the two articles mentioned in this clause, which ought to furnish us the largest portion of our internal revenue, are the most subject to frauds of any articles in the whole list; and that just in proportion as the tax is made high on any particular article just in that proportion is the temptation to defraud. And as a matter of fact the interest of the Government in every gallon of whisky paying tax is very much greater than the interest which the owner or manufacturer has in it. The facilities for concealing all the operations connected with manufacturing tobacco or cigars or distilling whisky are so very great that without the most stringent regulations it is found absolutely impossible to collect the tax. I trust, therefore, that this amendment will not prevail, but that we shall incorporate in this bill all possible safeguards for the interest of the Government. Now, in some courts it has been found that the judges, in pronouncing sentence for a violation of the law in this respect, have imposed punishments merely nominal, as for instance, one day's imprisonment or six cents fine. Thus in many cases the judges have absolutely encouraged violations of the law. It is found necessary, therefore, that instead of leaving it optional with the judge to impose either punishment we should provide for the infliction of both, taking care that they shall not be so light as to encourage the violators of the law. I trust that the provisions as reported may be sustained by the judgment of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to move an amendment which, as it proposes to perfect the text of the bill, takes precedence of the motion to strike out the whole clause. I move to amend by striking out in the thirty-seventh line the words "or a distiller, or a rectifier." These words are unnecessary, as the matter is provided for in another portion of the bill.

Before taking my seat, I desire to say a few words on the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] The fact is that a large number of persons, especially in the gentleman's own State, succeed in carrying on illegally the business, for instance, of a liquor-dealer, yet when an attempt is made to subject them to the penalty of the law the district judge imposes a merely nominal fine. Unless we specify in the law a minimum amount of fine and a minimum term of imprisonment, there must continue to be an utter evasion of the law. It is suggested to me by a gentleman here that on the question of drinking the inclination of the bench harmonizes with the interest of the retail liquor dealers. [Laughter.] It is perfectly apparent that if the present law is continued, without some such amendment as we now propose, persons in certain localities may carry on the business of selling tobacco or cigars or whisky while refusing to pay any tax. If we would protect the honest dealers who pay the tax we must enforce some adequate penalty upon those who do not pay it.

The amendment of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. HUMPHREY, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to amend by adding at the end of the thirty-ninth line the words "and until the fine is paid."

Mr. Chairman, I think experience has shown that unless you enforce the payment of these fines by imprisonment, continuing until they are paid, they never are collected. This is the fact as it is found to exist by the select committee who have examined this subject. If you would enforce properly your revenue laws you must provide that where the penalty is a fine, accompanied with imprisonment, the imprisonment shall continue until the fine is paid.

Mr. PAINE. It seems to me that if the amendment of the gentleman from New York is to be adopted, we should change the phraseology of the clause; because unless this change be made it will provide for imprisonment "not exceeding two years," but which is to continue "until the fine is paid." I suggest to the gentleman from New York to include in his amendment a further modification of the language of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be open to amendment if this amendment is agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Suppose he is not able to pay it. I move to amend by saying not exceeding ten years. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. The party may be fined or imprisoned. Suppose he is fined?

Mr. DARLING. Then imprisonment can be added by the judge if he regards the case of so flagrant a character as to need further punishment. The fine does not exceed in any case $500.

Mr. ALLISON. While I agree with the gentleman from New York we should require stringent provisions, it does seem to me the amendment proposed by him should not be adopted. We have stricken out from this provision distillers and rectifiers of whisky.

Mr. DARLING. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "dollars," in line thirty-five, insert the word "or;" strike out the words, "and if such person shall be a manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or a distiller or a rectifier, or a wholesale or retail dealer in liquor, he shall be further liable;" and at the end of line thirty-nine insert "or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court;" so that it will read:

That section seventy-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That any person who shall exercise or carry on any trade, business, or profession, or do any act hereinafter mentioned, for the exercising, carrying on, or doing of which a special tax is imposed by law, without payment thereof, as in that behalf required, shall, for every such offense, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be subject to a fine of not less than ten nor more than five hundred dollars, or to imprisonment for a term not less than sixty days, and not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. Chairman, as I have already suggested, it seems to me perfectly proper and right to strike out this last provision making a distinction in punishment between the man who commits one crime and he who commits another. The committee seem to be opposed to that on the theory that the kinds of employment provided for in this last clause may require greater punishment than some other kinds of employment for which licenses must be procured before any one can engage in them.

I desire for the purpose of removing one invidious distinction between people engaged in different classes of business to have this amendment adopted. It will relieve us from manifest inconsistency in determining by legislative action that a man who commits crime in one respect is not as guilty as a man who commits crime in another branch of business. It seems to me they should all be put upon the same level; and that we should therefore strike out this particular class of persons. Let this severe punishment attempted to be applied to certain classes be applied to all who are required to take out licenses, leaving to the discretion of the court to apply it when a case comes up considered as requiring as extreme a penalty as this.

Mr. GARFIELD. The thing we have tried to avoid is to leave this matter to the discretion of certain courts that have used their discretion in a bad way. The gentleman asks what was voted down a few minutes ago; and I hope that it will be voted down again.

Mr. NOELL. I move to strike out the whole clause.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. NOELL. I move to strike out the last word and to insert the amendment I shall indicate. A few days ago it was ascertained that the judicial tribunals of the southern States did not dispense justice fairly and impartially, and we therefore established military governments there. From what has been said by the gentleman from New York it is very clear that the judges of that State are not doing their duty faithfully by the loyal people. Therefore I move that in lieu of this proposition General Grant be directed to detail a brigadier general to enforce the revenue laws of the State of New York.

Mr. MORRILL. It is not the intention to detain the committee longer than to reach the next section of the bill. The proposition of the gentleman from New York is objectionable. It is very important to know who these parties are who deal in these articles. Great frauds are committed by the makers of tobacco and cigars and dealers in liquor, and if we can fix their places of business by the fact of their taking a license we may track something into their hands. And it is very proper we should make a discrimination in reference to manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, and dealers in liquor, for the reason that more frauds are practiced in that direction than in almost any other, and we are not able as yet to collect anything like half the amount of revenue we were ought to receive from that quarter.

Mr. NOELL withdrew his amendment.

The amendment of Mr. HUMPHREY was disagreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to amend by inserting after "$500" the words "and shall be imprisoned until such fine is paid not exceeding one year;" also by striking out the words immediately following, "and if said person," and inserting in lieu of the same the words "provided he;" also by striking out the words at the close of the paragraph, "he shall be further liable to imprisonment for a term not less than sixty days and not exceeding two years;" so that the paragraph, as amended, will read as follows:

That any person who shall exercise or carry on any trade, business, or profession, or do any act herein-after mentioned, for the exercising, carrying on, or doing of which a special tax is imposed by law, without payment thereof, as in that behalf required, shall, for every such offense, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be subject to a fine of not less than ten nor more than $500, and shall be imprisoned until such fine is paid, provided he shall be a manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or a distiller or a rectifier, or a wholesale or retail dealer in liquor.

Mr. THAYER. I rise to oppose the amendment. It is a very extraordinary legislation, such I am sure as never was sought to be put in any law-book in this country. For a mere omission or oversight, accidentally made, with no intention to evade the law, a citizen of the United States is to be imprisoned, without any discretion on the part of the court that tries him, by an inflexible law which admits of no moderation. If anything like that can be pointed to in the legislation of any State in this country I would like the gentleman from New York to show it. In my judgment it is a most cruel and unwise proposition.

Mr. DARLING. The party can escape imprisonment by payment of the fine.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1161, had come to no resolution thereon.

WAR DEBTS OF THE LOYAL STATES.

The SPEAKER. The House now resumes the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 998, in regard to the war debts of the loyal States, was recommended to the committee, on which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] is entitled to the floor, he having called up the motion at the adjournment of the House this afternoon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at ten o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CONKLING: The petition of merchants of New York, praying that goods, wares, and merchandise shall only pay duty on amount withdrawn; and that tea, coffee, sugar, spices, and the raw produce of the East Indies shall not pay the ten per cent. additional duty if they remain one year in bond.

By Mr. COBB: The remonstrance of citizens of Potosi, Grant county, Wisconsin, against all tinkering with the currency.

By Mr. CULLOM: A petition signed by a large number of citizens of McLean county, Illinois, asking Congress to repeal the law authorizing the withdrawal of the national legal tenders from circulation.

By Mr. FERRY: The petition of F. B. Wilcox, L. G. Mason, T. J. Rand, J. N. Hackley, and 50 others, citizens of Muskegon, Michigan, protesting against any material curtailment of the currency.

By Mr. LARLIN: The petition of S. H. Sherman and 46 others, citizens of Watertown, Jefferson county, New York, adverse to the withdrawal of national bank currency from circulation.

Also, the petition of Isaac H. Fisk and 40 others, citizens of Watertown, Jefferson county, New York, against withdrawal of national bank currency from circulation.

Also, the petition of V. S. Kenyon and 12 others, citizens of Newport, Herkimer county, New York, adverse to withdrawal of national bank currency from circulation.

By Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts: The petition of Henry Cook and 25 others, citizens of South

Danvers, Massachusetts, against the passage of the Randall bank bill.

Also, the petition of Francis Boker and 31 others, citizens of South Danvers, for the same purpose.

Also, the petition of Charles H. Fabens and 56 others, citizens of Salem, Massachusetts, for the same purpose.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 13, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with by unanimous consent.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. DIXON presented the credentials of Hon. Orris S. Ferry, chosen by the Legislature of Connecticut a Senator from that State for the term of six years, commencing March 4, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WADE presented a telegraphic dispatch addressed to the President pro tempore of the Senate, communicating resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Arrapaho county, in the Territory of Colorado, in favor of the admission of that Territory into the Union as a State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of a grant of lands to that State for the benefit of the Freedmen's University; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. POMEROY presented a petition of loyal citizens of Arkansas now in the city of Washington, praying that the bill (H. R. No. 1162) for the reestablishment of civil government in the State of Louisiana pending in the Senate may be so amended as to make its provisions applicable to the State of Arkansas; which was referred to the joint Committee on Reconstruction.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to present a letter of James E. Yeatman, of St. Louis, Missouri, in reference to the poverty, destitution, and suffering of the southern people. It is a letter addressed to me, though it might properly have been put in the shape of a petition or memorial to Congress. Mr. Yeatman is a gentleman well known. He was in the southern States during a large part of the time that elapsed from the fall of Memphis to the close of the war, and is well acquainted with the subjects he writes about. As this letter contains a good deal of information that may be of importance to the Senate, I move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented a memorial of citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against any curtailment of the national currency with a view of a return to specie payments within a limited time, and against the passage of any act requiring the national banks to redeem their circulation in New York, or prohibiting them from paying or receiving interest on bank balances; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORGAN presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in favor of a conveyance by the commissioners of the land office in that State, and the commissioners of the sinking fund of that city, to the United States of a portion of what is known as the battery extension, and recommending an appropriation by Congress to complete the improvements and buildings upon the land so conveyed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUCKALEW presented a petition of seamen, firemen, coal-passers, and marines who served in the Navy during the rebellion, praying to be allowed a bounty of \$8 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  per month during their term of service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Northampton county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against any curtailment of the national currency with the view of a return to specie payments within a limited time, and against the passage of any act requiring the national banks to redeem their circulation in New York, or prohibiting them from paying or receiving interest on bank balances; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1162) for the reestablishment of civil government in the State of Louisiana, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 247) for the relief of James Keenan; and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

RECONSTRUCTION OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. WADE. I move to postpone all other business and proceed to the consideration of the bill just received from the House of Representatives for the reorganization of the State of Louisiana, and I hope we shall take it up; it is among the most important business that we have or can have before us, in my judgment, at this session, and it should supersede for the present all other business until it is passed. I hope we shall proceed to consider it. I will take occasion to say now that there is so small a part of the session left and such an immense press of business that I hope we shall all—and I promise to do so myself as much as I urge it upon others—be as brief in our arguments as possible, for we shall not get through the business pressing upon us unless we study brevity. We have already established our names for being good talkers. Now, sir, I want it established through the country that we are energetic for action as well as for anything else. I hope we shall take up this bill and pass it. I make that motion.

Mr. LANE. I hope this bill will not be taken up, at least until the morning business is through. I wish to present some reports from my committee to have them printed so as to have them ready for action to-morrow night. I hope there will be no motion to postpone the regular business until the morning business is through.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish to inquire what is the precise order of business at this moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. By the rules of the Senate it is the duty of the Presiding Officer, after the Senate comes to order, to call for petitions and memorials, then for reports from committees, then for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, then for resolutions. That is the order by the rules of the Senate for the morning. The Chair has very frequently pursued that course when Senators have risen to make a motion to take up some other business, but is, of course, aware (or at least thinks that to be the correct rule) that if any Senator persists in a motion to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of any particular bill, it is the duty of the Chair to entertain the motion; and governed by that rule if at this time a motion is made to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Ohio, the Chair will entertain the motion and put it to the Senate; otherwise he will proceed with the morning business under the rules of the Senate, as is the duty of the Chair. If the Senator from Ohio makes this motion the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. WADE. I make the motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Wait till one o'clock.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not now?

Mr. TRUMBULL. We wish to get through with the morning business.

Mr. WADE. I feel myself that this is the most important business, as I said before, that we can have; and if it should be put under debate, as questions of this importance generally have been here, we shall not be able to act upon it this session, and I cannot understand why Senators should persist upon proceeding with the morning business, which certainly can be postponed with less detriment to the public than this bill. I hope there will be no opposition to it, that we shall take it up and pass upon it. It is under the control of the Senate, I suppose.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will suggest—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the Senate postpone the present and all prior orders of business and proceed to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Ohio, just received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will suggest to the Senator that very likely all petitions and reports would have been presented and made by this time if he had allowed us to go on. They will take but a short time.

Mr. LANE. I shall oppose this motion at present, and I am as anxious to take this bill up as anybody else. I have four or five pension bills here to report and some reports to submit which I wish to have printed by to-morrow, as to-morrow evening is set apart for the consideration of bills of that character, and it will not take one minute to introduce the whole of them, and thus get rid of the morning business.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Ohio is not more anxious than I am to proceed to the consideration of the bill that he has mentioned; but in the morning hour, when our tables are crowded, and we have all brought in our petitions and reports that will take but little time to get rid of, I do think we shall gain time by allowing us to clear our tables. I hope the Senator will allow us to do that, and then we shall take up the bill referred to. It will take but a few minutes to do as I have suggested, and probably we should have got through with the morning business before now. Just allow us to dispose of the business upon our tables, and then we can take up the bill. I hope the Senator will not persist in his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire whether under the rules a House bill can be considered, if there be any objection, on the day that it is received in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be read once; that is all, if objection be made.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I object to any further consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not yet before the Senate; it is not yet subject to objection. The motion is to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When the objection is available I shall put it in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, which is that the Senate postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire simply to say that everybody knows that I feel a deep interest in the bill that comes up at one o'clock; it is the regular order, and under ordinary circumstances I should vote against this motion in order to go on with the consideration of that bill; but I regard the bill now attempted to be taken up by the Senator from Ohio as of such momentous importance, such national consequence, that although I am aware that it will displace that bill I shall be compelled to vote for the Senator's motion.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fogg, Foster, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Edmunds, Fessenden, Guthrie, McDougall, Nye, Riddle, Ross, and Saulsbury—10.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1162) for the reestablishment of civil government in the State of Louisiana was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to the further consideration of the bill to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill lies over.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1149) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations," &c., approved July 28, 1866, giving additional bounties to discharged soldiers in certain cases, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolutions, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 595) to regulate the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freedmen's Bureau;

A bill (H. R. No. 1128) to authorize the payment of prize money to certain officers and enlisted men of the signal corps of the Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 1135) to extend to general officers and officers on the retired list the benefits of the additional ration for every five years' service;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Stephen E. Jones; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of Walter C. Whitaker.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolutions, reported adversely thereon, and moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to, namely:

A bill (S. No. 588) to restore the jurisdiction of Indian affairs to the Department of War;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 259) of thanks of Congress to Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War; Major General M. C. Meigs, Quartermaster General; and Brevet Lieutenant Colonel James M. Moore, Assistant Quartermaster;

A bill (H. R. No. 1140) to repeal the twelfth section of an act approved July 17, 1862, entitled "An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes;"

A bill (H. R. No. 879) relating to brevets in the Army of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1129) providing for the issue of certificates of service to officers and soldiers of volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1138) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1849;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 202) in relation to brevet appointments and commissions in the United States Army; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 276) directing the Secretary of War to furnish certain muster-rolls to the different States.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. No. 1139) for the relief of Captain David Beaty's company of independent scouts, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 166) providing for the payment of the Tennessee home guards, organized under the authority of Major General Burnside, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 262) for the payment of Captain James Kelley, sixteenth United States infantry, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 495) authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the claim of D. Randolph Martin, assignee of the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Railroad Company.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 563) supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonment for debt, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 561) to provide for the appointment of a marshal for the District of Columbia and to change the mode of appointing that officer, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that bill will not be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The United States marshal here is not an officer of the District; he is an officer of the United States. The subject-matter of the bill I think properly belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POLAND. We understood that there was a bill before the District Committee involving the same subject. This bill proposes to change the mode of appointment of the marshal and give it to the court of this District. The Committee on the Judiciary thought it more appropriate that such a matter should be considered by the District Committee.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred a bill (S. No. 559) in relation to guardians of minors in the District of Columbia, their appointment, powers, and duties, and a bill (S. No. 560) to create the office of surrogate of the District of Columbia, provide for the appointment of a surrogate, and define his powers and duties, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; which was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 608) to protect the rights of action of loyal citizens, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolution, reported them severally without amendment.

A bill (H. R. No. 1125) granting an additional pension to Samuel Downing, one of the last surviving soldiers of the revolutionary war.

A bill (H. R. No. 1146) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Fletcher; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 171) for the relief of Martha McCook.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following petitions, submitted adverse reports, which were ordered to be printed: the petition of Elizabeth J. Manning, widow of Captain Henry W. Manning, late of the sixty-first regiment Illinois volunteers; the petition of Levi C. Masson; the petition of Mary G. Harris, widow of the late Colonel John Harris, of the Marine corps; and the petition of Mary Loup, widow of Constance Loup.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 598) for the relief of Elias Beale, late captain of company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a petition of jurors serving in the United States courts for the eastern district of Michigan, praying for an increase of compensation to jurors serving in the United States courts, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 430) to regulate the civil service of the United States and promote the efficiency thereof, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the memorial of William H. Harmon, praying to be relieved from the payment of certain taxes, reported a bill (S. No. 598) for the relief of William H. Harmon; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jane Newall, praying compensation for the loss of a steamboat, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 589) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Theological Institute," and to define and extend the powers of the same, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 570) extending the time for the completion of certain street railways, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 569) to authorize the formation of corporations for manufacturing, mining, mechanical, or chemical purposes in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 258) to punish for the removal of dead bodies from the grave or other place of interment in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 356) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and the criers of the courts of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 431) for the punishment of certain crimes therein named in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Logan Huntton, of Missouri, praying extra compensation for services in connection with the prosecution of certain violations of the neutrality laws, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred sundry memorials of the citizens of Little Rock, Arkansas, remonstrating against any legislation to remedy any defect in tax sales at that place in May, 1865, for non-payment of the United States direct tax, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) to pay Lieutenant John H. Hamlin for military services, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1099) providing for the election of a Congressional Printer, reported it with amendments, and gave notice that he would call it up to-morrow.

COMPENSATION TO VERMONT SENATORS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have instructed me to report back, with an amendment, a resolution providing for the payment to Senator Collamer's widow of the amount of compensation due him at the time of his death; and I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Mary N. Collamer, widow of Hon. Jacob Collamer, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Vermont, the amount of compensation due the deceased at the time of his death, according to the act of the last session increasing the compensation of members of Congress.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the words "contingent fund of the Senate," and in lieu thereof to insert "fund for compensation and mileage."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I of course have no objection to Mrs. Collamer receiving every thing she is entitled to receive; but I rise to inquire whether or not the late Mr. Collamer was at any time a member of the present Congress? If so, I think his widow would be entitled to receive the increased compensation given to members of the present Congress up to the time of his death.

Mr. CRESWELL. He was here at the called session.

Mr. POLAND. He was a member of the present Congress, and died in November, 1865. We consider the present Congress as commencing on the 4th of March, 1865.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will simply say that I referred to the pay clerk of the Senate, who made the computation from the time that the law went into effect up to the time that Mr. Collamer died.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The law took effect from the beginning of the Congress, and he was a member of the Congress?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was all I wished to be certain of.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a similar resolution in favor of Mrs. Foot, have directed me to report it back with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Mary Foot, widow of Hon. Solomon Foot, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Vermont, the amount due the deceased at the time of his death for compensation, according to the act of the last session increasing the compensation of members of Congress.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out "contingent fund of the Senate" and insert "fund for compensation and mileage."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am in favor of the resolution; but it occurs to me that the Senate have no right to order money to be paid out of the fund designated. I think that can only be done by an act of Congress. We have control over our contingent fund, and I think the ordinary form of resolutions of this kind is to direct the payment of the money out of the contingent fund. I merely make this suggestion to the Senator from Oregon in order that he may consider the point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not particularly advised upon the subject. I referred to the pay clerk of the Senate about this matter, and he advised me that the amendment of the resolution ought to be made so as to pay the money out of the compensation and mileage fund, and not out of the contingent fund.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have several times made the point on the House of Representatives that they had no right to pay their employés extra compensation without the consent of the Senate. They attempted to do it, and the Senate refused to allow it. I submit the point as a question of law; neither House can direct money to be paid out of the Treasury except in pursuance of law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not quite clear that the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio is correct. The law appropriates a certain amount of money for the compensation and mileage of Senators, and it seems to me it is proper for the Senate to say how that money shall be distributed among Senators. The resolution does not add anything to the appropriation, but simply directs how the money shall be paid out of the appropriation which has been already paid.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not very clear about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If there be any question about it I will let the resolution lie over until to-morrow, and in the mean time look at the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. WILLIAMS subsequently said: I move now to proceed to the consideration of the resolution in regard to Mrs. Foot. Senators are satisfied that the resolution is in proper form. It simply designates the person who shall receive a certain amount of money due out of the compensation and mileage fund already appropriated.

The resolution was passed.

LARCENY OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 604. It is one of general importance, but will not take a minute. I have postponed calling it up for some time at the request of one of the members of the Judiciary Committee of the House; but it is desirable to have the bill disposed of now.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 604) to define and punish certain crimes therein named was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting as a substitute:

That if any person shall rob another, lawfully in the custody thereof, of any kind or description of personal property belonging to the United States, or shall feloniously take and carry away the same, the person so offending shall, on conviction, be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor not less than one nor more than ten years, or by both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 599) relinquishing the claim of the United States to certain real estate in Washington city of which Caroline Hill died seized; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 600) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the city of Lawrence, in the State of Kansas, to the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, in the direction of the city of Guaymas, on the Gulf of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. WADE, the bill (S. No. 501) amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864, was recommended to the Committee on Territories.

RECONSIDERATION OF A VOTE.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men was indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

SURVEY OF UPPER MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. RAMSEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand copies of the report of Major General G. K. Warren of the survey of the Upper Mississippi river, be printed for the use of the Senate.

CONSULAR FEES, ETC.

Mr. FOGG submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to the Senate the several amounts of money reported as received for fees by the several American consuls general, consuls, consular and commercial agents, and all other agents of the Treasury Department in Europe during each of the four years preceding June 30, 1866; also the several amounts of money for salaries, compensation, and expenses of every description required to maintain such officers and agents during the four years above named.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 6, copies of correspondence on the subject of grants to American citizens for railroad and telegraph lines across the territory of the republic of Mexico; which was ordered to be printed, and lie on the table.

PAINTING FOR SENATE CHAMBER.

Mr. STEWART. I beg leave to offer the following resolution, and to ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of contracting with Frank Buckser for two or more paintings for the panels of the Senate Chamber.

Mr. SUMNER. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the consideration of the resolution, it must lie over under the rules.

CLAIMS OF LOYAL TENNESSEANS.

Mr. PATTERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to the Senate by whose authority the military commission was established in Nashville, Tennessee, during the war, for the adjudication of claims of loyal citizens of Tennessee for property taken for the use of the Army, together with the names of the commissioners and claimants, and the amount of the several claims adjudicated.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 840) for the relief of the sureties of James T. Pollock, late receiver at Crawfordsville, Indiana, and the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 843) for the relief of Rufus C. Spalding, paymaster in the United States Navy; and they were signed by the President pro tempore.

CUSTOMS LAWS.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 251.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. CRESWELL. This resolution is a mere formal matter, which will not take a minute.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to know what in the opinion of the Chair is the regular order of business at one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not a matter of opinion, because the rules specify that the unfinished business of the preceding day shall be the business in order at the expiration of the morning hour. Sometimes, however, when at that time business is pressing, resolutions and other matters of that kind, the Chair neglects to call up the special order precisely at the moment. The Chair has been derelict upon this occasion, inasmuch as now it is a few minutes past one o'clock. The unfinished business of yesterday is now regularly in order, being House bill No. 452.

Mr. CRESWELL. I hope the Senator from Iowa and the Senate will consent to have the joint resolution to which I have called attention disposed of. It will not take a minute I am sure. It is only to extend a commission which is about to expire.

Mr. GRIMES. I shall not object, with the understanding that it shall not displace the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Maryland, laying aside the special order informally for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 251) to extend the time for codifying the laws relating to customs, authorized by the joint resolution approved July 26, 1866, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposed to continue in force the provisions of the joint resolution to provide for codifying the laws relating to customs, approved July 26, 1866, for a period of three months after the expiration of the present session of Congress.

The Committee on Commerce proposed to amend the resolution by striking out in lines six and seven the words "for a period of three months after the expiration of the present session of Congress" and in lieu of them to insert "until the 1st day of January, 1868."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the joint resolution read a third time. The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

LEAGUE ISLAND.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The special order is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, being the bill (H. R. No. 452) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, and to dispense with and dispose of the site of the existing yard at Philadelphia. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FOSTER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, at the time of the recess yesterday I was commenting upon one of the two propositions upon which I rested my opposition to this bill, the very great expense necessary to prepare this locality for the purpose contemplated, and in connection with that was remarking upon the estimate made by the Senator from Indiana, reading from a letter of the late Assistant Secretary of the Navy. That computed the expense of the necessary filling of this island at some nine hundred thousand or one million dollars. I was remarking that in my opinion that was altogether an inadequate amount for the purpose, and especially if the island be as large as its friends claim, to wit, some six hundred acres of land. The larger the island the worse in this point of view; for we have to create the island, that is, we have to create it so far as any necessary purpose can be accomplished upon it by putting up structures and making it available as a naval station. The expense of filling an island of six hundred acres even less than three feet over its whole surface would be much more than the amount estimated by the Senator from Indiana. But the depth of the filling named, something less than three feet, is very much less than the amount of the filling which will be necessary; and to show that I do not speak without authority on this subject I refer to the report of the board of officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy in the year 1862 to make an examination of this and other sites. In their report, on the 5th page, they say:

"League Island is a reclaimed marsh, surrounded by a dry stone wall and embankment of earth, raised to exclude the river. A portion of the island was reclaimed many years since, and is known as the old meadow; we have no positive information on this point, but presume that at the time the wall and embankment was built all the land now reclaimed was embraced within the inclosure; subsequently, and about eighteen years since, as we are informed, the inclosure was extended so as to embrace an additional area, now known as the new meadow. According to a plan which has been submitted to the board by a committee from the Board of Trade, this old meadow contains two hundred and nineteen acres, and the new meadow one hundred and fifty-five acres. On the north of the island, and between it and the main, there is a channel which, we are told, was of sufficient depth in former days to float large ships-of-war; now it is a narrow and shallow channel, not sufficient to float vessels of any size used by the Navy. Large areas of marshes have formed on the east and west ends and on the north side of the island, and the whole appearance indicates a constant and rapid accumulation from the immense deposits of the Delaware river. To raise the surface of this island to a height which would render it safe from the encroachment of high tides will require a filling of from nine to ten feet over the whole area; and if, as has been suggested, a line of wharf front be carried out to the twenty-three feet line, it will involve an additional filling of a space one mile long and averaging four hundred and eighty-one feet wide and nineteen feet deep. If this space is not filled, then the constant use of dredging machines will be required to maintain a sufficient depth of water to accommodate the vessels of the Navy. To furnish the materials for this immense filling, which will amount in the aggregate to several million cubic yards, it is said that an abundant supply can be had from Red Bank, on the opposite side of the river and from the gravel banks near the gas-works. There is probably an abundance of good material on the shores of New Jersey, but it must be purchased from the proprietors and transported across the river—a process which, in the opinion of the board, will involve an expenditure of at least one million dollars. Other sources of supply have been suggested, such as ashes from the city, cinders, ashes, slag, &c., from the furnaces, but we regard these sources as uncertain and the quantity limited, considering the immense quantity required to accomplish the object. The board is of the opinion that upon this point the advantages are vastly in favor of New London."

If we make any reasonable estimate, of the cost of the filling of that island if it be six hundred acres, (I say so much the worse for the Government and so much worse for the island,) nine or ten feet over the whole surface, the amount of expenditure is a startling sum.

On this same subject the committee of the House of Representatives, who went upon the ground and made a personal examination of this locality; also speak. They say on the 6th page of their report, made 12th May, 1864:

"League Island is situated at the confluence of the Schuylkill and Delaware rivers, a few miles from the settled portion of the city of Philadelphia, and about one hundred miles from the ocean. It is at present surrounded by a stone wall, backed by an embankment of earth, some ten or twelve feet high, which serves to exclude the waters of the river. The whole surface of the island is from three to four feet below the surface of the river at ordinary high water, and but for the wall referred to would be under water at each recurring tide."

This is only an island in the absence of a tide; the rest of the time it is river.

"Topography.—The soil is of the character generally found in the bottom lands of alluvial rivers; soft and spongy upon the surface, and gradually passing through various formations until a stratum of sand and gravel is reached. The borings of the 'commission' show a solid bed to be reached at an average depth of thirty-seven feet, lying on the old island at a depth of from twenty-five to thirty feet and on the new the depth of fifty-six feet. A recent examination by a gentleman connected with the Coast Survey reports results somewhat differing from the borings of the commission. But the committee cannot avoid the conclusion that the entire surface of the island, or so much as may be deemed necessary for naval purposes, must be filled and piled before it can safely receive such heavy structures as would be necessary for a first-class naval establishment. And in this conclusion they are confirmed by the testimony before them that the embankment and structures of the railroad in the vicinity upon the main land have settled from year to year, and required constant repairing; and from the fact that the foundations of Fort Delaware, upon an island not flowed by the tide, and though resting upon piles, settled in a few years to such an extent as to render its lower tiers of port-holes useless.

"The filling alone would involve an immense outlay, as the adjacent shores are on the level of the river, and in many cases below its surface; and there would seem to be no other recourse than the purchase and transporting by boats of the necessary material from the opposite shores of New Jersey, unless, as is claimed, the mud and alluvium excavated for docks should be used for that purpose—an expedient that would seem to your committee not only partial and inadequate, but very prejudicial to the usefulness and health of the locality. This filling alone, it has been estimated by the engineer of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, would cost not less than $1,000,000; and this statement is even exceeded by that of Senator RIDGE, of Delaware, himself an experienced engineer and conversant with the locality, who estimated the expense at $10,000 per acre, and without piling. If to this be added the expense of piling to secure solid foundations, an expense even more than that of filling, the outlay for preparation of site alone would probably be very much greater than the completing of a first-class navy-yard at New London. These difficulties are forcibly stated by the Secretary of the Navy in his annual report of 1862, in the following terms:

"The objections to it are its low alluvial soil, the cost of raising it to a proper grade, the depth it will be necessary to penetrate before reaching safe bottom, and the expense of piling on which to erect superstructures. These are weighty objections, and it will require no inconsiderable expense to overcome them."

"In addition to this large outlay, it is the opinion of competent engineers that the time requisite for the completion at this locality of a yard such as is contemplated would be from eight to ten years."

That is the description of this locality, first by the board of officers selected by the Secretary of the Navy, composing some of as respectable officers in the line of the Navy as any belonging to the service—some scientific men and some engineers; the other, the report of the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives, who went upon the ground and made, as I have before stated, a personal examination of the locality; and I think such a series of testimony as this will not be disregarded by this Senate. I certainly hope not.

I believe, then, Mr. President, that I have established, as I trust by satisfactory evidence, the first proposition I laid down, which was that it will cost more money to prepare properly League Island for a naval station and depot than to construct and complete all the necessary works for such an establishment at a fit and eligible site. I can show a calculation made on apparently a mathematical basis showing the cost of filling this island to be over twenty million dollars. The other proposition was that when completed it is a most unfit and ineligible site for the purpose contemplated, the objections to it being permanent and fatal.

A few words now upon that proposition. Supposing the amount necessary to prepare the place for a naval station to have been expended and the structures completed, what then is the character of the locality for a navy-yard? One objection, and a very strong one as it seems to me, is that this is a most unhealthy locality. A situation on the Delaware river, below Philadelphia, on the marshes and islands created by dredging the river, and piling up mud, must inevitably be unhealthy; and the evidence on that subject is perfectly conclusive. Such localities are not fit for human habitations. Intermittent fevers, fever, and ague, and the usual complaints generated by the malaria arising from marshes and from the mud left bare at low tide are prevalent there, especially during the season of late summer and autumn. This, in my opinion, is the reason why the city of Philadelphia has not extended itself in the direction of this island.

The city of Philadelphia has been increasing in population, in wealth, in manufactures, in the arts, in all which constitutes a great city for many years, and has extended itself in almost every direction with very great rapidity. Long may it continue to do so. Why, however, has it not extended in the direction of League Island, and why are there now some miles of unoccupied land between the inhabited city of Philadelphia and League Island? And why has not League Island been occupied by the merchants, the business men, the commercial men of that locality if it were so eligible a site for commercial purposes? Why has it remained a perfect waste as it is this day, a desolation? Its unhealthiness is among the causes; people will not go there and settle so long as the city can be extended in any other direction; and it has not extended in this direction for years, and will not unless a purchase is made by the Government and works are erected there which will compel men to reside there. Now, is it proper for this Government to make a purchase in a locality, or accept as a gift for a naval station, a site which is unhealthy, which people will not seek, and will not inhabit unless they are compelled to do so?

In addition to the unhealthiness of this site, its distance from the sea is a great objection to it. The House committee say in their report, from which I have just read, that it is about one hundred miles from the sea. Other gentlemen here have spoken of it as being between eighty and one hundred miles from the sea. It seems to be difficult to fix the precise locality of this island. I suppose that it is rather a fluctuating affair; but I had presumed that we could fix its locality nearer than the difference between eighty and one hundred miles from the ocean. The committee of the House of Representatives say in what I have read that it is about one hundred miles from the ocean. Some gentlemen here have said eighty or a little over eighty miles. Let it be eighty or one hundred miles, it is too far. It is exceedingly desirable that our ships of war, especially of this class, should be nearer than eighty or one hundred miles to the main ocean. During the late rebellion, Mr. President, you and most of the members of this Senate remember the day of anxiety in this capital on a certain Sunday, which was made memorable by the action of the gallant little Monitor in Hampton Roads with a rebel frigate. None of us can have forgotten how almost every man in this capital held his breath during that day from apprehension and anxiety. What would have been the difference in the result as it respects this country, and as respects the deliberations in this Capitol this very day, if eight or ten hours of delay had intervened in the arrival of that iron-clad monitor at Hampton Roads? I will not speculate upon that matter. I will only say that we all know that it was a matter looked upon almost as among the direct interventions of Providence that that vessel arrived when she did. Had she arrived a few hours later the fate of our country and its present condition might be very different from what they are?

Mr. President, I am not about to indulge in any speculation as to the future; by no means do I wish to create any dark cloud of apprehension to rest upon us; but the idea of building a Navy supposes that we may have occasion to use it. If it shall become necessary in the course of events that the flag of our country shall be defended upon the ocean, and that our ports and harbors shall be defended by our iron-clads, it is all-important that those ships should be at hand upon the coast where an enemy will be found making the attack. If they are up our rivers hundreds or scores of miles away it may be quite impossible to get them to the ocean in time to save a city situated upon the coast from bombardment and ruin. Is it wise to place our iron-clad vessels so far from the coast that it will take a long time to get them where they may be needed for the salvation of the Republic?

In connection with this matter of distance from the ocean are the obstructions of navigation. The channel of this river between League Island and the ocean is crooked, and there are bars and other obstructions to prevent the ascent and descent of vessels of any considerable draught of water; and besides there is the shallow water. There is not depth of water at certain times of the tide to take up very many vessels that it may be important should be taken to this locality. But little more than twenty feet of water can be carried up at any stage of the tide, and not more than eighteen feet at mean low tide. That is not a sufficient depth of water to float very many vessels that we may not only have occasion to build but to repair; and the idea of having our naval depot at a station to which our vessels cannot go, and from which they cannot get to sea, would seem to be as preposterous a notion as the mind can entertain.

I know the idea is suggested that we must have this navy-yard located beyond the reach of attack from the shore, and that it is very desirable to place it inland so that it will not be subject to an enemy's attack. That argument is good within certain limits, but surely it is not worth while to press it too far; for if it were carried to the fullest extent we had better have our naval station at Salt Lake. There it would be quite out of reach of an enemy, and our ships could lie there with perfect safety; but they would not, I suppose, be particularly useful, and it would not be worth while to make Salt Lake a naval station and depot. Is it worth while to make a naval station and depot so far inland that although it is not positively inaccessible it is accessible only with difficulty and not accessible with ships of the size which it may be reasonable to suppose we shall have occasion to build and to repair?

In addition to the permanent objections on account of the distance of League Island from the ocean, and the difficulty of navigation from the tortuous character of the channel and the shallowness of the water during a considerable period of the year, these difficulties are greatly increased by the freezing of the river and the accumulations of ice, especially at this locality. During the present winter there have been weeks and weeks when the Delaware river has been closed up by ice, and it is only within a very few days, if indeed it is yet true, that vessels can pass between League Island and the ocean. There has been an entire blockade of that locality by means of ice for weeks and weeks during the present winter; and if there had been occasion to use any iron-clad vessels belonging to the Navy which were at that point, I will not say that it was impossible to have cut them out of the ice and get them to the ocean, but it must have been attended with very great delay and very great expense; and I am by no means sure that it could have been accomplished within any such reasonable time as to have made the vessels available for any purposes that they might have been called for.

On this subject I refer again to the report of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, from which I have before quoted. Previous to reading, however, what that committee say in regard to the ice, I will read a few words on the points I have been commenting on, namely, the distance from the ocean and the depth of the water in the channel. The House committee say on page 6 of their report:

"DISTANCE.

"Another disadvantage is its distance from the ocean. The object aimed at is a yard for the repair and construction of iron-clad vessels and laying them up in ordinary when not in service; but experience has demonstrated that the monitor and iron-clad class of vessels, of all others, most need a clear harbor and a wide and unobstructed channel. Of all types of vessels they have the feeblest powers of locomotion. They mind the helm with difficulty, and are least manageable in narrow sea-room or in stress of weather. Their great bulk, their novel construction, their absence of sails on which to rely, and of space for the crew to work in, render them peculiarly unmanageable except in plain sailing, and under favorable conditions. The committee do not find that these conditions exist anywhere in the Delaware river, and particularly not in the vicinity of League Island. It is nearly one hundred miles from the ocean, up one of the most tortuous and difficult streams to navigate in the United States. An examination of the chart of the Coast Survey shows the channel everywhere narrow and intricate—to be in many places obstructed by bars and shoals from the Cape to the city of Philadelphia. The report of the commission before referred to states that 'large areas of marshes are constantly forming in the river and near the island itself, while the whole appearance indicates a rapid accumulation from the immense deposits of the Delaware.' From the hydrographic report of the Coast Survey in 1861 it appears that 'since the last survey there have taken place marked changes in the eastern channel abreast of the upper part of Camden, the bar from the upper end of Windmill Island having formed almost to Cooper's Point. The shoal formerly extending far below Windmill Island appears to have been much cut away. Important additions to the wharves are being made along the Philadelphia front.'

"The second portion of the survey comprised the river between Red Bank and Billingsport, including the bar and the approaches to Fort Mifflin. Changes have been developed in this vicinity."

"The third portion of the river surveyed was between Newcastle and Reedy Point, including the Bulkhead shoal and the approaches to Fort Delaware. Part of the shoal between Delaware City and Pea Patch Island has been cut away, and important changes appear to have taken place in the island. The small marshy patches known as Goose Islands have disappeared, in one case the channel having shifted nearly two miles from its original bed, and taking place of flats, upon which there were formerly not more than two feet of water."

"Those difficulties in practice have proved so formidable that the iron-clads Sangamon, Patapsco, and Lehigh were within the past year obliged to be towed to sea from the present yard, at an expense of $250 per day each, and were two days in getting to the mouth of the river—an expense of $500 for the down trip of each vessel for the single item of towage alone, an item which, in the aggregate, would amount in a single year to many thousands of dollars."

Then as to the depth of water the committee say:

"DEPTH OF WATER.

"Of a similar nature to the foregoing is the objection on account of the inadequate depth of water. This is very obvious upon a careful examination of the soundings, as indicated by the charts prepared by the coast survey. Opposite Hog Island, and just below League Island, the channel is very narrow and shoals to a depth of but eighteen feet at its deepest point at mean low tide. No vessel drawing more than eighteen feet can pass this point without waiting for a rise of tide. Near Cherry flats, and opposite Wilmington, the channel draws but nineteen and a half feet. Below Newcastle, and in the neighborhood of the Pea Patch Islands, the channel has shifted from the east to the west side of the island, and in as many as three places shoals to nineteen and a half feet. Twenty-five to thirty miles below Newcastle it again shoals to twenty-one feet. The committee regard this as an almost insuperable objection to the Delaware for a great naval station. We have already more than nineteen vessels in our Navy which draw twenty feet of water and over, and some of these are the finest and most formidable in the American Navy; among them may be mentioned the Minnesota, Roanoke, Powhatan, Niagara, Wabash, Colorado, Susquehanna, Puritan, Decatur, and Dunderburg, of the steamer class, which draw from twenty to twenty-three feet of water, while some of the ships of the line draw from twenty-three to twenty-five feet.

"We are upon the threshold of a new era in naval architecture. No one can tell what the exigencies of the coming years may call for in the size and draught of naval vessels. The boasted iron-clads of England, the Minotaur, the Agincourt, the Northumberland, and Black Warrior draw twenty-five feet six inches. The French La Gloire, Normandy, and others, nearly twenty-six feet. And these Powers are now deepening their docks and constructing new ones for the purpose of receiving vessels drawing twenty-six feet of water.

"In this connection the statement of one of the first naval constructors of the Government, Mr. Delano, of the Brooklyn yard, was laid before us: That it was indispensable, to make any naval station first class, to have a depth of at least twenty-five feet of water at low tide."

"Your committee cannot believe it consistent with a prudent regard to the future efficiency of the Navy to establish for all time the great naval yard and depot of the country at a point to which vessels of a greater draught than eighteen feet cannot get, and from which they could not get to sea except in certain stages of the tide. And the nation might find reason to regret the acceptance of the 'munificent gift' in case a fleet chased by a superior force of the enemy should be unable to reach its rendezvous in the Delaware or put to sea from thence at short notice when its presence might be necessary at any other point threatened."

Then, as to the ice, the House committee say:

"ICE.

"In addition to the objections already considered is the damage and obstruction to navigation occasioned by ice, fast and floating, in the winter season, which, according to statements submitted to the committee, is a very formidable, if not insuperable, objection to the Delaware. The evidence upon this point comes from such a variety of sources, and upon authority so reliable, that it can hardly be discredited. It is very strongly stated by the commission appointed by the Secretary. The officers of the Atlantic Insurance Company, New York, state that 'the premium on risks to Philadelphia is increased during the winter months one hundred per cent. solely in consequence of the increased damage from ice in the Delaware.' Admiral Gregory testifies to having nearly lost the frigate Raritan there from that cause. And proof was submitted showing that the local offices at Philadelphia excepted the ice risk in their ordinary policies, sometimes declined to take it entirely, and always charged an extra premium for assuming it. A long list of vessels was also submitted from the marine offices of Philadelphia, which had been cut through or destroyed by ice in the Delaware bay and river within the past few years. And while the committee were investigating this subject, the United States gunboat Galena, ordered to join Admiral Farragut's fleet, in getting to sea from Philadelphia was so badly injured by the ice that she was towed to Baltimore, where she was detained a month for repairs, which cost the Government several thousand dollars, her voyage broken up at a time when her services were greatly needed by the country. It was also shown that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company had caused a survey to be made of League Island, with a view to adopting it as their depot for coal, and that it was finally abandoned after a report of their engineer, an extract from which the committee herewith submit as of very high authority."

Before reading that extract I will take leave to say that I suppose the Senate, in determining on a locality for a navy-yard and naval depot, will be governed in their action for the country by at least as high considerations as would control them in acting for themselves in their own business, and that any standard lower than that would be beneath us as legislators. Surely we will not select a spot which a business man of sagacity and good judgment would not select for the same purpose if it were a business of his own to be accomplished. Now we have the benefit of an examination of this locality, not, it is true, for a navy-yard and naval station, but for business purposes of a commercial and mercantile character, involving precisely the same interests and the same questions that are involved when we are considering whether to fix upon this as a naval station, and that not by an individual or a company of individuals at all prejudiced against this locality or who had any interest adverse to the locality, but by a company peculiarly desirous, as we have every reason for believing, of building up the city of Philadelphia and adding to its already great wealth and great prosperity. This was the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, who thought of using this place as a depot for their coal, and I repeat it involved almost identically the same questions for a private enterprise that are now involved in the inquiry whether we shall take this island for a public purpose. They had a survey of the island by their engineer to determine whether it was a proper site for the purpose contemplated, and I read from his report:

"I trust that it may not be considered as overstepping the limits of the question intrusted to me if a few remarks bearing upon the navigation of the river during the winter season be presented as a point of great moment in comparing the sites at League Island with the Point House, and those immediately above it.

"You will perceive that the face of League Island is subjected to the full force of the flood tide from the long reach in the river, extending southwestwardly, the effect of which has been, as represented by the statements of those most familiar with our river and its winds, currents, and bars, to pile up the drifting ice upon the entire island shore-line; and, indeed, I have before me evidence to the effect that in all times of obstruction by ice vessels can be brought with much less difficulty through the Horseshoe channel than to League Island. It may be stated that an ice guard could be constructed that would relieve the front from the driving ice of the flood tide, but the effect of such break-water would be to cause deposits within the surface affected, thus subjecting you to a continued and heavy expenditure for dredging."

This is signed by "Strickland Kneass, civil engineer." This was some time ago, and League Island is still a waste and a desolation, and unless it can be palmed off upon the Government it will never be anything other than a waste and desolation, unless indeed the locality around Philadelphia should increase with such wonderful rapidity and spread over all the surrounding surface to such an extent that as a matter of necessity this mud flat shall be elevated to make a place, such as it will make, for human beings to live upon.

I think, then, Mr. President, that I establish the second proposition which I laid down, and that is, that after this place has been prepared for a naval station, after the works have been completed at this point, it is still a most unfit and ineligible place. If these two propositions are true; first, that it will cost more money to prepare it than it will to construct and complete these works elsewhere; and second, that when completed it is a most unfit and ineligible place, ought we to take it? Both the propositions I certainly substantiate by evidence of as high authority as can be produced in the Senate.

It seems to me the authority is unquestionable, conclusive; and in that state of facts, that the proposition of accepting this island for this purpose should ever be entertained seriously is most strange.

The idea that the honorable Senator from Indiana suggests, that these public works are to be distributed over the country and are not to be confined to any one locality, is very well if you apply the principle to proper cases; but if you apply the principle to this question of navy-yards I repudiate the notion altogether. The idea that any section of the country is entitled to have a navy-yard for the benefit of the locality I look upon as a monstrous fallacy. Are we to select a site for a naval station for the benefit of a locality? The idea will not bear consideration for a moment. At all events, I scout and scorn the notion that we are to select a naval station on the ground of benefit, or of a debt due, if you please, to the locality. Let the public works of the country, that may almost as well be in one locality as another, be fairly distributed over the country. If there be any advantage in having them in particular localities, give the different sections of the country the benefit of such establishments. That is fair, just, and equal; but the idea that we are to select a naval station on any such ground as that is not to be endured. We are to select a naval station where nature has provided the best place for it; and if all our naval stations are then thrown into one corner of the Union, if that is the best place, there they ought to be. The idea of spreading them for the benefit of localities, when the public service requires them to be elsewhere, is neither patriotic nor wise.

I know it is suggested that New England has several naval stations. If she has more than the country requires, abolish them; and if it be shown here, while I have a seat in the body, that any one of the naval stations or navy-yards in New England is not required by the wants of the Government, I will vote to abolish it. I will continue by my vote no naval station in any section of the country merely for the benefit of the section. If the country does not want it, abolish it. I am not asking, and do not ask, that this navy-yard be located in one place or in another on the ground of preference for a section or advantage to a section. If Philadelphia is the best place for all the navy-yards in the country, let them all be there. If New York is the best place, let them be there. If Washington, if Norfolk, if Brunswick, if any other locality is the best, let the selection be made, and there let it be. The amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, which is now under consideration, proposes that this be done; that the board of gentlemen named in the amendment shall make a selection of a suitable place.

I am sorry that gentlemen speak of the fact that there are no navy-yards in the middle States, or no navy-yards in the southern States, or no navy-yards in the northern States, or no navy-yards in the western States. That is not an idea which we should encourage here. The question is, in the first place, does the country want a navy-yard at all; and if it does not, no matter how many good places there may be for one, none should be built. If the country does need a navy-yard, then the question is, where is the best place. Ascertaining that, the question is answered, and it is not answered by saying that there are other sections of the country that are patriotic that have not got any navy-yards. We do not build navy-yards as a reward for patriotism, or at least we should not. We should not be called on to make a selection, on the ground of the patriotic character of the people, but because of the natural advantages of the spot, and that question is easily determined by men of skill. The other is a question which will always be very difficult of solution.

The western States have no navy-yards. There is no navy-yard in the State of the honorable Senator from Indiana, a most patriotic State, a State having done as much in this war to save the country, to perpetuate our liberty and our Constitution as any other State in it. She did nobly and gallantly, but ought we to go and build a navy-yard in Indiana on that account? The Atlantic ocean happens to lie on the coast of New England and New York and on the border down to Cape Florida, and does not wash the shores of Indiana. I suppose we must have our ships built where they can be used. The idea that we are to distribute the building of them elsewhere according to the advantage that it may be to the people is an idea which I wish to wash my hands of altogether.

Now, as it respects the best location, I by no means undertake at present to say what the best location is. I only say, that from the evidence which I think I have adduced here, it is very clear that League Island is not only not the best location, but it is wholly unfit as a location; and if there are no other or better places—no, I will not make that supposition, because it is preposterous; but I was going to say that if there are no other and no better places we had better have no navy-yard at all. But, sir, there are other and better sites. There is no question upon that subject. This very city of Washington is on a noble river. We have a navy-yard here almost within call from the roof of the Capitol, a station that, so far as fresh water is concerned, and so far as all the advantages which are claimed for League Island are concerned, greatly surpasses League Island. Some of the objections to it are of the same character, particularly its distance from the sea; but the objections on account of ice and depth of water are much less here. There is no difficulty about this locality; it is all prepared, and a very little additional expense would make the navy-yard at Washington perfectly fit and proper for the purpose contemplated. There are many other points on the Chesapeake bay eligible, desirable, and proper for the location of a yard of this description.

Then, again, in the State of the honorable Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CATTELL] there are no doubt many excellent points, and I am sorry that that honorable Senator has his eyes so strongly fixed on Philadelphia that he cannot look behind him over his State of New Jersey and see the many attractive points in that State, far superior to League Island in all the advantages which nature holds out for the location of a navy-yard. So, again, in the waters of the Hudson unquestionably there are points greatly superior to League Island. New London, of course, from my situation, I should not be apt to forget or overlook. I may, perhaps, be greatly prejudiced in favor of New London. I may think that the advantages of that location are greater than they really are. That is quite possible. Every Senator, I presume, is conscious of feeling somewhat more interested in his own home, the locality to which he belongs, than he does in other localities. And I am by no means so weak as to suppose that my impressions in regard to that locality must necessarily be exactly correct in all respects. I only say that it is entitled to have a fair hearing, a fair examination; and if its advantages are superior, quite paramount to those of any other site, I do insist that it should not be overlooked.

The only advantage talked about which is worthy of consideration at League Island, as compared with New London, is in the matter of fresh water and in having a supply of iron and coal nearer at hand than New London. So far as fresh water is concerned, by the expenditure of a very small amount in comparison with what will be required at League Island and a cove of fresh water can be prepared a few miles above the city of New London, into which vessels can be raised by means of a lock and kept in a large basin of fresh water of one hundred or more acres, perfectly safe and in perfectly still, quiet water at all seasons of the year, and that perfectly pure and fresh. At that locality a vessel could get into the ocean in the course of an hour's time at any season of the year without obstruction and without difficulty. I have a little map in my hand, which has been prepared by a very competent engineer, showing the locality and the situation, which, if members will take the trouble to look at, they will see that by an expenditure of money greatly less than will be required at League Island perfectly pure, fresh water will be obtained, and a basin for these vessels to lie in incomparably superior to anything which is talked about at League Island. Then, in connection with this same basin of fresh water dry docks can be prepared into which vessels can readily pass by their own gravity; here they may be built and pass out in the same manner, not subjecting them to the strain which they are always subjected to when they are launched, if launched in the ordinary way. Thus great expense and great risk will be saved. All this, I say, is perfectly within reach at New London, at an expense of some money, no doubt, but greatly less than the expense to be incurred at League Island before one single stone or one timber can be laid down for the erection of the necessary structures.

I trust, then, Mr. President, having taxed the patience of the Senate longer than I had intended, that I have at least shown what I attempted to show; in the first place, that the expense of preparing League Island for a naval station and depot is altogether too great for the country to incur; and in the next place, that after the site has been prepared and the works completed, it will not be a fit and proper place for the vessels of the United States engaged in the naval service.

The amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts does not propose even any delay in this enterprise. I have thought that perhaps some gentleman might object to it on the ground that we have been discussing this subject for some time and it is necessary that action should be taken, and that this amendment looks to delay. It is not obnoxious to that objection. It looks no more to delay than the bill before us does. The bill before us looks to delay to the extent of an examination. It provides:

That the said League Island, marsh adjacent, and Back Channel, with its shores as aforesaid, shall not be received or accepted until the title to the whole of the same, as herein described, is complete and indefeasible, nor unless the acceptance thereof shall be recommended by a board of officers to be appointed by the President.

So there is to be an examination and recommendation of this site by a board of officers appointed by the President of the United States. There is nothing, therefore, in the proposition of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts which will delay action on this subject except that it may be said it will take a few days longer to examine several sites than it will to examine one site. That is all the delay there can be, and I ask whether that ought to be an objection to the amendment. If League Island is to be examined, ought not the other sites be examined also, and to have the benefit of the opinion of the board in regard to their comparative merits? Is there any conceivable objection to that? If League Island is so superior, will not the officers who are appointed say so and make a short end of the matter? Will it not be better that there should be a delay of a few days or a few weeks even and have the whole subject examined, rather than the delay necessary to have only one location examined? I submit the matter, believing it will be for the best interest of the country that this amendment should be adopted and the examination made.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, a few years ago, when this subject was under consideration, I expressed at considerable length the opinions I entertain upon it, and I am aware that if I were to attempt to do so again I should simply repeat what I then said. I shall therefore content myself on this occasion with a very brief statement of the case, as I understand it.

The Senator from Connecticut commenced his address to the Senate by expressing his extreme surprise that the Committee on Naval Affairs had reported so important a measure as this without accompanying the bill with a written report. This question has been before the Senate for four or five years. I supposed there was hardly any one who was not pretty familiar with its merits, and who had not already in a great degree made up his mind on the subject. Reports have been made in the House of Representatives for and against this measure. I wish the Senator to remember that, although he read from an adverse report made by the Naval Committee of the House, yet, at a subsequent session, that committee, composed I think of seven of the same members who constituted the committee that made the report from which he has read, reported the identical bill which is now under consideration in the Senate.

But if he was surprised at the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs reporting this bill without accompanying it with a written report, after the discussions that have been had in the Senate, after we had been enlightened by the eloquence and astuteness of the Senator himself in opposition to League Island, I should think it much more remarkable that we should be called upon now to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts without any basis upon which to predicate it. What is this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts which we are now called upon first to vote on?

That Admiral David G. Farragut, Lieutenant General W. T. Sherman, and Mr. J. E. Hilgard be, and they are hereby appointed and constituted a commission to select a suitable site on or adjacent to the Atlantic coast for a naval station for the storage and repair and building of iron vessels and iron-clad vessels of the Navy, and for other naval purposes. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered to accept such selected site on behalf of the United States: Provided, The same shall be conveyed to the United States as a free gift, for their exclusive use and benefit, by a valid and indefeasible title. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized to take possession of and occupy such site for the purposes herein indicated, and in the preparation thereof to use such amount of money as may be necessary out of any unexpended appropriations for the Navy.

It is not for me to suggest that such a proposition as this does not evince the highest degree of statesmanship; I am not authorized to say that it is not the wisest thing we could do; but I am prepared to say that it is the most extraordinary proposition that has ever come under the consideration of the Senate since I have been a member of this body. What does it propose? First, to select three men as commissioners, only one of whom confessedly knows anything about nautical matters. Perhaps neither one of the other two has ever been within a navy-yard, or has ever read or informed himself in regard to the necessities of the naval service. These three men are to be authorized to select a site on or adjacent to the Atlantic coast, without specifying the number of acres that shall be required, but simply such a site as in their opinion may be suitable for naval purposes; and then the amendment proceeds to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to expend an unlimited amount of money in preparing for a navy-yard such a site as these men may select.

Mr. President, I do not suppose the Senator from Massachusetts will claim a patent for this as a specimen of legislation made easy. Was there ever a case where Congress submitted such extraordinary authority to two men who were not all familiar with the subject they were directed to investigate, and then gave the head of a Department unlimited control over the Treasury of the United States? And to do what? To establish, if they choose, a new yard when the public service does not require one. Who has recommended a new yard? Nobody.

Nor will I designate this proposition as a sort of fishing proposition intended to catch the votes of all the Senators from the Atlantic States, from the State of Maine down as far as the State of Georgia, or to catch votes from the interior of the continent, because of the designation of a particular man as one of the commissioners. I will not presume that the Senator from Massachusetts would be influenced by any such consideration. Of course he is governed solely by lofty ideas of patriotism; I must suggest, however, to that Senator that this is an old acquaintance of mine. This same proposition, word for word, was submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs for their consideration, and was rejected. The Senator from Massachusetts has acquired it second-hand.

The Senator from Connecticut seemed to be extremely surprised and astonished at a pamphlet, extracts from which were read by the Senator from Indiana, and which purported to be published by a New England man. Was there anything very extraordinary in the fact that such a pamphlet was published by some anonymous person? Are not such things very usual? Has not the Senator before read pamphlets published by persons who did not choose to disclose their names? I suppose the material question would be whether or not the truth was contained in the pamphlet. When my colleague upon the Committee of Naval Affairs, the Senator from Indiana, asked the Senator from Connecticut whether he doubted or denied the statements of fact contained in the pamphlet, the Senator from Connecticut acknowledged that he did not. It cannot be possible that the Senator from Connecticut was surprised that a New England man should extend his vision beyond the boundaries of New England, and see what were the qualities and the capacities of a tract of land within the jurisdiction of the State of Pennsylvania for naval purposes.

He also expressed his surprise at the pertinacity of the Secretary of the Navy in insisting that we should make this acquisition of League Island. I do not know that there is anything very extraordinary in that. It may be, and I rather think it is, that pertinacity is an element of Connecticut character, and especially am I inclined to think so when I remember that New London has been pertinaciously attempting to secure a navy-yard for sixty-five years. She made an effort to secure it in 1802, but her claims were rejected. In 1817 a board of eminent naval and military engineer officers were appointed to examine that site, and they reported against it. But the maggot has never been got out of her brain, and she has been insisting upon securing a naval depot and navy-yard at New London ever since that time. But if the Senator really wants to know why the Navy Department has been so pertinacious in regard to this matter I will tell him. It is the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, based upon the opinions of the most skillful men, as he thinks, connected with the Navy, that the public interests require that this acquisition should be made. He believes, and I believe, that there is a vast loss every year to the Government of the United States because we have not acquired and occupied this territory for the purposes for which we now propose to obtain it. He believes that it is the most proper place in the country to deposit our iron naval vessels in time of peace; and this opinion is based upon the report of a board of officers familiar with our whole Atlantic coast.

The Senator read to us from a report of a board of naval officers appointed to investigate the adaptability of League Island and of New London for naval purposes, and I think the Senate will bear me out in the statement that from what he said no one would judge that there was any diversity of opinion in that commission on that subject. I think the Senator did not refer to the minority report or indicate that there was a minority report upon the subject; he invariably spoke of the commission as an entirety, giving their judgment against League Island. Now, sir, it is due to truth to say that there was a minority as well as a majority report. Basing my own opinion upon the two reports and the facts embodied in them, I have no hesitation in saying that the strongest arguments are in the minority report, written by that eminent man, Professor Baché, and against the majority report. That commission consisted of the present Admiral Stringham, Commodore Gardner, Captain Van Brunt, Mr. Sanger, Professor Baché, and Commodore Marston. Four of them were in favor of New London as against League Island; Professor Baché and Commodore Marston were opposed to New London and in favor of League Island.

When the report came to the Navy Department the arguments of the majority and minority were canvassed by the Secretary of the Navy and by naval officers who were called upon to assist him in forming a correct conclusion on the subject. He believed that the weight of the argument was with the minority; and hence he has insisted all the time up to the present moment that the public interests required that League Island should be secured rather than any other spot. In other words, he has stood to his original position, that we do not need another navy-yard; and I have yet failed to see a single naval officer of respectability who does insist or claim that we need another navy-yard. The great trouble with us is that we have too many navy-yards, and that those we have are too small. I told the Senate yesterday how they were originally selected. We have been enlarging them by adding to them from time to time, at immense expense, by the purchase of adjacent property, because we did not lay them out originally upon tracts sufficiently extensive to meet the demands of the country as the Navy increased and the commercial interests of the country increased.

Now, Mr. President, perhaps I have a little advantage over the Senator from Connecticut in this matter. I did not commit myself in favor of League Island until I had made personal inspection of it. I have made several personal inspections, and I am free to say that upon no subject have I ever heard so many falsehoods uttered in my life as I have on the subject of League Island. I have heard persons tell me and people around me that a man could stand upon the soil of League Island and shake it like a strong man standing on a bog, and yet I have myself seen oak trees growing on the island as large as I ever saw grow anywhere. The truth is that League Island is a common low interval land, which probably has been formed in the course of the last six or seven hundred years by the confluence of the waters of the Schuylkill and the Delaware. I have a map of it before me. At low water it is three or four feet above the water, and at the extreme tide, which rises once or twice a year, perhaps if there were no embankments on the outside it would overflow. It is precisely like the land you find along all the streams where there is tidal water in any of the northern States. The soil is firm, and according to the report of Professor Baché, and I think everybody admits he is a skillful engineer, having been educated as such and devoted himself to that profession in the Army before he was placed at the head of the Coast Survey—it admits of as good constructions being raised upon it as the ground of any navy-yard we have, unless it be at Kittery and at Mare Island, where we have stone; and for some purposes, as for instance for the construction of works for the fabrication of arms and working with trip-hammers, it is infinitely better.

Now, it is proposed to secure this whole area and the banks on the outside of this channel, embracing some six hundred acres. The Senator from Connecticut has read to us a statement to the effect that it is going to cost more than a million of dollars to fill up this island. Sir, we do not propose to fill it all up at once. We only propose to fill it up as we go along, as we wish to extend the works, and I assert that it will be to our advantage that that ground is low instead of being high. What do we want of a navy-yard? What are the necessities of navy-yards at this time? Let me read to you an extract from the London News of last month, showing what Great Britain is doing in regard to navy-yards, and what we shall be compelled to do if we intend to occupy a first-class position as a naval power. I read from the "naval and military" column of the London News:

"CHATHAM, January 17, 1867.

"THE ENLARGEMENT OF CHATHAM DOCK-YARD.—This morning, Mr. Gabrielle, whose tender for the construction of the works for the enlargement of this dockyard, by the formation of the new basins, docks, factories, and other buildings, arrived at the dockyard, in order to make the necessary arrangements for the commencement of the works forthwith. The designs for the enlargement of the yard will necessitate the taking in of three hundred and eighty acres of the land adjoining the present establishment, by which the entire area of the dock-yard will be enlarged to nearly five hundred acres. Of this, seventy-four acres will be deep water space, consisting of three basins constructed on the natural line of creek, a branch of the Medway, which separates St. Mary's Island from the main land."

There is precisely such a position as we have at League Island, where we can excavate the back channel and make a basin of seventy acres for the deposit of your vessels in perfect safety.

"Of the three basins intended to be constructed, the largest will be the fitting-out basin, which will have a water area of thirty-three acres with a depth of thirty feet, and a wharfage frontage of five thousand eight hundred feet. The repairing basin will cover an area of twenty-one acres, and the factory basin with which it is connected an area of twenty acres each, with about four thousand feet of frontage. Connected with the repairing basin, which will open into the Medway nearly opposite Upnor Castle, will be four spacious docks, each four hundred and twenty feet in length, with a depth of water of twenty-eight feet six inches over the sill at high-water neaps. Adjoining the factory basin, which communicates with the other two, will be an extensive range of buildings covering an area of nearly twenty acres, and including steam-factories, smiths' shops, stores, fittings shops, and other establishments. The estimated outlay for the entire undertaking is one million and a half sterling, which will probably be increased to two millions when the whole of the proposed works are completed. The works connected with the construction of the repairing and fitting basins will be first proceeded with."

That is a very immense work, and it is going to cost a very large sum of money. The time will come, and it is not very far distant, when we shall have to make preparations for establishing just as extensive navy-yards as they have in Great Britain. We made the preparation last winter in regard to our navy-yard at Kittery, in the State of Maine. We have secured a valuable island there, which, in the course of five or ten years, will be covered with constructions necessary to promote the naval interest. We now propose to secure this island in the Delaware and move the present navy-yard that is in the heart of the city of Philadelphia to it, and then to enlarge and extend it as the necessities of the service require. I say that it is to our advantage that the ground is low. Need I undertake to illustrate that and to prove it before the members of the Senate? I am borne out by the engineers who have examined it when I say that the earth which will be taken from the excavations for the basins will be amply sufficient to elevate the adjacent ground to the necessary height; and, as your engineers will tell you, the nearer you have your dumping ground to the place you are excavating the greater is the saving to you in the expense of excavation; whereas when you take your navy-yard to some other place where you have a granite or a hard pan formation the expense of preparing the grounds for basins will be immense.

But it is said that the soil on League Island is not adapted to naval constructions. Let Professor Baché and Commodore Marston answer this objection:

"7. Adaptation of the site to the construction of permanent stone dry-docks, wet basins, piers, wharves, rolling-mills, forge shops, and other heavy works.

"Either site is adapted to the construction of permanent stone docks, wet basins, piers, wharves, rolling-mills, forge shops, furnaces, and other heavy works.

"The foundations of heavy works at League Island must be piled; those at Winthrop's Point be cut from a high gravel hill, forty, sixty, or one hundred feet high, according to distance, with a hard gravel or a rocky basis. At the back of League Island is an arm of the river of two hundred feet in width in the average, and which not only contributes to the defense of the navy-yard site, but will serve for the provision of wharves for small docks, for depots of timber and other materials, giving thus a large additional front if needed. This passage may be readily defended if it is desirable to deepen it.

"League Island has all the advantages of an insular situation from this passage, without the disadvantages to which an island at a considerable distance from the main is exposed.

"While marshes have formed below the island, the channel ways have deepened, and the improvements proposed to be made at League Island, if conforming to correct principles of hydraulic engineering, will still further increase the depth of the river channels.

"League Island will probably be filled up in part, ample materials for which are found in the gravel of Red Bank, or of the main near the gas-works, or in the refuse of the city foundries and iron-works, and for the removal of which the owners of these establishments now pay, which can be brought by water to the island, and above all the ashes, slag, and other products of the forges, foundries, and furnaces, which also would be an expense to remove, and which will in time afford materials for the extension of the island over the present flats.

"Works producing one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty tons of iron per day furnish a vast amount of slag and other matters which accumulate in immense piles, as we have seen at the iron-works on the Schuylkill and Lehigh.

"Winthrop's Point must be cut down through hard diluvial gravel, and probably in part through rock. Should hard pan be met it will be even more difficult to remove than rocks.

"The subsoil of League Island is favorable for the driving of piles, a bed of diluvial gravel underlying the 'alluvial clay' at depths on the average of thirty-seven feet. In one spot upon the old island the borings of the commission reached gravel at twenty-five feet, and were carried on seven feet further with difficulty, reaching a stony bed at that depth. In the softest boring on the new part of the island the gravel was reached at fifty-six feet. These are all admissible depths for piling.

"The slag, ashes, and other refuse matters of furnaces and forges, which are now carried away from establishments near the wharves of the city of Philadelphia, could be transported by water cheaply to League Island if needed for filling in. We have ascertained that four private establishments at Philadelphia, with rolling and puddling furnaces, produce some four hundred and fifteen cubic yards of wastage per week."

Again, they say:

"5. Either site is adapted to the construction of docks and other appurtenances of a navy yard."

I suppose, Mr. President, that almost every member of the Senate has read this report of Professor Baché; and if so, I am perfectly willing to leave all the matters involved, so far as they are discussed at all by any members of the board, to the consideration of the body.

The Senator from Connecticut has read very copiously from the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives in 1864. It should be borne in mind, however, that that committee, at a subsequent session, reversed its action, and reported the bill now under consideration, when there was only a change of two members, I think, upon the committee. I think I am justified in saying that the report from which the Senator read was written by a citizen of New London, the place that sets itself up as a rival to League Island. I do not know that that should detract at all from the merit of the report or from the consideration that the Senate ought to give it; nor do I know that the fact which is alleged by some, though not here, that Professor Baché was born in the city of Philadelphia and lived there till he was sixteen years old, should detract from the consideration we ought to give to his report. On the other hand, the gentleman who was associated with him, Captain Marston, was a native and is recorded on the naval register as a citizen of the State of Massachusetts. Nor would I say that because Commodore Stringham is a citizen of New York—and New York seems to be arrayed against this proposition on account of her rivalry to Philadelphia—that fact should lessen the influence or the weight which his report ought to have upon the minds of the members of this body. These are considerations which, I trust, will not be entertained by any one. The question is, what are the facts as submitted by these two reports? I say that the weight of evidence, the strength of the argument is with the minority report, although numerically the strength is with the majority. My opponents say otherwise. Let the Senate decide.

The Senator has talked to us about the health of League Island. He told us that the evidence is very strong that the health of League Island is bad. I have heard no such evidence. There was a man who appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs who told us that it was bad; and he told us some people had told him so. He was a citizen of New London. He did not live and never had lived in Philadelphia, or in that neighborhood. I know of no evidence, I have seen no evidence, the gentlemen representing New London and adverse to League Island have never adduced any evidence before the committee or before me individually, to show that League Island was unhealthy. I think the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CATTELL] can give a sufficiently satisfactory reason to the Senate why it is that Philadelphia has grown north rather than toward League Island. He at any rate convinced me on the subject, and that it did not spring from the unhealthiness of the lower part of the city.

But it is said that the distance is too great from the sea, and the Senator undertook to illustrate that to us by giving a very graphic and eloquent account of the encounter between the Merrimac and the Monitor. I failed to observe the appropriateness of the illustration, although I admit that it was very elegantly said. It seems to me that it would have been as difficult to get the Monitor from New London to Fortress Monroe to attack the Merrimac as it was from Philadelphia.

It is said that the channel is tortuous and that vessels-of-war could not go to Philadelphia and return. I assert that we have not got a vessel-of-war and have never had a vessel-of-war that could not go without difficulty to Philadelphia and return at her leisure, provided she came with a high tide, which is the case in New York and Boston as well as Philadelphia.

Mr. President, other Governments have come to the conclusion that it is to their interest to seek insular positions for their navy-yards; and that is the great effort to-day of the British and French Governments. It was proposed two or three years ago to break up the Portsmouth navy-yard in England and locate it somewhere else because of its apparent indefensibility; but now they have determined to go on and expend some £20,000,000 in attempting to still further fortify it. This is urged by the most experienced and capable officers as an argument in favor of having a large establishment for workshops and so on at Philadelphia. But the Senator from Connecticut and his friends do not exactly see it in that light. I confess I do not agree with them. I think that Philadelphia should receive a greater consideration than she otherwise would from the fact that she is incapable of being attacked.

The Senator told us that the river was frequently obstructed by ice. The minority of the naval commission appointed to investigate this subject reported that once in forty years up to that time it had been so obstructed by ice as to prevent the navigation of the river and not oftener. I do not know that the Senator has any stronger testimony than that. I agree that the river above League Island, at what is known as the Horse Shoe, is occasionally obstructed by ice, and has been for a considerable time this year; but that is between the city of Philadelphia and League Island. I have seen gentlemen here this winter whose vessels have gone up as far as the Horse Shoe, and then been compelled to fall back and anchor abreast of League Island, and some have dropped down as far as Chester, but they had no difficulty in getting up as far as League Island. But, sir, the same argument applies to the Brooklyn navy-yard, to the Boston navy-yard, and to the Washington navy-yard as well as to the Philadelphia navy-yard. I undertake to say that there have not been five consecutive days in twenty-five years when a vessel-of-war could not without difficulty pass to and from League Island to the sea on account of any obstruction of the ice that might be in the river.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at the bill that we propose and compare it with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized to receive and accept from the city authorities of the city of Philadelphia the title to League Island, in the Delaware river, and adjacent marsh land, including the whole of the creek known as the Back Channel, from the Schuylkill to the Delaware river, and all the riparian rights and privileges of said League Island, adjacent marsh, and Back Channel, together with so much of the opposite shore of the Back Channel from the Secretary of the Navy, as shall, in the opinion of the Government to have the sole and exclusive use of said Back Channel and both shores thereof; the said island and appurtenances to be held for naval purposes by the Government of the United States: Provided, That the said League Island, marsh adjacent, and Back Channel, with its shores as aforesaid, shall not be received or accepted until the title to the whole of the same, as herein described, is complete and indefeasible, nor unless the acceptance thereof shall be recommended by a board of officers to be appointed by the President.

Nothing can be done under this bill until a commission composed of naval officers shall report in favor of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is not that the amendment?

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir, in the original bill. If gentlemen are not disposed to intrust this power to the President of the United States to select these naval officers I am perfectly content that competent men qualified to act in such a capacity as this shall be designated in the bill. I do not want to throw away the money of my constituents in a maelstrom where a vast amount of money will be expended without any good being accomplished by it. I do not want to break up the present navy-yard in Philadelphia. I believe that the public interests require that that navy-yard shall be extended. If a board of naval officers, to be appointed by us or by the President, shall report to us that League Island is not the proper place for it, but that it had better be enlarged where it is by the expenditure of a vast amount of money in purchasing up the business property adjacent to it, I want to do it. But I do not want to send a roving commission all along up and down the country to try and find another navy-yard, and make the action of that committee final upon us, and then, when they have made a selection, authorize the Secretary of the Navy to put his hand into the Treasury of the United States and draw out money to an unlimited extent.

Mr. DIXON. This bill is final.

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir, not until a board shall have investigated it, and then it does not confer upon the Secretary the power to expend a dollar of money.

Mr. DIXON. The report is final.

Mr. GRIMES. The first check we have upon it is, that this board of naval officers must report in favor of it; second, when that report has been made it does not compel us to expend a cent; we shall have simply acquired the property. If we afterward conclude that we ought not to expend any money there, that the public interest will not be subserved by removing the present yard to this particular site, we have only got to say so and fail to make the appropriation. We are committed to nothing. We simply acquire the title to the land.

Mr. CATTELL. I am perfectly aware, Mr. President, that the anxiety of the Senate to dispose of this question will scarcely admit of their listening with any degree of patience to a further discussion of the subject; and in fact the very able manner in which the case has been presented by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS], who has charge of this bill, and the explicit statements of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, render it hardly necessary that I should occupy the time of the Senate to any very great extent. But, sir, of all the questions that have been presented to the Senate, this is the one with which I think I am most familiar. I have known this locality, League Island, from my boyhood up. I have been upon it many times. I am familiar with all the facts relating to the examinations which have taken place as to its adaptability as a location for a naval station; and I am prepared to stand here in my place as a Senator of the United States and to assert that in my opinion the declaration which has been made by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, that the map of the world does not present so desirable a location for the establishment of a naval station, especially in reference to iron-clads as League Island, is true.

Mr. President, it is not a little remarkable that the only opposition that has been made against the establishment of this naval station, against the removal, as proposed by this bill, of the Philadelphia navy-yard from its present cramped position nearly in the heart of the city of Philadelphia, surrounded on all sides by buildings, endangered by fire, and totally inadequate to the wants of the naval service, to League Island, and against the acceptance as a free gift of this magnificent situation for a naval station, has come to us from the State of Connecticut. I have never heard of a remonstrance, I have never listened to an argument, I have never read a pamphlet on the subject that has not proceeded from this source.

Mr. FOSTER. If the honorable Senator will allow me, I can point him to various other sources. The New York Chamber of Commerce sent resolutions here—I did not take the trouble to read them, but resolutions of a very decided and pointed character. The merchants of New York sent a memorial here, a memorial planned I believe by Captain Nye, Captain Marshall, and several other gentlemen of the very highest reputation as ship-masters and commercial men of the city of New York and signed by a very large portion of the merchants and ship-owners of the city of New York. I think I could name many others to the gentleman.

Mr. CATTELL. I will inquire of the gentleman if those papers were sent to this session of Congress or not? I have not heard of them. Probably they were sent here at the last session.

Mr. FOSTER. They were not sent here at this session. The Senator undoubtedly has not heard of them; but I should consider it a very unsafe rule to assert that a thing never occurred because I did not hear of it.

Mr. CATTELL. I simply said so far as my own knowledge was concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood the Senator to say that the opposition came solely from Connecticut.

Mr. CATTELL. So far as this session of Congress is concerned, speaking of the Senate, I have heard no remonstrance presented. None has been read in my hearing I am sure, or it would not have escaped my attention; and therefore I stated what I believed to be the fact so far as I was advised.

Mr. FOSTER. There has been none from Connecticut at this session; not one.

Mr. CATTELL. I will inquire of the gentleman whether the pamphlet which has been laid upon the desk of each Senator, entitled "Memorial of John R. Bolles and others remonstrating against the acceptance of League Island as a naval station," is not a pamphlet from Connecticut, and whether the gentleman whose names are attached to it are not residents of Connecticut?

Mr. FOSTER. They are not.

Mr. GRIMES. I am tolerably familiar with this subject, and I assert that the statement of the Senator from New Jersey is substantially correct; that all the opposition that has been made to the acceptance of League Island has come from Connecticut—not directly, but through the instrumentality of gentlemen doing business in New York, but residing in Connecticut, many of whom are known to me.

Mr. CATTELL. Now, Mr. President, while I am on this subject, having alluded to the paper which has been laid on my desk, and I presume on the desk of every Senator, signed by John R. Bolles, Robert H. McCurdy, William A. Haines, Thomas W. Williams, B. B. Thurston, W. H. W. Campbell, and George B. Lincoln, I desire to say that it contains some statements which are manifestly incorrect. I propose to call the attention of the Senate to a single one, and not to detain them by a detailed examination of the memorial. If I can show to Senators that there is one entire misrepresentation on this subject, it will enable them to judge of the value of the communication. On page 11 of this pamphlet will be found the following:

"By the proposition to remove the present navy-yard from Philadelphia to League Island is meant the establishment there of the great iron-clad navy-yard of the country. So all the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, the legislation of Congress on the subject, and all the reports clearly show that that locality is entirely unfitted for the purpose."

Here is a declaration in this pamphlet that all the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy show that this locality is entirely unfitted for the purpose, when the fact is that in four successive annual reports the Secretary of the Navy has urgently presented this subject to Congress, and, in the language of the gentleman from Connecticut himself, has "pertinaciously" insisted that League Island should be accepted as the proper place for a naval station for iron-clads.

Mr. FOSTER. If the honorable Senator will pardon me, I wish to state that the paragraph which he has read was pointed out to me by the proof-reader. It is a mistake in the punctuation and printing. I will read it as it should be pointed, and will correct the mistake. As it stands it is a mistake, as the honorable Senator suggests. It should read thus:

"So all the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, the legislation of Congress on the subject, and all the reports clearly show."

There there should be a full stop. The next word should begin with a capital:

"That that locality is entirely unfitted for the purpose we believe, among others, for the following reasons."

That should be the punctuation without adding a word or putting a word in. It is simply a mistake of the proof-reader, or of the printer and not corrected by the proof-reader. It was pointed out to me, and I should have corrected it before if I had supposed any Senator did not see it.

Mr. CATTELL. Mr. President, there are other statements contained in this pamphlet and in similar documents on this subject upon which I should like to dwell, but it would be altogether too tedious for me to detain the Senate by an examination of them. The proposition now before the Senate is a very simple one. The navy-yard in the city of Philadelphia has been presented year after year by the Secretary of the Navy as insufficient for the purposes of a naval station at that point. In 1862, when the requirements of the naval service were more fully shown by the breaking out of the rebellion, the attention of the Secretary of the Navy was called to this subject, and of his own accord, without any intimation from Philadelphia or Philadelphians; he examined the fresh-water tributaries of the Atlantic in order to discover the most available situation for the establishment of a naval station for iron-clads. He selected League Island. The very first knowledge that Philadelphians had on the subject was from an application made by the Secretary of the Navy to the mayor of Philadelphia asking his intervention in procuring League Island for this purpose without having to pay for it an exorbitant price. The mayor of Philadelphia sent a communication to the councils on the subject, and when the councils discovered that it was the wish of the Government to acquire League Island, and when they recognized that the removal of the navy-yard from its present position would be a very decided advantage to Philadelphia, as I propose directly to show you, they passed a resolution offering as a free gift to the Government of the United States the very location which the Department had selected above all others as the most desirable—not one which had been pressed upon them by Philadelphia or Philadelphians, but a location which they themselves had selected after a thorough examination by Chief Engineer Wood and Assistant Secretary Fox. The city of Philadelphia, anxious to do a great thing for the Government, anxious to secure this station in part, of course, for the advantage of Philadelphia, and anxious more than all other things to remove the present navy-yard, as it stands across the line of their southern wharf front, in order to have that extension southward which they have been driven to seek northward, purchased, or agreed to purchase, this island at a cost of $300,000, and offer it as a free gift to the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I do not for a moment pretend to say that this site should be accepted if it is not entirely suitable for the purpose; nay more, if it is not the very best spot along the Atlantic sea-board, I think it ought not to be selected. No one has appeared here claiming that because Philadelphia is a patriotic city she comes asking the Congress of the United States to grant her this naval station as a boon. There have been no such representations made to the Congress of the United States, and I sincerely trust there will be none. Philadelphia has too much pride of character to ask the national Government to do a thing contrary to its interests as a boon to her. During the whole of this conflict she has been loyal, faithful, and true to the country; but she does not come here asking that you shall do anything for her as a boon. On the contrary, she comes tendering to you the very best location which can be found on the Atlantic sea-board for a naval station. She does not ask you to pay an exorbitant price for it; she offers it to the Government as a free gift, and simply asks your acceptance of it.

Will any gentleman on this floor tell me what evil is to come from the passage of this bill? It does not appropriate a single dollar; it does not arrange for a single procedure in regard to League Island, except simply the acceptance of it by the Government of the United States as a gift. It does not appropriate even as much as will pay for the stamps which will be necessary to go upon the deed. It proposes that if a commission to be appointed on this subject shall approve of League Island, and shall report in its favor to the Secretary of the Navy, we will consent to receive from the city of Philadelphia a deed for this magnificent tract of six hundred acres of ground, and that then Congress in its wisdom shall do whatever it thinks best in the way of its improvement. It will be perfectly within the province of Congress, if the scientific men to be appointed shall report against it, to fail to make an appropriation to establish a naval station thereon. But I apprehend that when the merits of this location shall have been fairly understood by the Congress of the United States there will be no question on the subject.

It was a part of my purpose to read to you from the books which lie before me some testimony on this subject from very high officials, but I am sure that I should only weary the Senate by so doing. I am driven, therefore, by my own convictions of duty to the Senate to refrain from doing that, and shall content myself with a few simple statements.

The Secretary of the Navy, in his last four annual reports, has, in language as strong as he could command, urged upon the Congress of the United States the acceptance of League Island. In his report at the first session of the present Congress he states that work in our navy-yards has been very much retarded for want of room, and that especially in regard to the yard at Philadelphia this fact was true. And again in his report of this year he strongly urges upon the Congress of the United States the acceptance of League Island and the removal of the present yard from Philadelphia to the island. In addition to this, it has been examined by the Naval Committees of both Houses of Congress for several successive sessions. The Naval Committee of the House of Representatives visited the island during the last session of Congress, and I had the honor to accompany them on that visit. They returned from that visit in the very depth of winter, on the 16th or 17th of February, 1866, and reported in favor of the acceptance of League Island. The bill was presented to the House of Representatives, and it passed that body. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was reported back favorably. At the request of the enemies of the bill during the present session it was taken from the table and re-committed. The gentlemen opposed to the acceptance of League Island appeared day after day before the committee and argued their case; and it was finally reported back again to the Senate with the recommendation of the committee that the bill do pass.

I trust that in the discussion of this question the point will be kept steadily in view that neither the Secretary of the Navy nor the Congress of the United States, at any time during the consideration of this subject, have proposed the establishment of another navy-yard. The wants of the naval service require a more extensive yard than any we now have; but all the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, and all the recommendations of the Naval Committees of both Houses of Congress have looked in the direction of removing the Philadelphia navy-yard to a location which will afford sufficient room to accomplish the purpose desired by the Secretary of the Navy. I suppose there would be no doubt as to the acceptance of League Island for these purposes were it not that objections have been made to it by those who are interested in carrying this proposed naval station to a different location.

I propose briefly to consider the objections which have been urged against League Island, and to endeavor by the statements and documents in my possession to show that they have no foundation in fact.

The distinguished chairman of the committee on Naval Affairs has alluded to the fact that in this discussion great weight has been attempted to be given to the fact that a scientific commission appointed by the Navy Department have reported against League Island. In answer to that objection, I have simply to say that that commission were divided on the question as between New London and League Island in reference to a general navy-yard; but I submit that the entire commission admitted in their report, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Connecticut to the fact, and I propose to read from their report in support of my assertion that, so far as League Island was concerned as a naval station for iron-clads, the entire commission agree that it possesses advantages over New London. I propose to read to you now, Mr. President, from the report of the majority of the commission as to the quality of water near the site, whether fresh or salt, and its probable effect upon the bottoms of iron vessels when laid up for a length of time:

"The water of New London is salt, which is undoubtedly injurious to the bottoms of iron vessels; fresh water for laying up such vessels, when not wanted for active service, can be found a few miles higher up the river. Still this separation of the vessels from the immediate supervision of the officers of the yard would be inconvenient, and attended with additional cost in the necessary precautions for their protection and safe-keeping. This objection could be obviated by providing means for taking such vessels out of the water when not required for immediate service.

At League Island the water is fresh, and in this respect the board is of the opinion that the advantage is with League Island, so far as iron vessels are concerned."

The minority of the commission use still stronger language on this subject. They say:

"The water is perfectly fresh at League Island at all periods of the tide, and under all its variations and those of the winds. The site is therefore vastly superior to that at Winthrop's Point, where the water is salt at all times, especially for iron vessels. The bottom of an iron vessel fouled by a sea voyage would be cleaned, and perhaps the grass be killed, by remaining at League Island anchorage. The fresh water at League Island has little or no effect upon the iron of a vessel, while the salt water of Winthrop's Point corrodes the material more or less rapidly even when coated, and the coating itself is an expensive operation.

The spray from salt water in storms is very injurious to machinery near the sea-shore, and to this the works at New London would be exposed, while those at League Island would not."

The entire commission agree upon this point, that if the question was simply one of establishing a naval station for iron vessels, the fresh water (which is an indispensable requisite) at League Island would give it a decided superiority over New London.

The principal objection, however, which has been made to League Island is the bold assertion that it is a "mud flat;" that it is unfitted for a naval station on account of the want of proper foundations for the structures necessary to be erected; that it is a marsh; and the gentleman from Connecticut intimated that some of these days we might find it floating down toward Cape May. Sir, I said at the commencement of my remarks that I had been familiar from my boyhood with this island; and I have now to state here, in the presence of the Senate of the United States, that for the last forty years about two hundred and eighty acres of this island have been under cultivation; that at any period of the summer at which you will go there you will find fields of grass, fields of corn, fields of all the cereal productions growing upon this "mud flat," as it has been called by the gentleman from Connecticut. More than that, sir, upon this very island there are now growing oaks eighteen feet in circumference, which I have seen with my own eyes and which I have measured for myself.

Then, sir, as regards the lowness of League Island, the desk at which I sit in my office overlooks the Delaware river, and during the past twenty years I have seen some very heavy freshets upon that river, some of which have submerged almost the entire wharf-front of Philadelphia; and yet during the whole of those twenty years there has never been a single instance in which the water has risen so high as to cover League Island. Not a single freshet that has occurred within the last forty years, since the embankment has been made around the island, has been of sufficient magnitude to submerge League Island.

There are on League Island seven or eight houses; all, or nearly all of them have cellars that are perfectly dry. There are growing upon this "mud flat," as it has been called, oaks and buttonwoods and maples of immense size. There are upon it stumps, the rings upon which have been counted by gentlemen, showing them to be three hundred years old. More than that, in order to show the utter fallacy of this argument, I beg to say that I have in my possession a paper which clearly shows that League Island was once a part of the main land; and I state here now, that the geological formation of League Island is precisely the same as that of the adjoining main land; that it is precisely the same as that of the river front in the city of Philadelphia; that it is precisely the same formation as that upon which a portion of the present navy-yard and its heavy structures stand; that it is precisely the same soil as that upon which the Pennsylvania Railroad Company have recently erected an enormous elevator capable of containing from eight hundred thousand to one million bushels of grain, and that all these structures have been made with only the ordinary care of laying foundations which is adopted in all localities where you do not build upon the solid rock.

I hold in my hand a statement—and I vouch for its accuracy—by Mr. W. C. Bridges, taken from the records, which proves that when the deed was made for the island, February 10, 1784, it was shown to be a part of the main land, and that the Back Channel of which so much has already been said has probably been worn within the last hundred years by the currents produced by the confluence of the two rivers, the Delaware and the Schuylkill, running back of this island. I will read this statement to the Senate:

"The first deed of conveyance from the Pennsylvania Land Company was to Thomas Brown, dated February 10, 1784, of 'all that tract of land situate within the county of Philadelphia, in the Province of Pennsylvania,' describing the same as 'containing two hundred and sixty-two acres, be the same more or less, bounded southward by the river Delaware, westward partly by the said river, and partly by the mouth of Hollander's creek; northward by a certain inlet, and northeastward by a sand bar and flats which join it to the said Greenwich Lands.'

"It will thus be seen that League Island was part of the main land in 1784.

I have the original deposition of Richard Renshaw, dated January 9, 1784, wherein he affirms that he has walked at low water from the main land at Greenwich to League Island, and the bar connecting them was some six inches above the surface of the river.

Mr. McClure, in his report to the city councils of Philadelphia, in his survey of a section of the Delaware river, states the fact that the narrow channel between League Island and the Pennsylvania shore was shoaling constantly at the upper end, and that he has seen it at very low water entirely bare. McClure also states in his report that the depth of water, at low water, opposite the Buttermilk tavern toward the Jersey shore, was as much as twenty-nine feet, and opposite the south end of League Island as much as thirty-seven feet.

Commodore Stewart in a letter to Charles Wharton, dated January 7, 1837, says: 'The piers and wharves that may be erected at League Island will constitute a valuable acquisition to that part of the Delaware for securing our commerce from ice in winter and for accommodating any vessels with a good harbor in all violent northerly and easterly gales, which the present wharf-front of the city does not afford.'

These statements, made nearly a century ago, show conclusively that League Island was once part of the main land. This is further proven by the fact that its geological formation, as shown by the borings made by an officer appointed at the request of the Navy Department, by Professor Baché, is precisely the same as that of the adjoining main land, precisely the same as that along the entire line of the southerly river-front of Philadelphia.

In order that this point may be cleared up as we go along, I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that as there was a dispute in regard to the sufficiency of the foundations of League Island, while this question was receiving the attention of Congress, at the request of the Naval Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, Professor Baché detailed one of his assistants in the Coast Survey service to make borings on the island in various parts and to report the facts to him. I hold in my hand the report of Mr. George Davidson, who was the officer selected to do this work. I shall not detain the Senate by reading his report in detail, though it is exceedingly interesting. I will quote a few extracts therefrom, giving you simply the conclusions at which he arrives. He says:

"There are growing upon the island within the embankment eight fine oaks, five maples, eight ash, and sixteen button-balls, with possibly one or two hundred large willows. I made measurements of some of the trees, taken indiscriminately, with the following results: circumference of oaks, four feet above the ground, 124, 134, 134, 16, 184, 134, 13 feet; circumference of ash, four feet above the ground, 104, 94, 10 feet; circumference of button-balls, four feet above the ground, 84, 44, 74-5, 104-5 feet; circumference of maple, four feet above the ground, 112 feet.

With these facts before us, that there are now growing on this island trees of this magnitude, oaks eighteen feet in circumference, shown by an examination to be two hundred years old, that there are erected upon it seven or eight buildings with cellars, all of which are perfectly dry, eighteen or twenty barns and other out-houses for the protection of the cattle and the accommodation of the crops raised upon the island, is it to be imagined that we shall wake up one of these mornings and find this "mud flat" floating down toward Cape May? We have been very familiar with it in Philadelphia for many years. It has been a spot where some of us have been accustomed on summer afternoons to spend a few hours, enjoying the refreshing breezes which come from the Delaware; and we shall sadly miss it if, one of these days, in our ride out Broad street we shall find that this island has started afloat, and that it is somewhere between Philadelphia and Cape May.

Mr. President, it is just such attacks as these upon League Island that have created all this difficulty. It is these extravagant statements in regard to it that have caused all the trouble. There is something on this subject behind, which I cannot understand. There must be something of interested motives in the gentlemen who year after year stand at the door of Congress and oppose the acceptance of League Island as a naval station.

But, sir, what further does Mr. Davidson say on this subject? Recollect I am reading to you now from a report of an officer appointed by Professor Baché, at the request of the Department, to examine and officially report on this subject. He says:

"I cut into one of the oaks to determine approximately its age by the rings, and estimated it one hundred and sixty-two years old. At the same rate of growth the largest oak would be one hundred and ninety-two years."

Sir, this island has been anchored in its present position for a great while; and it will be remarkably strange if, after having been anchored long enough to grow these trees two or three hundred years old, it shall take a notion one of these days to start afloat and go down toward Cape May. Again, Mr. Davidson says:

"There are upon the island seven houses for residences, some with stone foundations, seven large barns, and about twenty cow-houses, out-buildings, &c. The stacks of chimneys for the houses are built directly upon the surface of the soil, and even the oldest is in good condition."

The conclusions to which this gentleman arrives, having been specially detailed for the purpose of examining this one point, the only point upon which the Naval Committee of either House have ever had any doubt in regard to League Island, are as follows:

"The borings and examinations which I have this day finished, and have herein described, establish the following conclusions."

I shall be glad if Senators who have any doubt on this subject of the solidity of the foundation of League Island will listen to the statements of an officer of repute and of standing, selected by Professor Baché, one of the purest men in official service in our country, to ascertain officially the facts and to report them to the Congress of the United States—

"1. That the surface soil averages about three and a half feet in thickness over the whole island; that it is a stiff, yellowish, clayey material, easily out when wet, and very hard when dry."

This is the "mud flat," the "ooze," that gentlemen are describing, of which this island is composed. Even its alluvium, the surface soil, is composed of stiff, hard clay. Does that look like its being a "mud flat," a deposit made here by the two rivers? No, sir; I assert that it is a part of the main land, and that the back channel has been made during the last one or two hundred years by the action of the current at the confluence of these two rivers, the Schuylkill and the Delaware, and it is proven from the fact that its geological formation is precisely the same as that of the main land. And further, Mr. Davidson says:

"2. That beneath this surface soil there is a stratum of very fine sand, laminated in places with dark clayey matter. Where this lamination exists there is an average of twelve layers of each to the inch. This fine sand stratum reaches an average depth of about twenty-five or twenty-six feet over two thirds of the embanked part of the island. At the extreme eastern and narrow end of the island it is about forty-five feet in thickness.

"This stratum is not water bearing, although water is formed near the surface under the clayey soil. It is damp and compact.

"3. That beneath the fine sand stratum lies the coarse sand, gravel, and boulder stratum, which was passed through at No. 2 to the coarse sand stratum.

"4. That with such material it is not necessary to use any piling for such machine-shops and machinery as abound in Philadelphia, nor for machine-shops or buildings of the heaviest description."

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that an officer of the Government of the United States, specially appointed to examine this subject of the sufficiency of the foundations of League Island, and who spent a month upon the island, boring to the depth of fifty or sixty feet, reports to his chief, and his chief reports to the Navy Department, and that comes to Congress, that with such material as he has found there, from actual observation and boring in various parts of the island, the soil is adapted, even without piling, to the heaviest structures that may be required there, with a single exception, which I will read:

"That proper foundations may be laid, on an average, about six feet below the surface of the fine sand stratum. That for the heaviest trip-hammers, for the heaviest trains of rolls, and for launching-ways, it may be necessary to drive piling to the stratum of sand, gravel, and boulders. This opinion, in my mind, amounts to conviction."

Mr. President, having given you the opinion of an officer specially appointed by the Government to examine this point and to report upon it; having made my own assertion here that League Island was originally a part of the main land, that it is not a reclaimed marsh, that it is simply low land, such as is found on the borders of most tidal rivers, especially in the middle States; that it is precisely the same kind of ground upon which your present navy-yard stands, and precisely the same kind of ground upon which the extensive buildings and wharf structures of Philadelphia are placed on the river front, I propose now to bring another witness into this case, one who has been quoted by the gentleman from Connecticut, and is quoted by the opponents of this measure in their pamphlets, and spoken of as high authority. It would afford me pleasure to read the entire letter which he has addressed to me; but I propose only to give to the Senate just so much of it as bears upon the subject of the sufficiency of the foundations of League Island. I read from a letter addressed to me by Strickland Kneass, the surveyor of the city of Philadelphia, a gentleman of the engineering profession, and of exceedingly high standing in his profession. He says:

"As to the navigation of the river from the island to the sea, you have better testimony than mine could be, or any I should present. As to the difficulty of erecting any structures that might be required for the purposes of a naval depot, I have never said aught that could be construed as condemnatory, and I now say that I know no reason why any structure, whether for ship-houses, machine-shops, machinery beds, store-houses, or even graving-docks should not be constructed with all confidence as to secure foundation. The borings made under the direction of the Government give satisfactory evidence for my assertion, and much experience in the use of piling and crib work confirms it."

"Irrespective of this outer front, there is what is termed the Back Channel, which, with League Island as a navy-yard, would be most admirably adapted for the condition of a basin for vessels lying in ordinary or even preparing for sea, or from which to branch dry or graving docks, the size of which, taking the present bank of the island and the shore as the limit, would be two miles long and near a quarter of a mile wide.

"In preparing this for a basin it would be necessary to build a timber cribbing across it, and a lock-gate at each end, and then excavate the material to such depth as would be requisite for the draft of our naval vessels. Out of this could be excavated sufficient material to fill the entire surface of the island to such elevation as would be desired, so that the very construction of this grand basin would give material for filling the island. As to the quality of this material for such purposes of filling, I can say that I have constructed a number of wharves upon the Delaware front, and find that this material, as thrown upon the new wharf by the dredging-machine, in a very short time drains out and becomes a most admirable wharf surface, hard and compact. The large proportion of sand contained in the material on our river flats facilitates very greatly its being rapidly freed from the water; and once free, the permanency of the river banks shows its quality to resist the percolation of water when moved from its natural bed and made into a compact embankment.

"The filling of the island should estimate to cost about thirty cents per cubic yard upon so large a piece of work, therefore as it would require one thousand six hundred and twenty cubic yards to raise an acre of area one foot in elevation, we can compute the cost for raising an acre six feet at $2,916; as to the cost of piling, it cannot be estimated per acre, as the piles would be placed only where it would be requisite to support the weight under the lines of walls, or under the bed-plates of machinery, a fair estimate would be six dollars each, or say for a building covering an acre seven hundred and twenty-six by sixty, the furnishing and driving eight hundred and forty piles would be $5,040. These prices I give you as upon work of similar character completed lately under my supervision.

"As to the distance from the built-up portions of the city, I find that upon Broad street, which is rapidly becoming a most noble thoroughfare, straight as an arrow and twelve miles long, the buildings are now within two miles of the island, with a passenger railway at Washington avenue, ready to extend their line to the river so soon as the favorable action of Congress is obtained."

I beg you to remember, Mr. President, that I am reading now a letter from the gentleman who has been quoted by the gentleman from Connecticut as adverse to League Island as a naval station, a gentleman admitted to be of high authority by the opponents of this measure in the pamphlets which are before us. He concludes by saying:

"Its applicability for a navy-yard, so far as any required erections are concerned, I have personally no hesitation in approving; and as to its general fitness the remark made by his honor the Secretary of the Navy in my presence, that England would give the whole of Canada to secure such a location for her naval depot," is most convincing.

I attach a map to show the position of the island and the Back Channel basin, relative to the city improvement.

"Respectfully submitted,

"STRICKLAND KNEASS,
"Chief Engineer and Surveyor, City of Philadelphia."

While I am upon this point in reference to the adaptability of League Island for a naval station, I hold in my hand a letter from Commodore Turner, who was in command of the iron-clads at this station for over a year, which I will read:

PHILADELPHIA, February 6, 1867.

MY DEAR SIR: As the question of the acceptance of League Island by the Government will soon, I presume, come up, I have thought a letter from myself, the officer commanding that station, to one of the delegates from this city, illustrating its adaptability to all the purposes of a great naval arsenal and building yard, would not be out of place or without effect. I claim to know as much about its capacity, facilities, and advantages as any one, as my service there has not only made me familiar with every feature of it, but I have been employed by the Government upon the very same sort of soil only a mile distant for several years, erecting the public buildings of magazine, shell-house and out-houses which stand upon the grounds of Fort Mifflin at present, where I piled and filled in wherever it was necessary.

In case of a transfer of this yard to League Island, the necessity of Navy officers connected with it, residing there at such personal inconvenience, would naturally prejudice them against it, and so far as my personal connection with it at present is concerned I should very much prefer going to sea. Therefore, I claim the utmost disinterestedness in stating my deep-rooted conviction that it would be a fatal error to allow such an opportunity to escape of receiving as a munificent gift a spot abounding in every advantage that could commend it to the public favor for such a place as we so much need at this moment for the construction of first-class iron vessels.

There are only three objections that its most bitter opponents have been able to urge against it, namely: its unhealthiness, the fear of being ice-bound, and the depression of the island below average tide. I shall dispose of them successively.

1. Its unhealthfulness, which is simply ridiculous, because the Philadelphia yard was subject to the same objections originally, of being surrounded by low swampy lands, is now as healthy as any one of our naval stations, made so, by the same process as would obtain at League Island, by drainage, reclaiming the land, and populating the district.

2. Interruption to navigation by ice, to which it may be answered that the same objection would be applicable to New York or Boston, when the ice forms so solidly as to make it at times both dangerous and impracticable to attempt to go in or out, and I may add that I have rarely known an occasion, even during our most severe winters here, that a vessel was detained more than a few days. Our tug-boats that were prepared for it have been going up and down this river during nearly the whole of the winter, which has been a very severe one, and the vessels of the fleet moored on the Delaware side of League Island, where the water is deep and the tide rapid, have retained their places without injury and even without a pier to protect them. Upon this point there is less to apprehend than at the Philadelphia yard, as the Horse Shoe, where the ice forms more than in any part of the river below, is above League Island, and the channel below always less obstructed than above.

3. The character of the soil of League Island and the depression of the surface below mean tides necessitating piling under heavy structures and filling in wherever a dry surface was required, to which it may be answered that almost at every one of our navy yards filling has to be done more or less in certain localities to gain a substantial foundation. It would be necessary at League Island wherever it was proposed to erect massive buildings, and of course only there. There would be no necessity whatever of elevating the surface anywhere excepting only where roads are to be made and buildings were to be erected. If I remember correctly, I raised the ground at Fort Mifflin on the magazine lot a little over two feet by filling in, after which the surface was as dry as any upland.

The banks around League Island of solid earth on the Delaware side, strengthened at particular points by a wall of retentment, kept in order by the owners of the property, have given a proper protection to the island. This objection I consider of minor account, and I do not know that it might not in some respects be claimed ever as an advantage, in building docks for ships and reservoirs for timber, that less earth would have to be removed and water carried through the island for various purposes with less expense and greater facility, although the Back Channel of itself affords an immense accommodation to purposes of that nature. I shall conclude this long letter by simply enumerating some of the advantages of League Island (as drawn from the report of the last board, of which Admiral Davis was president) for a great navy-yard, especially for the construction of iron vessels.

1. Fresh water so necessary for their preservation.
2. Depth of water at the foot of Broad street, on the Delaware, nearly thirty feet at high water, while the Back Channel is sixteen feet at high water, which could be dredged out to gravel twelve feet deeper.

3. Proximity to a large city, whence supplies, materials, and labor could be obtained so readily.

4. Remoteness from the sea, inaccessibility to our enemy.

5. Facilities of obtaining iron and coal so near the coal and iron regions.

6. Isolated entirely from the surrounding country, inland. The Government by the proposed charter of presentation having the entire right to the western bank of the Back Channel.

7. And lastly, a donation or gift without reservation, costing nothing, and possessing everything almost that could be desired, if we had the power to command and to assemble in one spot the requisites to authorize its purchase.

These, sir, are some of the considerations which it seems to me must force themselves upon the mind of any impartial intelligent person who examines the subject in favor of securing this place while it can be had. I have read with pain and surprise several articles in the New York papers, written, I suppose, by interested persons, intended to mislead the public and to prejudice the island, some of them too silly to notice. I am sure there is not a representative in Congress who has the good and glory of his country at heart that would not, if he fully understood the subject, at once give his support to it. We are a great people, great in all the elements which make great nations, in education, wealth, enterprise, ingenuity, energy, intelligence, love of freedom and independence, proud of our place among the nations of the world, and determined to maintain it at every hazard and cost, as we have lately shown, and we must keep ourselves in a position and condition to assert our rights and to defend them, and for this purpose we must look to our defenses, to our armaments, to the material to construct them, and to some capacious appropriate locality adequate to our wants, combining all the requisites to enable us to develop our energy and ingenuity in that direction.

France and Great Britain are making immense strides toward the construction of a powerful iron fleet. We should keep pace with them, at least to the extent of being able to guard our coasts and ports with a class of vessels that would defy them, and nothing is more necessary at this moment, in view of the wants of the country, than just such a place as League Island. I trust no sectional feeling in Congress will embarrass the consideration of this subject.

It is, in my judgment, of such vital importance at this particular moment, from various considerations, that I hope it will receive the earliest attention of Congress. I have no interest whatever in the acceptance of League Island beyond that which must animate every lover of his country, namely, to secure to it a place to build up and lay up very large fleets, which, for such a purpose, cannot be surpassed, if equaled, by any other locality in the length or breadth of the land.

The honorable Secretary of the Navy urges it; the Assistant Secretary, who has critically examined the ground, and who, from his professional knowledge is well qualified to judge, urges it. The board which was organized in July last to consider and report upon it emphatically indorsed its acceptance without hesitation or reservation; and it would be a sad reflection to be entailed upon us years hence that private and political interests or prejudices had snatched such a precious prize from the possession of the General Government.

I certify that the above is a true copy of a letter addressed by me to one of the Representatives in Congress from this city during the time I was commanding at League Island, about a year ago.

T. TURNER.

Commodore, United States Navy.

Commodore Turner was in charge of the iron-clads at League Island for a long time, and he had perhaps as good opportunities of coming to a proper conclusion in regard to this subject as any other person in the land.

Then in regard to the adaptability of League Island for a naval station, as regards its soil being fitted for the foundations of the proper structures, I have only to say that we have first its selection by Chief Engineer Wood and Assistant Secretary Fox, and their indorsement followed by the indorsement of the Secretary of the Navy; and it will be remembered that the Secretary of the Navy comes in contact constantly with all the prominent officers connected with the naval service, and that this has been a prominent subject of conversation among naval gentlemen for years. If he had been in error, it would have been corrected long ago by his contact with those officers. We have next a report in favor of League Island, bearing upon this very point by Professor Baché, one of the most eminent scientific men in the country, and who from the particular line of his profession is peculiarly qualified to form a correct judgment on this subject, and his report is concurred in by Commodore Marston. In addition to all this, we have the indorsement of a fresh board, of which Admiral Davis was chairman, who examined League Island and reported favorably; and we have a favorable report from the House Committee on Naval Affairs, who were personally present and examined the island for themselves. Then we have a report of the chairman of the Naval Committee of the Senate, who tells you that he has been three or four times upon the island and made personal examinations which has fully satisfied him.

I submit that when you add to all this such testimony as that which comes from Commodore Turner, and when you add to it the testimony which I have read from the first engineer of the city of Philadelphia, these extravagant assertions which are constantly being made in the Senate, that the foundations of League Island are insufficient for the establishment of a naval station, ought to cease. I repeat that the island was originally a part of the main land, that the borings under the supervision of the officer appointed for that special purpose show that it has precisely the same geological formation as the adjoining main land. We have also the positive statement of this officer, after a thorough examination, that its foundations are firm and sufficient for all purposes of a naval station, and his statement on this point is fully indorsed by Professor Baché, his chief. And I submit that it is quite time that these extravagant declarations, that the island is but a "mud flat," which some day or other may be found floating down the river on its way to Cape May, should be stopped.

I have before me, but I shall not detain the Senate by reading them, statements from some of the first engineers in the State of Pennsylvania, who expressly declare that the foundations at League Island are precisely such as are wanted for the purpose in view, and that piling will only be necessary in instances where the very heaviest structures, such as those for heavy trip-hammers, are required; and they further say that when you seek a foundation for such heavy structures, precisely the soil that you have upon League Island, after you pile it, is just the foundation required for such structures, and that granite or rock is not desirable as a foundation for such structures.

I have before me abundant data, which if I had time I would present to the Senate, showing that the lowness of League Island, instead of being an objection, is really an advantage. As has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that the necessary excavations for your docks and the necessary excavations for widening and deepening the Back Chappel, in order to make it one of the finest harbors for naval vessels to be found in the world, will produce material enough to fill up the island, and it will be absolutely convenient and economical to have a near dumping-place for the material; and besides, it will be the very best material that can possibly be found for filling up. I know it has been stated that this material is ooze; but I am sure if any gentleman will take the trouble of examining the report made by Mr. Davidson of his borings, he will be convinced that such is not the fact, and that the very soil which is deposited by the eddy which has been formed here by the confluence of these two rivers is absolutely a clay soil, and this fact has been stated over and over again by gentlemen who are conversant with the subject.

There is another objection to League Island which the Senator from Connecticut has dwelt largely upon, and that is, its distance from the sea. In my opinion that, instead of being an objection, is a decided advantage. We cannot afford to have a naval station of this magnitude very near to the sea-coast. On this point perhaps it is better not to state opinions of my own, but to give you high naval authority, and I therefore beg leave to read to the Senate a letter from Admiral Porter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 6, 1866.

DEAR SIR: Someone is quoting me as being opposed to the location of a navy-yard at League Island. I take the liberty of stating to you that this is not so. I have always been in favor of League Island. I consider the present navy-yard at Philadelphia a reproach to the country. We have not a single navy-yard that meets the requirements of the Navy. Some persons object to League Island owing to its distance from the sea. That is its chief merit; it is away from the attacks of an enemy. I hope that Congress will give us one decent navy-yard, and it can be done at League Island.

I remain, respectfully, yours,

DAVID D. PORTER.

Rear Admiral.

League Island is distant seventy miles from the sea; and in regard to the depth of the water I have only to say that ships of as great depth of water can be brought into the harbor of Philadelphia without difficulty as can be taken into New York. There is a depth of twenty-five feet of water, which is sufficient for the largest class of vessels belonging to our Navy. Vessels of the largest size have been built at the Philadelphia navy-yard, and, until the removal of that yard to League Island has been talked of, there never has been a question suggested or a doubt entertained as to there being the necessary depth of water in the Delaware. I submit, then, that there is no objection to League Island upon this point.

One other objection which is urged is the obstruction which is caused by ice. The Senator from Connecticut, in the course of his remarks, stated that for weeks and weeks during the present winter the navigation of the Delaware river had been obstructed from League Island downward. I am aware, as must be every Senator, that this has been a very severe winter; but the information of the Senator from Connecticut is not correct. There has been no difficulty, during all the severity of this winter, in the navigation of our river up to League Island. The difficulty has been between League Island and Philadelphia. The chairman of the Naval Committee has already described to you that the chief difficulty in the navigation of the Delaware river to Philadelphia on account of ice is at the Horse Shoe, which is above League Island. At this locality, during severe winters, the ice does gorge, and the navigation of the river is sometimes interrupted for brief periods, but nothing like so much as the enemies of this bill attempt to show. I hold in my hand a letter written by a gentleman of Philadelphia, the president of one of the city banks, who has been for some years the lessee of League Island, which I will read:

PHILADELPHIA, February 5, 1867.

DEAR SIR: You know from accounts you have had that this winter has been unusually severe. In the neighborhood of Philadelphia the Delaware river much of the time has been closed from the Horse Shoe (above League Island) to the city. Vessels could come to the island when they could not reach the city. I have seen two of the Boston steamers at the island when they could not reach the city, and within the last two weeks twelve oyster boats landed their cargoes, not being able to get above the Horse Shoe during this late severe weather.

Yours, respectfully,

WILLIAM F. HUGHES.

Hon. A. G. CATTELL.

And I am informed by gentlemen, in whose testimony I place the fullest reliance, that there has been no time during the present winter when League Island has not been accessible from the mouth of the Delaware, and that no interruption could have taken place in the arrival or departure of steam vessels between that point and the sea during the severe weather through which we have just passed.

There is one other point on which I shall say a few words, and then relieve the Senate, for I am sure they are anxious that this subject shall be disposed of. Much has been said in regard to the unhealthfulness of League Island; and as this is an important point, I have taken some pains to endeavor to satisfy the Senate with regard to it, and I think I shall be able to do so. In the first place, let me say that I have been familiar with this location for twenty years myself, and never before this debate have I heard a rumor or a suggestion that League Island was unusually unhealthy. I have been upon the island every summer for many years past; I have seen the inhabitants living upon the island and have conversed with them freely, and I have never seen the slightest evidence nor heard a single word which would lead me to suppose that League Island was not as healthy as the shores of any tidal river in the middle States. Not only can I give you my personal observation on this point, but I beg to read a letter from Dr. Ward, the health officer of the city of Philadelphia:

HEALTH OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA,

SOUTHWEST CORNER SIXTH AND SANBORN STREETS,

February 5, 1867.

MY DEAR SIR: I am surprised to see that those who are opposed to the selection of League Island as a "naval station" representing it as very unhealthy. I am free to say, from personal observation, such is not the fact. I have attended professionally for some ten or twelve years nearly all the families who have resided on the island during that period, and am able to say that less disease has occurred there according to this population than in the built-up portion of this city. That League Island is a healthy location, no one who is familiar therewith can for a moment doubt. I regard it entirely so.

Yours, very respectfully,

E. WARD,

843 South Third street.

Hon. A. G. CATTELL, United States Senate.

On this point I beg leave also to read a letter of Mr. Hughes, the lessee of this island:

PHILADELPHIA, February 5, 1867.

DEAR SIR: I see that League Island has been attacked on account of unhealthfulness. I would state that I have been in possession of it for twenty-four years, and that the average population is thirty persons during each year for the whole time, and only five deaths have taken place during that long time, as follows: one from rupture of blood vessel, one from disease of kidneys, one from cancer, one from cholera, (several years ago, when it was in Philadelphia,) and one from typhus fever, and was the result of neglect. Commodore Turner, who has had charge of the iron-clads for fifteen months, stated that he never had charge of a healthier station, and referred to his report, and only one man was on the sick list, (and that only a sore limb.) His official report, I think, will show he had some ninety men. During the long time I have been connected with the island I have spent much of my time there, and am entirely satisfied that the location is perfectly healthy.

Yours, respectfully,

WILLIAM F. HUGHES.

Hon. A. G. CATTELL.

But, sir, I have testimony coming much closer to this point. I have a letter from Commander Irwin, who is in charge of the iron-clad fleet at League Island, on this very point:

LEAGUE ISLAND, February 6, 1867.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry as regards the health of League Island, I have to state that I have resided there one year, having a very comfortable house, with dry cellars. During my residence the health of the men employed to take care of the iron-clads has been remarkably good, although they have been exposed at all times and in all weathers. Assistant Surgeon Simon reports but four cases of chills and fever during the past year. During that time we have had over two hundred men in our employ. In my opinion League Island is a very healthy locality, and is the very best site for a naval station that I have seen.

Yours truly,

JOHN IRWIN,

Commander United States Navy.

CHARLES DUTILL, Esq., President Pennsylvania Company Insurance Lives, &c.

But in order that there might be no mistake in regard to this matter, inquiries have been made of a family now living on the island, and who have lived there thirteen years. Surely, from the statement of the Senator from Connecticut, one would have supposed they ought to have been in their graves long ere this if they have been living there and breathing the miasmatic atmosphere of this terribly unhealthy locality:

LEAGUE ISLAND, February 5, 1867.

We, John and Margaret Horn, do hereby certify that we have lived on League Island since March, 1853; have raised seven children on said island, all of whom are now living and perfectly healthy, and that we, the said John and Margaret Horn, have always and are now blessed with most excellent health.

MARGARET HORN,
JOHN HORN.

Witness: L. H. HILL.

Then I have given you upon this point of unhealthfulness the testimony of a physician practicing at League Island, who is also the health officer of Philadelphia; the testimony of Commodore Turner, the testimony of Commander Irwin, the testimony of the residents of the island. Is anything more wanted?

Mr. President, I am sure that the Senate is tired of the discussion of this question; I am aware that many of the members entertain the opinion that there are other and more important measures which ought to be now under the consideration of the body; and every moment that I have stood upon this floor talking upon this subject I have been embarrassed by the conviction that I ought not to occupy the time of the Senate. I have only to say, in conclusion, that from an intimate acquaintance with League Island, from a thorough and personal examination of it in all its parts, without the slightest interest other than to serve my country in the selection of the most available site, I stand here in the Senate to say that in my judgment League Island possesses more advantages and presents fewer objections than any site which can be found for a great iron-clad naval station on the Atlantic coast from the Bay of Fundy to the Gulf of Mexico. I acknowledge that there is a very wide difference between the statements of the Senator from Connecticut and my own on this subject; but I am willing to put myself upon the record here for the truth of what I say. Taking everything into consideration, considering the insular position of this locality, considering its extensive area, considering its immense water front; taking into view the fact that it has a back channel, which at a very moderate expense can be prepared so as to form a magnificent basin in which all the vessels of our Navy could find safe anchorage; taking into consideration the fact that the proposition is not for the establishment of another navy-yard, but simply the removal of the one we now have in Philadelphia from an inconvenient and cramped location to a better one; taking into view the fact that it is in the immediate vicinity of the coal-fields and iron-beds of the great State of Pennsylvania, and that it would be simply ridiculous to establish an iron-clad station three hundred or four hundred or five hundred miles away from those supplies; taking into consideration that it lies immediately adjoining a city that is noted for mechanics of the highest skill, especially in the metals; taking into consideration that it is offered as a free gift by the city of Philadelphia, and taking into consideration the further fact that no proposition is here made to appropriate a dollar, that nothing is asked of the Congress of the United States but to consent to receive from the city of Philadelphia a gift of six hundred acres of ground which has been pronounced by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, by Professor Baché, by Commodore Turner, by Admiral Porter, by scores and hundreds of others to be the very best location along the whole sea-board for this purpose—in view of all these considerations, surely the passage of this bill is but a very reasonable request.

Will the Senate of the United States, under these circumstances, refuse this munificent donation when the power is reserved to decide hereafter what shall be done with the island? The Congress of the United States reserves the right to appropriate not even a single dollar for it if the engineer-officers shall report that it is unfit for the purpose. Besides, it is evident that this change will give you from a million and a half to two million dollars, arising from the sale of the present navy-yard in Philadelphia, for the purpose of preparing this one. In view of all these considerations, I ask in the name of the interests of the nation and in the name of the interests of the Navy, why is it that this proposition shall be met with such malignant opposition on this floor? I submit, Mr. President, that the opposition to this bill arises from a disposition to draw attention away from this point, because there is a desire to fix this navy-yard at another locality. The opposition has sprung from that, and from that alone. The opposition has been sectional. If there is a disposition to establish another navy-yard, if a necessity shall be shown for a new and additional navy-yard, and if it shall be shown that New London is a proper place for it, and especially if two conditions shall be provided there, first, fresh water instead of salt; and second, to have the yard a few miles from the sea, so as to be easily made defensible, I shall not object to New London having its desired navy-yard. Her people deserve it for the pertinacity with which they have persisted on this subject; for, as the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has said, they have pressed that site upon the attention of the Government since the year 1800. In 1802 a report was made, and again in 1817, at both of which times New London was rejected. In 1826 the question came up again in Congress, and New London was again rejected. For three generations the people about New London, conceiving that they had the only site along the Atlantic which was proper for a naval station, have been pressing it upon the attention of Congress; but they have never been able, except in one single instance, to get any commission or any department to recommend it.

I submit, Mr. President, that this question is a simple one. After all the discussions which have taken place, after all the examinations which have been had, the Senate of the United States is simply asked to agree to this bill from the House of Representatives accepting the title to League Island, provided that yet another board of officers shall approve it. I submit that it would be the height of folly for this Chamber now to refuse to accept such a proposition.

I regret, Mr. President, that I have detained the Senate so long, and that I have so poorly and so feebly stated the strength of this case. I have come far short of expressing the deep convictions of my own mind in regard to it. I have forborne to read from the mass of testimony which I have before me bearing upon the subject, because I have felt that I have already consumed too much of the time of the Senate when there are so many questions of momentous importance demanding its attention.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not, Mr. President, understand why the Senator from New Jersey should undertake to declare that the ground of opposition to the acceptance, as he says, of this munificent gift is simply a malignant opposition, based on sectional prejudices or partialities. I do not understand the reason for such a claim. I do not understand either why that honorable Senator should undertake to say that the opposition here comes only from Connecticut, and that all the allegations in regard to League Island are slanders originated in the State of Connecticut, and either repeated by the Senators from that State, or if they come nominally through other sources, are really inspired from Connecticut; and in that connection the honorable Senator from Iowa took occasion to say, in reply to the suggestion that resolutions came here from the Chamber of Commerce of New York and the merchants of New York, that they had their inspiration from Connecticut, or from citizens of Connecticut who are living in New York, and therefore were tainted with Connecticut feeling.

Now, Mr. President, to quiet the honorable Senator from New Jersey on this subject, and to quote an authority which he will not charge with any partiality for Connecticut, or any other connection with Connecticut than what was perfectly proper for him to have, I beg leave to read a few words from a speech made in this Senate not long since. It was made in July, 1862; and in order that the honorable Senator may be perfectly possessed of any notion that it is of Connecticut origin, or that it was inspired by any citizen of Connecticut, I will tell him in the outset that I propose to read from the speech of Hon. John C. Ten Eyck, formerly a Senator of the United States from the State of New Jersey, in the Senate of the United States, on the 4th of July, 1862. I presume the gentleman has heard of him, and if not, he is remembered in this body as a Senator who well and worthily represented his State during the period that the State assigned to him the duty of sitting here as her Senator. Mr. Ten Eyck said in reply to some remarks made by the Senator from Iowa:

"I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that he considered the safety and permanency and future success of the Navy to depend upon the passage of this bill, and the acquisition of the title to this island in the Delaware river for the purposes designated. All I have to say upon that subject is, that if such be the case, Heaven save the Navy!"

Again:

"If all these things are to be regarded as naught, unless League Island, in the river Delaware, can be acquired for the purposes of the Navy, I repeat, Heaven save the Navy, and Heaven protect the glory of the Navy!"

A little further on he said:

"Why, sir, I live not far remote from League Island, only about seventeen miles from that place, and I assert that I believe there is not a foot of solid ground on the whole island."

I beg the honorable Senator from New Jersey to remark that that is no Connecticut slander. I do not assert that it is true, but I do not propose to stand here as the honorable Senator does, resting on my personal assertion either as to the unfitness of League Island or the fitness of New London: I read from what I deem to be authority, and am not disposed to put my personal character in issue here:

"It is low, meadowy, marshy land, and every foot that will be required for the public service in the construction of a navy-yard, for the building of houses, or for any other such purpose, will have to be made ground. So, although they may give you an island, they give you a spongy, marshy, meadowy soil, which must be made solid land before it can become useful or proper for the purposes designed by this bill, and it will not only cost $200,000 for piling, dredging, filling, and excavating, but it will, perhaps, cost half a million or more."

Two hundred thousand dollars was mentioned because there was then a clause in the bill that proposed to accept this most magnificent gift and appropriate $200,000 to make it fit to be received, so that we could enter the promised land and take it. And the honorable Senator who then represented the State of New Jersey—no, I will not say as well as the present Senator, because I will make no comparisons; they are odious; but who at that time did represent the State of New Jersey, and well represented it—said that it would cost more than half a million in effect to make the island so that it could be taken by the United States; and it seemed on the whole at that time so very remarkable an event to have in the same bill that proposed to accept a gift an appropriation of $200,000 to be expended so as to make it fit to be taken that that was stricken out, and it has never since appeared in the bill. We propose to take it now naked and alone. But further; this is not Connecticut authority and of course I shall be pardoned for reading it. Mr. Ten Eyck goes on to say:

"Why, sir, these islands there are pushed over in skiffs at high tide by sportsmen when shooting reed-bird and rail. The cost would be millions, perhaps, in order to make these islands available, according to the best information I have, for the purposes designed by this bill.

"Again: it is unnecessary that we should receive this island for the purpose designed. The Government now own in that neighborhood tracts of land suitable and appropriate for the purpose, where they can construct a navy-yard without its costing a dollar. The Government now own a valuable property at Fort Mifflin, just a little way below this island, with an extended water front. The Delaware river in winter is less obstructed by ice below the Schuylkill than above it. Besides this, the Government has seven acres of high land at the old Lazaretto, and more than one hundred acres of reclaimed marsh land. If it becomes necessary to move the navy-yard south of the city, it may be moved down to the Government property at Fort Mifflin, where there will be no necessity for piling and ditching and draining and filling and excavating and building walls for the purpose of making a site valuable for a navy-yard. And then, again, there is a road over the Schuylkill river by a bridge at Penrose Ferry direct to Fort Mifflin, while League Island is isolated, and if we accept this magnificent present we have yet to build a bridge in order to make it accessible from the main land. I assure Senators that there is some danger of their being carried away by this splendid lure of a magnificent present which the city of Philadelphia now offers to bestow upon the United States."

The idea of calling it "magnificent" is not original with the Senator, [Mr. CATTELL:]

"We not only shall have to make the soil for the purpose, but we shall have to build an extensive bridge and make a road over an extent of marsh in order to get there, when the Government owns land in the immediate neighborhood sufficient for the purpose, and fast and highland also. I submit to the Senate, if no appropriation is now required for this purpose, the second section having been stricken out of the bill, whether it is not manifest to every man that hundreds of thousands of dollars will hereafter be required to make this island available to the Government for the purposes designed. Pass the bill and the wedge will have been entered."

Listen to the honorable Senator from New Jersey and the honorable Senator from Iowa now, Mr. President. They tell you the bill does not take a dollar from the Treasury, it simply proposes to accept, if another board shall recommend it, this magnificent gift from the city of Philadelphia. Not a dollar from the Treasury, repeat both the honorable Senators; not a dollar unless Congress shall hereafter vote to appropriate it. That is true; but do we not all understand what is meant when that allegation is made? Is it not perfectly clear, as the honorable Senator from New Jersey, whose remarks I am quoting, (Mr. Ten Eyck,) said, this is simply the entering wedge. Pass the bill, accept the island, and then pass your millions of appropriations to make it fit for the purposes that it was accepted for. Is it proposed by the honorable Senators that the Government of the United States should accept this munificent gift and then not make use of it? Why should we accept it? Why, but to establish a naval depot there; and if you establish a naval depot there is it not to cost money and a vast sum of money? Does anybody doubt it? Why, then, undertake to press upon the Senate that you are voting away no money, and that there being no money in the bill it is idle to oppose it? The honorable Senator from New Jersey, whose words I have just quoted and I will quote his words again, said then what it is quite appropriate to say now—

"Pass the bill and the wedge will have been entered."

As this is not Connecticut authority, and as it is authority to which the honorable Senator from New Jersey will of course yield every respect, I must be pardoned for reading a few sentences more. I have no doubt it is pleasant to the honorable Senator to hear it because it is wholly free from any Connecticut influence or bias:

"What does the city of Philadelphia ask in exchange for this magnificent gift? I have heard nothing. It does not appear on the face of the bill; it would not be wise that it should; but is the city of 'Brotherly Love' so full of kindness as its name implies? So fond and munificent that it will make a present of this island, valued at $300,000, for no earthly return? No sooner shall we pass this bill than we shall have another proposition to cede to the city of Philadelphia the site of the present navy-yard. They want it for building purposes or some other return. There is a motive for this thing."

Mr. President, this is no Connecticut insinuation, no sly innuendo or slander of Philadelphia from Connecticut; it is from New Jersey, the good, glorious State of New Jersey, famed in revolutionary times, famed ever since, famed when she had Mr. Ten Eyck for her Senator, and famed now she has the honorable Senator, [Mr. CATTELL,] who vindicates the name and fame of his State so well here now:

"There is a motive for this thing; and although it does not appear on the face of the bill, yet it appears in the surrounding negotiations which have been set on foot for this purpose. We are to abandon all our works there, all our wharves, screw-docks, dry-docks, all our buildings, all our workshops, all our machinery is to be removed for the purpose of accepting this magnificent gift."

The honorable Senator's predecessor seemed to have a peculiar love for that expression, "magnificent gift." There is something noble in it:

"If the navy-yard at Philadelphia is not sufficiently extensive there is plenty of land connected with and adjoining it on the south which can be procured for the purpose of enlarging it, and I know that there has been a proposition in the city for some time past to acquire that adjoining property for the purpose of enlarging the yard. Let the yard remain where it is, and if it is not sufficiently extensive in its dimensions, let the property adjoining it, which can be obtained, be procured for the purpose."

"I am myself perfectly satisfied that it would be prejudicial and injurious, exceedingly so, to the Treasury for us to accept the gift of this island; and for that reason, and for that alone, I shall vote against this bill."

I trust the honorable Senator from New Jersey will believe after this that it is possible for a man to oppose this bill without having any sectional prejudice, any malignant hostility that induces him to make the opposition. If not, of course I must submit to the intimation that my opposition is merely sectional. The honorable Senator went on to assert that New London deserved a navy-yard. Now, Mr. President, I say that New London does not deserve a navy-yard. I assert distinctly that New London can make no claim on the ground of desert to having a navy-yard; not but that New London deserves just as much as any other town situated as she is; but no town, no State, deserves a navy-yard. I scout all such notions as that. If a navy-yard is to be built, I repeat what I said before, it should be built in the best place for it; and the place where nature has made the best provision for a navy-yard, where it will be most advantageous to the country, that is the place that deserves it, and no other place does deserve it. That is all there is about deserving in a navy-yard.

The honorable Senator from Iowa took occasion to remark that some gentlemen at some times had talked about the soil of League Island being spongy and shaling like a jelly, intimating that that came from men who knew nothing about the matter, probably from Connecticut. I will read a word or two on that point, therefore, from what was said by Mr. Ten Eyck at a subsequent session, January 24, 1863:

"I do not pretend to say that a portion of the land lying back from the river is not fast land, permanent to the soil, if it may be called soil; but all that which has the appearance of land lying upon the river immediately adjacent thereto is so spongy that if a man steps with his foot upon it it will shake like a jelly; and I am told they cannot find a bottom, let them go as deep as they may."

"I did not intend to make another allusion in relation to this proposition. I did not propose to take any further part in this debate. I only uttered spontaneously last session what my feelings were on the subject, based on information source, and from some knowledge of the character of the island myself, believing conscientiously that the Treasury of the United States would be sadly damaged by the acceptance of this gift, believing that it would be infinitely better and wiser on the part of the Government to make a purchase of fast land suitable and proper for such a construction than to receive this as a gift. Having said this much, I do not propose to say more."

And, Mr. President, perhaps it would be as wise for me, in the language of the Senator from New Jersey whom I have just been quoting, to say no more myself; and I should not say a word more if the honorable Senator from New Jersey and the honorable Senator from Iowa had not taken, as it seems to me, rather unwarrantable pains to show that the opposition to the passage of this bill arose either from sectional prejudice or sectional partiality. Senators of course have the right to avow their own motives for their support or opposition to any bill, but when they undertake to impute motives such as those to others they should have, I think, some other and better evidence of it than they can have in this case. I assert that I have no more desire to oppose this bill on the ground of sectionalism than I would have if I lived in the city of Philadelphia, not one jot or tittle; and I have no desire that this navy-yard shall be established at New London unless New London has claims in the way of natural advantages which make that a preferable location. I would not myself, if I did not believe that fact, vote for the appropriation of a dollar to place a yard there.

I only repeat that the amendment to this bill proposes to leave that point open and let this location be examined, and if the claims made by gentlemen have any real foundation in fact they will have an opportunity of verifying them. I have not attempted to assert the superiority of New London; I shall not assert it; but I say that if this board of officers, the board named in this amendment, or any other men who may be named, after examining New London and League Island, shall say that League Island is the preferable place I will vote for League Island if I am a member of the body, and I will not vote for New London nor will I urge its acceptance. I now only urge an examination into the matter, because the board, and the only board in our time appointed by the proper authority, who has made an examination of both locations, has given the preference very decidedly to New London. Under these circumstances, before this location is selected and decided upon by the Senate, I submit that it is fair that New London should also be examined if League Island is to be now examined; and then, if there are any of these objections, not being defensible, not being far enough from the ocean, want of fresh water, want of coal, or want of iron, to such an extent as to decide against New London and to lead to the decision that that ought not be selected, I will submit tacitly and as cordially as the gentleman from New Jersey will if the decision is against him; and I will not either then or at any time undertake of my own personal knowledge to make assertions in regard to the comparative merits of the two places.

The honorable Senator says that it would be preposterous to go away from the great State of Pennsylvania that has got so much coal and iron, some hundreds of miles away, to establish a navy-yard for iron-clad vessels. If it costs more money to fix the navy-yard at Philadelphia than it would to fix it at another location, and so much more that the interest on that money would carry all the iron and all the coal which Pennsylvania can produce to Connecticut or to Maine, I do not think it would be so preposterous an idea. The very interest on the money that it would cost to make League Island habitable, tenantable as a navy-yard, would carry all the coal and all the iron that is brought to the city of Philadelphia five hundred miles every year. It is not so very preposterous, therefore, and it so happens that Philadelphia is not the only place where coal and iron are found in the United States. Other localities have, I think, as great facilities for both these valuable commodities as Philadelphia.

But, sir, I will not enlarge. I rose that I might set the honorable Senator from New Jersey right, because I am sure it was not pleasant to him to think that the opposition to this bill was purely sectional. He would much rather have it known that his predecessor in this body, honored and esteemed here, took the same ground that I do, and nobody supposed that he was actuated by sectional hostility.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIAMS. With the consent of the honorable Senator, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened at ten minutes before five o'clock p. m., and the Senate, on motion of Mr. HENDRICKS, took a recess till seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 545) for the relief of John F. Stewart, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommended the bill (H. R. No. 788) to establish and protect national cemeteries, reported it with amendments.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 601) to amend an act approved July 28, 1866, entitled "An act to fix the compensation of certain collectors of the customs, and for other purposes," which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SOLDIERS' ORPHAN HOME.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House bill No. 848.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 848) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home," approved July 25, 1866, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON. The bill was before the Senate on a former occasion and recommended to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee report a substitute which is much shorter than the original bill. I do not think the original bill need be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the board of trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home shall hereafter consist of seven persons, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum to do business; and D. K. Cartter, Henry D. Cooke, Amos B. Eaton, J. W. Alvord, Horatio Bridge, Byron Sunderland, and Franklin A. Dick are hereby declared to be the trustees of said corporation, and they and their successors shall have the entire control and management of all property, moneys, and other securities now held or used for the benefit of said corporation, or which shall hereafter belong to it; and the said board of trustees shall have power to fill any vacancies occurring by death, resignation, or otherwise.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That immediately upon their organization the trustees shall elect a board of lady managers, consisting of thirteen persons, who shall have power to superintend and manage the internal affairs of the asylum, and to fill vacancies in their own board, to make their own by-laws, rules, and regulations, to hold their offices till the second Wednesday in January, 1868; their successors to be elected annually by the board of managers in the manner which their by-laws shall prescribe.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the surviving parent or legal guardian of any child placed under charge of said corporation may withdraw such child therefrom, and any minor over sixteen years of age, upon his or her request in writing, shall be discharged therefrom, at the discretion of the managers.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act to which this is amendatory as is inconsistent with this act be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the time, and passed.

DIRECT TAX IN WEST VIRGINIA.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the Senate proceeded to consider the House amendment to the joint resolution (S. No. 90) to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia.

The joint resolution as passed by the Senate was in these words:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to suspend the further collection within the State of West Virginia of any part of the direct tax imposed by the act of August 5, 1861, until the 1st day of March next, unless the claims of the said State against the United States are sooner adjusted.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the word "that" and insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to ascertain the sum of money which shall have been assessed, according to law, when such assessment shall be completed by the direct tax commissioner for the State of Virginia, upon the whole of the real estate liable to tax within the present limits of said State as a part of the quota of the direct tax laid by the act of August 5, 1861, apportioned to the State of Virginia as then existing and bounded; and also the sum assessed upon the lands within the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, which are now a part of West Virginia; and also to ascertain the remainder of said quota, which remainder shall thereupon be the quota of said tax apportioned to the State of West Virginia.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the State of West Virginia is hereby made liable to all the duties in relation to said direct tax which are imposed by law upon, and is entitled to all the privileges in the same relation which are by law allowed to, other loyal States: Provided, That no liability or burden whatsoever is hereby imposed or shall be imposed by said State, arising in any way out of said tax, upon lands included within the present limits of the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, or upon the inhabitants as such, for the time being, within said limits, except upon terms accepted by a majority vote of legal voters resident within said limits.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the board of direct tax commissioners for the State of Virginia shall have and continue to have the same authority to assess and collect the before-mentioned direct tax in the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson as if those counties still formed a part of the State of Virginia.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to refund to persons from whom money has been received without warrant of law, as in payment of dues under the direct tax laws, the sum so illegally collected; such refunding to be ordered on the presentation in each case of satisfactory evidence of the illegal collection.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to suspend the further collection within the State of West Virginia of any part of the direct tax imposed by the act of August 5, 1861, until the first day of March next, unless the claims of the said State against the United States are sooner adjusted.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That section two of an act entitled "An act further to amend an act entitled 'An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary States within the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 7, 1862," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and certificates of sale shall be received in all courts and places as prima facie evidence of the regularity and validity of said sale and of the title of purchaser or purchasers under the same, as provided in section seven of an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862.

The House also proposed to amend the title so that it will read, "Joint resolution to provide for the ascertainment and apportionment of the proper quota of the direct tax of 1861 to the State of West Virginia, and for other purposes."

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the House amendment by striking out its first section and inserting in lieu thereof:

That in ascertaining the quota of the State of West Virginia of the direct tax imposed by the act of August 5, 1861, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to charge the said State with such proportion of the said tax apportioned to the State of Virginia as the value of the real estate of the counties now composing the State of West Virginia, including Berkeley and Jefferson, bears to the value of all the real estate of the then State of Virginia, as ascertained by the assessment for State taxation of the real estate of the said State of Virginia in the year 1860.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I wish to state for the information of the Senate that the resolution as it already stood made the State of West Virginia liable for any deficiencies of the assessors in assessing property in old Virginia, and this amendment is introduced for the purpose of curing that defect, and founding it upon the actual valuation of the property in the whole State in 1860. I have a letter from the Treasury Department in which the writer says:

"I am directed by the Secretary of the Treasury to state that the substitute in question appears proper and equitable and has his full concurrence."

It has also the unanimous approbation of the Finance Committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I wish to amend the amendment just adopted by adding at the end of it the words "giving credit to the State of West Virginia for such part of its proportion so ascertained as has been already paid." The tax for nearly the whole of two counties has been paid.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out the sixth section of the House amendment.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee ordered that that section be stricken out for want of any information on the subject. The effect of retaining it is that a mere certificate of the sale, instead of a patent from the United States, is to be the title of the party.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move further to amend the House amendment by striking out the word "March" in the fifth line of the fifth section and inserting "June." This whole bill is founded on a little resolution which I got through the Senate last year suspending the collection of the direct tax in our State until the 1st of March; but now we are in this situation: the 1st of March is near at hand and the bill is not yet passed. I therefore move this amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The House amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The last vote disposes of the joint resolution.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. There is an amendment to the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is not in the power of either House at this stage to amend the title.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The House proposed to amend the bill, and I wish to amend their amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The House proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution to provide for the ascertainment and apportionment of the proper quota of the direct tax of 1861 to the State of West Virginia, and for other purposes." That has been concurred in.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. And then they go on in the different sections to pursue the form of an act, beginning each section with the words "and be it further enacted." I now simply want the words "joint resolution" in the title changed to "an act," and that is the recommendation of the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that it is not in the power of the Senate to change the title of a joint resolution to a bill in that way; but the difficulty can be remedied by striking out the word "enacted" and inserting "resolved" in the proper places.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I understand that the joint resolution as passed by the Senate was amended by the House, and the Senate has amended the House amendment and adopted it as amended, and now the question comes up on the title.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to inquire how the first line of the resolution or bill reads.

The SECRETARY. The original joint resolution reads, "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives," &c.

Mr. GRIMES. Is that changed by the House?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. They have changed it to a bill; but they have not changed the title to correspond. I am willing that it should be in the form of a bill or joint resolution; I only want it congruous.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It would be a very absurd thing on our statute-book to have a joint resolution according to the title, and then to have the language of an act used. I suppose that we had better strain a point, and change it to a bill according to the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the proper course is to strike out the word "enacted" where it occurs and insert the word "resolved."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued if there be no objection. ["Agreed."]

NATIONAL THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 590.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 589) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Theological Institute," and to define and extend the powers of the same, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill proposes to change the name of the corporation chartered by the act of May 10, 1866, to that of the National Theological Institute and University; to add other corporators, and to allow the corporation to hold real estate to the value of $250,000; and also to allow the corporation to confer degrees similar to those conferred by universities in the United States.

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed to amend the bill by striking out the following words:

That Salmon P. Chase, Charles H. Howard, Samuel C. Pomeroy, and Henry D. Cooke be added to the original corporators of the same.

Mr. MORRILL. There seems to be no necessity for that provision, because the act to which this is an amendment provides for the addition of just such persons as the original corporators choose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up next for consideration Senate bill No. 570.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 570) extending the time for the completion of certain street railways, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting the following:

That section seventeen of the act to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, approved July 1, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, still further amended so as to extend the time for the completion of their railroad line, except that part thereof between Seventeenth street and the Capitol, for three years from the 1st day of January, 1866.

Mr. MORRILL. In 1864 this corporation was created, and they were to complete their road in one year. They completed the essential part of it, that is to say, the road between the Capitol and the western terminus on Seventeenth street. They had a right to continue beyond here on Capitol hill, and this bill now extends the time for the completion of that branch for three years. That is the whole of it in substance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BAILIFFS AND CRIERS.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the bill (H.

R. No. 856) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that the bailiffs and criers, who are required by the marshal or courts of the District of Columbia to attend upon the district, circuit, or criminal court of the District, shall be paid $3 50 per day for each day's attendance, instead of two dollars, as now provided by law, commencing with the 1st of January, 1866.

The second section repeals so much of the act of Congress as limits the number of notaries public to thirty-five, and authorizes the supreme court of the District to appoint as many as they deem necessary for the public convenience.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the bill by striking out the second section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

Mr. WILSON. With the permission of the Senator from Maine, I should like to call up a joint resolution which is lying on the table, merely for the purpose of having it referred to the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the joint resolution (S. R. No. 170) to facilitate the settlement of claims for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished by loyal persons to the Army of the United States in the late rebellion be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. WILSON. I entered this morning a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men was indefinitely postponed. I ask that the question be now put on that motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD CONVENTION AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 264.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (S. No. 264) to grant certain privileges to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, was resumed as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being the amendment of Mr. GRIMES to strike out "and First street west" after "Maryland avenue" in line thirteen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senate will proceed at once with the bill which has just come from the House of Representatives, at least so far as to have it read to-day. Let us have the first reading of the bill right off.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate for its first reading a bill from the House of Representatives.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States.

Mr. McDUGALL. I object.

Mr. SUMNER. There can be no objection to the first reading. Now, the second reading of the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will have its second reading, if there be no objection.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie over.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 492, which was read on a former day.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 492) to protect the rights of married women, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

INSURANCE AGENCIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I move next to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 477.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 477) to amend an act entitled "An act to continue, alter, and amend the charter of the city of Washington," approved May 17, 1848, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to amend the second section of the act approved May 17, 1848, so as to read, "to license, tax, and regulate agencies of all kinds of insurance companies, provided that the tax or license shall not exceed three fourths of one per cent. upon the cash premiums received."

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed to amend the bill by striking out the words "three fourths of" before "one" in line eight; so as to read, "the tax or license shall not exceed one per cent. upon the cash premiums received."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the bill (S. No. 128) authorizing limited partnerships in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that limited partnerships for the transaction of any mercantile, mechanical, or manufacturing business within the District of Columbia may be formed by two or more persons upon the terms, with the rights and powers, and subject to the conditions and liabilities prescribed in the bill. Such partnership may consist of one or more persons, who shall be called general partners, and who shall be jointly and severally responsible as general partners are by law, and of one or more persons, who shall contribute in actual cash payments a specific sum as capital to the common stock, who shall be called special partners, and who shall not be liable for the debts of the partnership beyond the fund so contributed by him or them to the capital; but the number of special partners shall in no partnership exceed six. The bill contains many details to carry out the purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a bill of some little detail; it contains a number of sections to provide for the relations between general partnerships and special partnerships, in what are called limited partnerships. Such provisions are well known in many of the States. The provisions of this bill are taken chiefly from the statutes of New York upon this subject, which have been regarded as being as perfect and full as any. The bill substantially contains the provisions of the laws of the State of New York, which for many years have operated in that State to the general acceptance of the public. I do not know that anything more need be said in regard to the proposition.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPECIAL JURIES FOR DISTRICT.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 449) authorizing special juries in the District of Columbia. It provides that in any suit or action pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and in any criminal prosecution pending in that court, either party to such suit, and the district attorney, or the respondent in any criminal prosecution, may apply to any of the judges for an order for a special jury for the trial of such suit or prosecution; and if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the judges that an impartial trial of the suit or prosecution cannot be had by a jury selected within the District, the judges shall make an order that a special jury be drawn for the trial of such suit or prosecution, to be selected from such county without the District as such judges shall direct. The order is to direct the number of jurors to be drawn, and to name two persons to select the jurors, and upon the return of a certificate by the persons appointed of the jurors selected, the court is to issue a venire to the marshal of the District to summon the jurors so selected to attend upon a day named in the venire, and the court may specially assign a day for the trial of such suit or prosecution. From the persons so drawn and summoned a jury shall be selected by lot, and the same right of challenge may be exercised as by law is given in other cases. The marshal, for summoning such jurors, shall be entitled to fees now provided by law, and the jurors shall be bound to obey the summons, and the court may compel their attendance as if they resided within the District. The jurors shall receive — dollars for each day's attendance, and — cents per mile for travel. The costs occasioned by such special jury may by such court be ordered to be paid in whole or in part by the party applying therefor, and may be taxed and recovered, as costs, in whole or in part, as such court may direct.

An amendment was proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to insert after the word "District," in the fourteenth line, the words "in an adjoining State;" so as to read: "to be selected from such county without the District in an adjoining State as such judge shall direct."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In order to perfect the bill, I move to fill the blank space in line twenty-nine with the word "three," so as to read, "three dollars for each day's attendance."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. And in line thirty, before the word "cents," I move to insert "ten," so as to read, "ten cents per mile for travel."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, there is a grave objection to this measure, if I have any understanding of what our system of Government is. This District of Columbia is a thing apart from all the States in this Union, and it seems to me a strange and extraordinary thing to propose that in determining causes at issue in the District of Columbia jurors should be drawn from States outside of the District. I should like to understand upon what principle, by what rule of governmental law, by what rule that belongs to our system of government, you can go out of the District of Columbia and bring in from foreign States, because for this purpose they are foreign, from communities outside of the District of Columbia jurors here to try causes in this District, which was intended to be an independent jurisdiction, subject alone to Federal law, and not governed by the laws of Virginia or Maryland or any other surrounding State. It seems to me a very strange proposition. That it is against fundamental law and that it is unconstitutional I have no doubt.

If Congress should say that for certain reasons particular causes might be sent into a county in the State of Maryland to be tried, because a jury could not be properly found here, that would be a different thing. Then it would go to the judiciary in Maryland or in Virginia, or anywhere else; but I cannot possibly understand by what principle you can bring jurors from States outside of the District, which are independent jurisdictions, into this District to try causes here. This District was established at first, and is under the Constitution, a distinct and independent jurisdiction. I was not aware that it was the view of the majority of the committee that the chairman, who so well represents the committee, should report this bill, or I should have objected to it in committee.

Mr. MORRILL. It was reported before you were a member of the committee.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then, being a member now, and being a Senator, I have the same right to object.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It would be a very strange thing, and a great departure from all law and from all principle and from all the rules that govern legislation and administration, and particularly the conduct of the judiciary, to bring in juries from Maryland or Virginia to try causes in the supreme court of the District of Columbia. If there be any reason to doubt that a fair trial can be had in the District of Columbia I think you may pass a law to send a particular cause, where that doubt arises, to the first jurisdiction, where a fair trial may be had, there to be tried by a judge and jury. Nothing other has ever been known to the common law of England or any other administration I have known or heard of or read of in our time or written in our language.

Mr. POLAND. I am not a member of the committee that reported this bill; but it has so happened that my attention has been called to this subject, and I have some acquaintance with this measure and with some of the reasons why such a measure is called up. The substance of the bill is to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in a cause where in their discretion a jury cannot be drawn in this District that will give the case a fair trial, to send out of the District and summon a jury from without the limits of the District of Columbia to try the case here.

My friend from California insists that we have no power to do this. I hardly understand the force of the Senator's argument on that subject. We have a right to make laws for this District, and to a certain extent Congress have a right to make laws that shall govern all over the United States. We make laws in reference to the drawing of jurors to attend in the district and circuit courts of the United States, and why we have not the power to send out of the limits of the District of Columbia to summon a jury to try a case here is more than I am able to understand.

It was a principle of the common law and a principle that is generally recognized in all the States of the Union, I believe, that criminal trials were to take place in the county where the offense was committed. This is the case in my own State: I presume this is the case generally in all the States of the Union.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question: what is the true interpretation of "a jury of the vicinage?"

Mr. POLAND. I will explain that. The reason for this requirement that the trial should be in the county where the offense was committed was that you were to get a jury who knew all about it. You must get a jury of the vicinity so as to get persons who were well acquainted with the transaction. I agree that that was the legal jury of the early common law; but the theory of the law in these latter days, as now administered by the courts of the United States and of every State in the Union, is precisely the contrary. The object and purpose of all laws now in relation to juries is to get persons who are not only entirely impartial, but who have no knowledge whatever in relation to the case or the transaction that they are called upon to try.

Now, I have been told by men who are acquainted with the trial of cases in this District, I have been told by some of the judges of the court in this District, that wherever a man was put on trial for an offense, no matter what the form of the offense was, where the gist, the real gravamen of the crime against him was that he had stolen money out of the Treasury belonging to the Government, it was utterly impossible to get a jury within the limits of this District that would convict him, no matter what the evidence might be. Taking money belonging to the Government was not regarded here really as an offense, and a man could not be convicted for it. Then there are certain cases of a political complexion that come before the courts here: there are various suits pending now in the courts of this District brought for arrests and imprisonment that took place during the war; and I am told by those who have good means of knowing that it is utterly impossible that a jury should be drawn under any law that prevails here in this District by which a fair trial can be afforded to the officers of the Government in such cases.

I agree that the theory of the common law originally was as the Senator from California states. The original object was to get a jury as near the transaction as possible, those who knew all about it, but the law upon that subject and the reason of the law have been entirely reversed. In all the States a change of venue is allowed, by which either a civil or criminal case is sent from one county to another county to have the trial there. That is for the purpose of getting it into a community where there is nothing known of the subject, where there is no feeling or opinion on the subject. It seems to me that is an entire answer to the objection that is made here. Instead of sending the case abroad, to be tried by another court and jury, we bring a jury from abroad to try the case here. It seems to me that the provisions of this bill are eminently wise and just, and that it ought to pass.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, I do not think the learned gentleman from Vermont, for whose opinions and judgment in the law I have the most profound respect, is exactly accurate in the terms used by him. The "jury of the vicinage" did not mean a person who knew all about the transaction. That was only the law of the hundred. When a man was picked up for breaking a pasture-ground or committing some common and small injury in the neighborhood he was attended to by the hundred; but the "jury of the vicinage" was a larger term than the judgment of the hundred, or I have forgotten altogether what little law I did read in my juvenile days. The "jury of the vicinage" involved this as distinct from the knowledge of the thing, that they knew the men; that is, if the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the District Committee, was accused of a foul action, the popular opinion of the whole neighborhood would know it was a falsehood, and would denounce it as such, and therefore he could not be fairly accused before the first magistrate. Consequent from that was the voice of the vicinage, so that when a man was accused he had the benefit of character, as he was known either for an evil or a good man. It is true that as years passed along that had to be changed; but the only change has been made by removing it, not from the vicinage, but where the immediate vicinage could be charged on oath with special prejudice from violent feelings or from some extraneous cause; then it might be asked that it should go to the next immediate vicinage. That is the law of the change of venue, and it has never gone in this country beyond from one county to another. There never has been a change of venue in this country, in my judgment, more than beyond one county.

The most desperate controversy that I remember now was when Judge Wilkinson had a controversy in Kentucky and killed his tailor, and they carried it into the adjacent county, Garrard county, I think. There never has been known a change of venue to carry a trial beyond the first adjacent county. This is starting upon the principle of the right to bring in jurors from all parts of the United States.

Sir, this is not consistent with the common law; it is in violation of the common law. If old Lord Coke could rise here he would denounce all of you who affirm it, as being at the breaking up of the foundations of that ancient system upon which the liberties of the English and the American people rest. The right of trial by jury has been guarded with the most exact care. It is not the care of a century; it is the care of at least twelve centuries, changing from time to time as the necessities of the times transpired. It was well understood when our Government was established; it is well understood in England now, and should be well understood by us. It has been understood to be one of the bulwarks of American liberty, not national freedom, but individual liberty. The idea of the exercise of the power of bringing in jurors here to sit in the courts of this District from States abroad seems to me one of the most heinous violations of the principles of the right of trial by jury that has been suggested in history. I do not think there has been such a suggestion made in the period of English history, nor do I believe it has been made in the period of American history until now.

The power may exist; but oh, remember there is a vast difference between power and right. I endeavor only to exert the right. Power may exist in the multitude and may express itself through a mob; but among counselors and in Senate Chambers and in legislative halls the right should be considered. To bring in juries to try causes in the District of Columbia from abroad is an innovation on a great fundamental law as old and older than Runnymede, as old as doomsday book, ay, older than doomsday book, old as the ancient Saxons before they ever made their landing in England. And when you undertake to obtrude upon and infringe upon and overthrow those great principles you will find that there is an underlying sentiment and a great knowledge of truth in the heart of our people that will bring all of you into tribulation; and "tribulation" in ancient times was understood to be thrashing corn and wheat, and those who bring it about will be thrashed as they tribulated in ancient times.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I trust we shall be prepared to meet that great and terrible hour of tribulation which the Senator from California predicts will arise against us in case we pass this little bill; but I do not foresee any such terrors in the future as seem to haunt his imagination in case we pass this bill; nor do I see any ground whatever for the objections which the Senator raises upon the score of constitutionality against the passage of the bill.

Mr. McDUGALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is it not a departure from all legislation with which the Senator is acquainted?

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir.

Mr. McDUGALL. I know the Senator is a lawyer and has read all the law of former times and of our own country; and I ask him is it not an absolute departure from all previous law?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not regard it as a departure from the principles of the law, nor do I regard it as any departure from the practice of the Government in similar cases; but, on the other hand, it is in strict accordance with existing laws, as I shall show. We have under the Constitution the power of exclusive legislation over the District of Columbia. This is conceded; and we have precisely the same power over all lands that may be granted by the various States to the United States for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings. It may be best to read the whole clause, for it is very plain and very specific.

Congress shall have power—

"To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings."

"Like authority" we may exercise within the limits of forts, magazines, dock-yards, and other buildings. Existing laws expressly authorize the district courts of the United States held in the various States to try cases of crime committed in forts, dock-yards, and other public places reserved for public uses by the United States; and it is a matter of almost daily occurrence that crimes committed in forts and dock-yards are tried and punished in the United States district courts within the States where the forts, &c., stand. Any other construction of this clause in the Constitution would lead to very great difficulty. A murder is committed within the limits of a tract of land used as a fort by the United States: would the Senator from California require that the jury for the trial of that offense should be taken from persons residing within its limits? In nine cases out of ten the thing would be utterly impossible, for there would be no persons residing there to serve as jurors for the trial of the offense. The practice of the Government has been, as I have already remarked, to try such offenses in the district court within the limits of the State, and to call a jury from every part of the district for the purpose of trying the offense committed within those limits.

How does that case differ from this? We have the same authority in respect to the District of Columbia that we have in reference to forts; and in the case of forts, as I have already shown, we take juries from every part of the district, and a district may be made up of one State or two States or three States or half a dozen States if Congress see fit so to do.

Mr. McDUGALL. Allow me to ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is not the jurisdiction of the Government over forts in the nature of military jurisdiction?

Mr. HOWARD. It is not by any means restricted to a military jurisdiction.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is not the jurisdiction of the Government over forts and arsenals in the nature of military jurisdiction, and is not the jurisdiction of the United States over the District of Columbia in the nature of civil jurisdiction as distinguished from military?

Mr. HOWARD. The honorable Senator asks me whether the jurisdiction over forts is not in the nature of military jurisdiction. What does the honorable Senator mean by the expression "nature of military jurisdiction?" Does he intend to deny, either directly or by implication, that over these forts Congress, under the Constitution, has exclusive jurisdiction, whether the jurisdiction be military or civil?

Mr. McDUGALL. Not at all.

Mr. HOWARD. The clause declares that Congress shall exercise "like authority," that is exclusive legislation "over forts," &c. If, then, it be competent for Congress by law to try a crime committed within a fort out of the limits of that fort and by a jury not taken from within those limits, it follows in my mind conclusively, the language being the same, that Congress has the power to try cases arising in the District of Columbia either in the District or out of the District if they see fit, and to call a jury for the trial of a crime from without the limits of the District upon the same parity of reasoning and for precisely the same reason. I do not see any constitutional difficulty whatever in the way.

As to the immediate motives that have led to the introduction of this bill, I know nothing of them. I take it for granted that the honorable Senator from Vermont has not spoken rashly or inconsiderate when he says that it has become next to impossible to punish a certain description of crime committed within the District of Columbia by a jury called from within the District. If that be so, I think it behooves us to give this subject our serious attention and endeavor at least to call a jury who are not so infected by the plague common to the people of this District as to be incompetent to serve in such a case.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I suppose the Senate is hardly constituted in a proper manner this evening for voting upon contested questions. It will therefore be expedient, I think, to lay this bill over, or by common consent to dispose of it in some manner without submitting any contested point to a vote. But while the question raised by the Senator from California is up, I will say that in my opinion there is no question that this bill is an improper one, and that it violates a fundamental principle; and this can be made out, not by any argument founded upon the clause to which the Senator from Michigan has alluded, but by reference to the sixth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which reads in this manner:

"In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law."

Now, sir, until you have a judicial district here including a portion of the State of Maryland, it will be impossible for you by a bill of this description to draw jurors from the State of Maryland for the purpose of a trial here. The thing is as plain as plain can be. Under the circumstances I will move that the bill be postponed for the present, and I believe that will conform to the views of the chairman.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the bill being laid aside.

Mr. HOWARD. I should be glad of a moment's opportunity to reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania with regard to the point which he makes arising under the sixth amendment to the Constitution; but I will not occupy the time of the Senate if the chairman of the committee desires to have the bill laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside by unanimous consent; no objection being interposed.

DESTITUTE COLORED POPULATION.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a joint resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 172) to provide temporary relief for the destitute colored population in the District of Columbia, was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $15,000 for the purpose stated, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Where does that measure come from? I should like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will make a statement in regard to this matter. I find by a report of the Freedmen's Bureau that there are between thirty-one and thirty-two thousand colored people in the District. Nearly half or quite half of them are persons who are supposed to be temporarily here, or here on account of the general disturbance in the country. They came in here from different sections of the country, and came here in every instance in a condition of destitution, and almost entire destitution, and they have subsisted by the charity of the Government and otherwise. The Freedmen's Bureau has been engaged during the last twelve months in sending these people into different sections of the country to work, and has disposed of between six and seven thousand of them in that way. The bureau is still engaged, and so is also a voluntary association, at the head of which is a very estimable lady, Mrs. Griffith, in distributing these people into the communities in the several States; but there are still a large number of colored people in this District who are in a state of suffering and destitution, and there is no mode of relief. The corporate authorities of these cities do not feel—and I do not say that they ought to feel—that these people are properly chargeable upon them, and they make no provision for them. They are dependent, therefore, upon private charities abroad and such liberality as Congress sees fit to extend to them. Early last year, perhaps in March or April, Congress appropriated $25,000. The bill originated then as now in the Senate, and upon a statement of facts relative to the general destitution of these people then as well as now. The bill as it passed the Senate appropriated $25,000 for the benefit of the colored people in this District, but it was amended in the House so as to apply to the poor of the District, and the result has been, according to the report which I have in my hands, that the larger portion of it has been distributed to the white population in the District.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Who had the distribution of that fund?

Mr. MORRILL. It was under the Freedmen's Bureau. The language of the law was such as to cover "the poor of the District;" and therefore, although confided to the Freedmen's Bureau, the Commissioner of that bureau did not deem that he was at liberty to confine it to the freedmen, and so the charity has been distributed to the poor of this District. The poor of this city and the poor of Georgetown, as I am informed and believe, have shared very largely out of that fund. I have before me a partial report showing the distribution of the fund for a certain period, which shows, for a limited period, this result:

Relief afforded, on recommendation of visiting agents, for whites.....	$3,421 22
Relief afforded, on recommendation of visiting agents, for colored persons.....	2,665 00

It was not the intention, originally, of the movers of that resolution that the money should be distributed generally to the poor of this District, for the obvious reason that the cities of Washington and Georgetown would hardly feel themselves complimented by an attempt of Congress to take charge of their poor. It would be the next thing to throwing the cities themselves upon the national Treasury to say that these cities are not capable to take care of their own poor; and yet this fund having been provided, I am told the poor here very generally resorted to it, and the result has been that only a small portion has gone to those for whom the appropriation was originally intended, who are destitute and suffering persons, for whom there is no regular charity here and no provision of law. They are waifs thrown on the surface here by the rebellion through which we have passed and the events that have succeeded it. They come here to local organizations which are to some extent unfriendly, and there is nobody to care for them. There is no relief for them except by an appeal to Congress.

The committee considered the matter, and put the appropriation at as low a figure as was possible. The amount last year was $25,000; but it is believed that if this $15,000 can be confined to the freedmen, the colored population who come in here from the States and are in a condition of destitution, it will with economy be sufficient to help them through this season of the year, and enable the bureau and the association to which I have referred to distribute them in the States and find positions for them, so that before another winter this large surplus population will be distributed through the country.

Mr. WADE. I think it was the understanding of the committee that this sum ought to be $20,000, and I hardly see how the bureau can get along with less. Last year the appropriation was $25,000, and I do not believe a similar amount of money was ever better expended than that appropriation was. The white poor, who ought to be maintained by the white population of the District, came and participated in that fund. I understand that during the last year some five thousand colored people have been sent off to get homes where they have an opportunity to make provision for themselves by their own labor. An institution which accomplishes such results ought to be cherished, and I really do not know how we could get along without it.

All this arises from the abnormal state of things consequent upon the late war. I have no doubt that it will very soon subside, and that this is a mere temporary affair.

Mr. CONNESS. Let me ask at what date the appropriation was made last year?

Mr. MORRILL. The last of March or the first of April.

Mr. WADE. This winter has been a very hard one, and there is a great deal of suffering here. We see but very little of it unless we take pains to inquire or are on committees that bring us in contact with the vast amount of suffering there is here. I want to put the appropriation at as low a figure as possible; but I am afraid the amount named here is entirely too low.

Mr. MORRILL. I sympathize entirely with the Senator's feeling, and think we ought to have more.

Mr. WADE. I ask the Senator if, from all the inquiries he has made and all the knowledge he has, he believes $15,000 will be enough to get along with?

Mr. MORRILL. I believe it would be a very small sum for the purpose. I should be glad to see it $20,000.

Mr. WADE. I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out $15,000 and inserting $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

VAGRANT CHILDREN.

Mr. SUMNER. Senate bill No. 573, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, was under consideration the other day, and was informally laid aside. I now move that the Senate proceed with its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 573) supplementary to the act incorporating the Newsboys' Home, and providing for the relief of certain minor children in the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. JOHNSON, to insert as a new section, after section three, the following:

And be it further enacted, That when the said courts or magistrates shall discover from competent testimony that the children brought before them belong to parents who are members of some particular religious denomination or society, these children shall be handed over by the action of the courts or magistrates to the agent or committee of their respective religious denomination: Provided, If he well ascertained that the latter have made sufficient provision for the care and protection of such children: And provided also, That the parents or guardians of the children be immediately notified of such proceeding.

Mr. MORRILL. Those who were here on the former occasion when this bill was considered will recollect the character of this amendment; but as there are some Senators present now who were not here then, perhaps I ought to present a few words in explanation of the bill.

This bill is a bill to incorporate certain ladies as a body politic and corporate upon the principle of the distribution of a general charity. They are authorized by this bill to receive vagrant, indigent, and abandoned minor children into their care and custody and provide for them, and they are also authorized by this bill, if they find children indigent, vagrant, and abandoned, to bring them before the court, and if they have no parents, upon evidence satisfactory to the court that such children are destitute, vagrant, or abandoned, the court shall be authorized to commit such children to the care and custody of this institution. That is the general scope of the bill. Now, the amendment is that whenever there is an attempt to bring such children before the court to procure such judgment, other parties may interpose, not the parents, not the guardians, not the legal custodians, not the legal representatives of the children, but anybody outside who feels interested on account of their religious notions, a religious society or denomination may interpose against this general charity and claim the children, and upon proof that the parents of the children are of their particular persuasion or mode of thinking these children shall be turned over to these persons and discharged from the custody of the law. That, I understand, is substantially the provision.

I said the other day all that I had to say about it. I will simply repeat that if the general charity we authorize here is laudable, if the care of the State may be invoked for destitute, abandoned, and vagrant children, and if it is proper for the State to look after such children and care for them, and we are satisfied that the incorporators in this bill are suitable and proper persons, then I think it is a very pertinent inquiry whether anybody for sectarian purposes should be authorized to interpose between the law and this general charity and dispossess the court of its jurisdiction, and dispossess these persons of the right to control this general charity. That is the whole of it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Although I am a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, it is understood by the chairman of the committee that I did not concur in reporting this bill. This charity was started originally as a charity for the newsboys of Washington. Now, sir, I regard the newsboys of Washington as a very respectable corporation, and I do not regard them as vagrants or as persons lost or abandoned. Many of the newsboys of this country have grown up into men of high value in public places and in commercial circles in the business of the country. This bill, then, is reducing a charity which was volunteered by some ladies here, with the aid of Congress, for the benefit of the newsboys of the city of Washington, to an institution for the vagrants, the small thieves, the loiterers, and the wharf-rats of the city of Washington upon the ground that they are abandoned boys. I know many newsboys about here that exhibit intelligence quite equal to their years, considering the advantages they have possessed. I have known newsboys to grow up into important men; and when we have started a charity for their benefit I do not care to assail it with any other one and to mix them with the common thieves and loafers and boys that are abandoned.

My idea is, that if you start a charity for the newsboys it should be for the benefit of newsboys; and if these charitable ladies wish the aid of the Government to carry on their charitable institution, so far as the newsboys are concerned, be it so; but if you want a house of refuge for young thieves, for vagrant boys, for those who have no homes and who live in barrels and under boxes and on the wharves, make a proper house of refuge for them, as there is in every civilized part of the country. But I am not disposed to have an association which was started here for the professed object of taking care of the newsboys of Washington commingled with and associated with all the crime, iniquity, and evil there may be among the juvenile population. That class should be put into a house of refuge. I am opposed to the whole bill for that reason, and the reason is patent to any one who will bestow a thought on the subject.

This was started as a charity to aid the newsboys, who are poor but many of whom are industrious. Many a newsboy in this city supports his mother and takes care of his family by his acts of industry in the streets of Washington, and so they do in other cities. They are sometimes rather impudent boys, but they have intelligence and they have enterprise, and they earn their money by the sweat of their brow. They are not to be put in the class of abandoned children. They are not to be put in the class of those who pass along the streets and watch for an opportunity for a little thievery to get something for their breakfast or dinner; but a half dozen of them together get enough for something to eat, and they go into an old empty hoghead and eat it.

I know it is the idea of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] that these are all of the same class. I think very differently, for out of these same newsboys may be builded up as learned men as even the illustrious Senator from Massachusetts. Many of them, of course, may fail in this, but a few may succeed, and it is the success of the few that has established the strength and the glory of our Republic. That class of boys who early in the morning, at daylight, go out and give us the news of the day, industriously using their energies in order, perhaps, to bring home to their parents a little means for their daily bread, are not to be compared to paupers or wharf-rats or abandoned children; but that is the idea of this bill and I am utterly hostile to it. I shall call for the yeas and nays upon its passage.

Mr. JOHNSON. I offered an amendment to the bill on Saturday, and that is the amendment now under consideration. I said to the honorable member from Massachusetts at the time that it was my purpose to call for the yeas and nays on that amendment, and I shall be obliged to do it now; but I am very unwilling to do so, as I believe there is not a quorum present. I should prefer, therefore, to have the bill go over.

Mr. WILSON. If Senators propose to call for a division on this bill I hope it will be laid aside informally until the body is fuller than it is now, and in the meantime I have charge of half a dozen small bills which I should like to put on their passage.

Mr. JOHNSON. That course would be agreeable to me.

Mr. CONNESS. Before this bill is laid aside I desire to call attention to some of its provisions if it is to come up again. In its present shape I shall oppose it whenever it comes up. It provides that by a process of law children of both sexes may be arrested and committed to the care of this Children's Aid Society, and the officers of the society are authorized to execute "all writings that may be necessary to secure to the heads of families or others so selected the control and management of such children for the period therein set forth," without any limitation of time. In the first section they are authorized to arrest only minor children. Of course they can but arrest minor children. It seems to contemplate to make servants of them and nothing else. I do not wish to condemn any class of labor; but it is a bill that ought to be, as I think, more carefully considered. Provision should be made for binding them out to mechanic trades, that they may have an opportunity to rise in the world among men. It does not follow because a child of either sex is abandoned by its parents, or having no parents is left without any protectors, that therefore it is to be put in what may be considered the lowest rut of society, or the one from which it is most difficult to rise; that we shall take it and stamp it with inferiority so far as it may be done according to the formation of society. The main object of the bill is doubtless well enough; but I think the bill is objectionable in these regards, and I hope if it comes before us again that these matters will be attended to.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the bill will be allowed to go aside. We cannot have a division to-night.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope I may be allowed to make a brief explanation.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNER. The bill has for its title that it is "supplementary to the act incorporating the Newsboys' Home;" the newsboys we understand to be minors; and further, "providing for the relief of certain minor children in the District of Columbia." Therefore, by its title it is only applicable to newsboys or certain minor children.

Mr. CONNESS. The title is not a part of the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says the title is not a part of the bill. Very well; I now come to what is a part of the bill. The first section declares that the act incorporating the Newsboys' Home shall "be so enlarged as to embrace," what? "Minor children committed to their care;" and then it mentions the different classes of minor children. Then the second section says that "all persons in the District of Columbia who are unable to maintain their own minor children, or the minor children of others intrusted to them," &c., upon making application shall have the benefit of this act; and so it proceeds, section by section, being everywhere exclusively applicable to minor children and to none others. Then, finally, in the section to which I understood the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] to direct his criticism, the fifth section, it is provided that this society shall be fully empowered "to provide and care for the welfare of," whom? "All the minor children intrusted to them;" not children that are not minors, if there be any children not minors, not persons above minority, but minor children; so that the criticism of the Senator, if I understand it, that this might extend beyond the period of minority or be applicable to some others than minors, seems to me to fall to the ground.

But then, I understood him to go further and to complain that this bill seemed to hand over these children to an inferior condition in life. Well, sir, he makes a discovery on the text of this bill. The benevolent ladies who have this society in charge, certainly so far as I am aware of their purposes, had no such idea, nor does it seem to me that the language of the bill is susceptible of any such limitation as the Senator appears disposed to give it. It is that the society shall "provide and care for the welfare of all the minor children intrusted to them"—broad, capable language; very broad. Even the Senator could hardly supply from his affluence broader language. "And for this purpose"—what? "They may procure homes for them in the families of any competent person living in the United States." Is there anything there suggestive about the nature of the service? Certainly I never supposed that the service was to be limited to what was menial. Why not also what is mechanical? Why may they not be bound over to mechanics and inducted into the mechanic arts? Certainly the language is just as applicable to the mechanical arts as it is to what the Senator seemed to see in it, a menial pursuit.

It then goes on to say that they "may execute all writings that may be necessary to secure to the heads of families"—I take it, a mechanic may be a head of a family; in my part of the country they are, much to our pride—"or others so selected"—they may select persons who are not even heads of families, and give them, according to the bill "the control and management of such children for the period therein set forth;" that is, for some period set forth during the term of minority.

Mr. CONNESS. It does not say so.

Mr. SUMNER. Well, I understand that it does say so.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator pardon me for a minute?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly. I pardon the Senator always. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNESS. It is a happy thing for myself and the country that we deal with a Senator so affluent in his generosity and disposition to pardon. But if the Senator while up had read the entire section, and it is but a very short one, and drawn upon the judgment of his co-Senators, and let them decide what the language meant, it would not have occupied so much time as the honorable Senator did, when he has carefully avoided reading it.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no, I did not avoid it, the Senator will do me the justice to believe.

Mr. CONNESS. When I was up before I did not impute or say anything about the purpose of the benevolent ladies who have this institution in charge. I have no question about their purpose, and I said nothing about it. The Senator replied to what I did not say. Now, I will read the whole section. It is very brief:

That this society be fully empowered to provide and care for the welfare of all the minor children intrusted to them.

I suppose they cannot arrest anybody but a minor.

And for this purpose they may procure homes for them in the families of any competent person living in the United States, and may execute, under the seal of the corporation, all writings that may be necessary to secure to the heads of families, or others so selected, the control and management of such children, for the period therein set forth.

What does "therein" refer to? To the writings that are to have the corporate seal, of course.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. Then suppose they put other conditions in. This law, so far as it is binding, binds the party thus bound out. The arrest and seizure of the person is in the minority of that person of course, but they are authorized by this law to bind them, and to insert therein any conditions they see fit. I have an amendment written that I should put in there; but I only called attention to it to show that it was rather carelessly worded. I did not rise to say anything about nor bring into question the purposes of the benevolent ladies who propose to take charge of orphans or necessitated children.

Mr. WILSON. By common consent it is understood that this bill cannot be acted upon to-night, and during the time it has taken up we could have passed half a dozen bills which it is necessary to act upon at this session. I do hope it will be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be laid aside by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. SUMNER. There is an objection; for while the attention of the Senator from California is directed to this bill I wish to have the benefit of his criticism. If he will suggest any language that will make the section clearer I shall be ready to accept it.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that my colleague and the Senator from California have a consultation over this bill, and get it right. I have no doubt they will do so. I am very anxious to occupy a few minutes to put a bill on its passage.

Mr. CONNESS. As far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to let the Senators from Massachusetts settle this matter between them—I mean the matter of precedence.

Mr. SUMNER. This is a bill in which many benevolent persons in Washington take a sincere interest; and I feel that it is a hardship that it should be exposed to jeopardy at this late day in the session.

Mr. GRIMES. It cannot be passed to-night.

Mr. SUMNER. Why cannot it be passed?

Mr. GRIMES. Because a division will be asked upon it.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] gave notice that he should ask for a division, and it is plain it cannot be passed. We can act upon half a dozen other bills and save time by laying this aside.

Mr. McDUGALL. I assure the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] that this bill cannot pass except on the severest criticism and with great controversy. I think it is radically wrong. In saying this I wish to say nothing as to the merit of the charitable ladies to whom he refers, and within whose jurisdiction he proposes to place all the orphan children of Washington; but there are propositions and principles in it that cannot be passed without controversy, and I shall be one of the controversialists, if it shall last for a long controversy, I promise you that. It cannot be passed to-night.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the bill is laid aside I wish to call attention for one moment to the amendment of the learned Senator from Maryland. He proposes to submit to the courts, a question with regard to the religious denominations of the parents. Now, in introducing that proposition, the Senator will allow me to remind him he does not follow the authoritative precedents of his own State. Maryland is certainly a State which has never been ungenerous to the Catholics. She has no reason to be otherwise than generous to them, born as she is of an eminent Catholic, the first settler. But I have in my hand the Maryland statute on this very subject creating a society in Baltimore almost identical in purpose with that which it is proposed to create here.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the object of the honorable member is to inform me of what the statute of the State of Maryland is he may save himself that trouble; I know it already; and when the time comes to debate the particular amendment that I have offered I hope to satisfy the honorable member that that amendment should be adopted, notwithstanding that Maryland statute.

Mr. SPRAGUE and others. Let us have the Maryland statute.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well. Senators say, "Let us have the Maryland statute." I will not read it at length, but I have in my hand the sixth annual report of the Children's Aid Society of Baltimore, October, 1866, and in the appendix is a copy of the Maryland statute providing for the commitment to the custody of this society of "all minor children, whether male or female," and then empowering this society to bind these minor children, male or female, over to certain persons. Nothing is said about any intervention on account of the religious denomination of the parents. That is the Maryland statute, passed under Catholic influences, I doubt not. And now, if I understand my excellent friend on my left, [Mr. JOHNSON,] he comes here and tries to introduce into a statute of the United States a provision which calls upon the courts to discriminate with regard to the religious belief of the parents, which he does not find in the statutes of his own State, and, as he announced in what he said he said the other day, if not to-night, he makes his motion in the interest of Catholics, when the Catholics of Maryland found no such representation in the statutes of their own State.

I make this remark now even if this bill is to be laid aside. I am very sorry that this opposition has sprung up to this bill. It is very simple in its provisions. It is supplementary to one which has already been adopted by the Senate. There are many good persons here who take a sincere interest in it and who will be grieved very much at its failure. I wish the Senate could act upon it now.

Mr. WILSON. I move that this bill be informally laid aside for the purpose of taking up some other matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be laid aside informally by unanimous consent.

Mr. McDUGALL. Let it be laid aside, not informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is that it be laid aside informally.

Mr. WILSON. Why will not the Senator from California allow this bill to pass over informally, as by a common understanding, as a vote cannot be taken upon it to-night, for the purpose of taking up bills that we can act upon and which it is important to act upon? I ask the Senator from California to let me have the floor for a few minutes.

Mr. McDUGALL. I want this bill to go over; but by laying it aside informally it may come up again.

Mr. WILSON. It may or may not come up.

Mr. McDUGALL. If the understanding is that it shall not come up this evening again I shall not object.

Mr. WILSON. It will not come up any more this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill now before the Senate will be laid aside, according to the suggestion, informally. It can be done by unanimous consent only. No objection being made, it is laid aside.

PRIZE MONEY TO SIGNAL CORPS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 1128) to authorize the payment of prize money to certain officers and enlisted men of the Signal corps of the Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the officers and enlisted men of the Signal corps of the Army who were assigned to and performed duty on the fleet under command of Admiral D. G. Farragut, while the fleet was engaged in the action in Mobile bay, on the 5th of August, 1864, such sum or sums as prize money, to each of them respectively, as will be equal to what has been allowed in distribution to officers or sailors of the Navy of corresponding rank, the same as if their names had been in any case borne on the ship's books.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that these officers and men were on board Admiral Farragut's ship in Mobile bay, and by accident or neglect of the proper officer their names were not put on the list, and therefore they did not get the prize money to which by law they were entitled. They did their duty, and were entitled to it, and the Department so states. All we ask is that this error shall be corrected. There are only a few of them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has not that money been distributed?

Mr. WILSON. It has been distributed, but the Government received one half of it, and it is proposed to pay these men out of that half. The Government gains by all these prizes one half, and these men were entitled to a share of the other half, but were left out by accident; and certainly they ought to be put on the same footing as others.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much money does the bill appropriate?

Mr. WILSON. It cannot be but a very small sum, as there were very few of them. They were very important men on board; they were the signal men.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no objection to the principle of this bill, but I am fearful the Senator will not accomplish exactly what he wants. In the first place, the bill does not provide that the money shall be paid out of the naval pension fund, but paid out of the general Treasury. I apprehend it should be paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Do you pay prize money out of the naval pension fund?

Mr. GRIMES. The naval pension fund is made up of the prize money. Then, again, the bill declares that these officers and men shall receive the same amount of prize money as has been allowed to officers or men of corresponding rank in the Navy. Now, I will inquire of the Senator if he can inform me what would be the corresponding rank of a private? Would it be a seaman, an ordinary seaman, or a landsman?

Mr. WILSON. I cannot tell. I suppose a private would be ranked the same as a sailor.

Mr. GRIMES. But the sailors are ranked in four different grades. They are seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, and boys.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Department will settle that.

Mr. GRIMES. How will they settle it?

Mr. SPRAGUE. These men are all officers; I think there are no privates.

Mr. GRIMES. If there are no privates this objection is obviated; but the bill includes privates.

Mr. WILSON. It includes privates, and I suppose there are one or two privates interested in it. Wherever a signal officer has been placed during the war there have been one or two privates with him. The bill probably does not provide for over half a dozen men altogether.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not make any objection to the bill. I think if these men were on board of one of our vessels of war and ran the risk of their lives they ought to be paid the same as any other men. If the Senator will accomplish what he wants by the bill I am satisfied.

Mr. WILSON. I am told that the Department have settled one case on the same principle exactly. I do not think there will be any trouble about it. I think the Department will settle the question of rank.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It had better be paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. WILSON. I think it had better be taken out of the Treasury. The Government got one half the prize money.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But they paid it into the naval pension fund.

Mr. WILSON. This is a House bill, and if it is amended it will have to go back to the House. The Government got fifty per cent. of this prize money, and I think they can afford to pay these four or five men. I hope the bill will be put on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question as soon as the debate ceases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID'S ISLAND.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the House joint resolution for the purchase of David's Island.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) for the purchase of David's Island, New York harbor, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to purchase, for the Government of the United States, David's Island, in Long Island sound, at the sum of $38,500, in accordance with the terms and conditions of the lease of Simeon Leland, dated April 13, 1862, and renewed March 30, 1863, by which the island was leased to the United States.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that this island will cost $38,500 and the Government has on it $150,000 worth of buildings, and the Secretary of War is very anxious to have the purchase made. This large amount of property which we have there is of some value on the island, but of very little value if you move it away.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is it?

Mr. WILSON. Hospital buildings and other property we had there during the war. There cannot be any doubt that this resolution ought to pass. It has already passed the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPERTY AT HARPER'S FERRY.

Mr. WILSON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1131) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey certain lots in Harper's Ferry, West Virginia.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to know how I got dispossessed. I thought I was entitled to go on with the District business. I gave way to the honorable Senators as I supposed, to allow a little resolution to be passed, but I seem to have been ousted.

Mr. WILSON. After this bill is passed I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would prefer that the bill called up by the honorable member from Massachusetts should not be acted upon now. There is a difficulty I understand about the title, and before disposing of the bill it would perhaps be well that that difficulty should be solved. I understand that the property was conveyed to General Washington in trust for the United States, and that that is the only title under which it is now held. The doubt which has been suggested is whether the United States have any authority to sell it, as that would destroy the purposes of the trust. I suggest, therefore, to the honorable member from Massachusetts to let the bill lie on the table for a day or two until we can ascertain the actual nature of the title.

Mr. WILSON. Very well. I withdraw the motion.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

Mr. MORRILL. I entered yesterday a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate postponed indefinitely the joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) for the relief of certain officers of volunteers. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has no objection to its reconsideration with a view to the further examination of the resolution. I therefore ask for action on the motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the resolution be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 907) to amend the law of the District of Columbia in relation to judicial proceedings therein.

The bill contains twenty-three sections, regulating the practice of the courts in many matters of detail.

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed to amend the bill by striking out in line six of section one the words "the final judgment of the appellate court" and inserting "all intervening damages and costs arising on the appeal;" so as to read:

That no appeal shall be allowed from the judgment of a justice of the peace, unless the appellant, with sufficient surety or sureties, approved by the justice, enter into an undertaking to satisfy and pay all intervening damages and costs arising on the appeal.

Mr. MORRILL. As the bill stands without the amendment, it required to authorize an appeal that the appellant should enter into a bond to pay the final judgment. The committee considered that a little severe. It would be equivalent, perhaps, in some cases, if not to an actual bar, to great hardship. A man might not be able to give a bond to pay the final judgment, and perhaps it would be rather severe that he should be required to do that. The committee considered that the rights of the succeeding party would be well enough secured if the appellant party was required to give bond to pay the intervening damages and costs. A plaintiff is proceeding against a defendant under process of law; the defendant has and ought to have a right of appeal; now he ought not to suffer a penalty, and the conditions of the bond ought not to be such as absolutely to deny him the right of appeal or make it a hardship. He ought not to be required, in order to secure the right of a trial in the appellate tribunal, to give a bond that he shall pay the final judgment against him, but he ought to be required, if he postpones it or delays it, to pay the intervening damages and the costs which arise in consequence of his appeal.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the committee and the honorable chairman are mistaken as to the policy which ought to be adopted in relation to a measure of this description. The plaintiff who succeeds in his judgment very often loses the amount of the debt in consequence of the appeal, although the judgment is affirmed. A party has personal property which he disposes of in the interval between the rendition of the judgment below and the judgment of the appellate court. In Maryland we always require the appellant to undertake to pay the debt as well as damages, so as to place the plaintiff in the same situation as to security when the judgment is affirmed as he is when the judgment is first rendered. It is not necessary, however, that there should be a bond executed at all. The party can appeal without a bond. The whole effect and operation of the bond is to stay execution. It operates as a supersedeas. But if this appeal is to operate as a supersedeas the plaintiff may lose his debt altogether, and may be unable, although he succeeds in affirming the judgment, to recover anything from the securities but the amount of the costs. I think the general law of the United States is the same, too, as prescribed by the act of 1789. There can be no supersedeas without the bond being executed; and the bond which operates as a supersedeas is a bond which binds the obligor to pay the amount of the debt as well as the intervening damages, provided the judgment is affirmed; and I rather think that is the better course; it will operate more beneficially in the whole than the opposite one, which the committee recommend for the adoption of the Senate. It has the effect unquestionably to produce delay. There will be an appeal in all cases, if a party is required only to give a bond for costs, and the use of the money may be worth more than six per cent. during the pendency of the appeal.

Mr. McDOUGALL. My recollection is not exactly the same with that of the Senator from Maryland. Upon error assigned, under the common law, the judge of the appellate tribunal, thinking there is reasonable ground of error, orders a supersedeas as a matter of course, until the case can be heard upon appeal. That was the old rule of the common law, and is the rule in most of the States. I do not know much about appeals from justices of the peace to the regular courts, but I know very well that on an appeal from the district and circuit courts of the various States to their appellate tribunals and to the Supreme Court of the United States, upon error assigned, a judge of the appellate court, seeing that there appears to be good cause of error, would at once order a supersedeas. There was no bond required further than that for damages and costs, and that would at once operate as a supersedeas. That is the principle of the amendment substantially.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read a third time, and passed.

DISTRICT SUFFRAGE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move now to take up House bill No. 1, to extend the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. That subject has had the consideration of the Senate, and therefore this bill is reported adversely. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move now to take up for consideration House bill No. 571.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 571) to regulate proceedings before justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed to amend the bill by striking out in the third section the word "the," in line fourteen, and inserting "a;" and by striking out in line fifteen the word "is" and inserting "may be at the time;" so as to read:

Provided, Good and sufficient security be entered by a person or persons who may be at the time the owner of sufficient property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, line two, to insert the words "original writs" before "civil," and after "criminal" to strike out "warrant;" so as to read:

That all justices of the peace may issue original writs, civil and criminal, returnable before themselves.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If I heard this fifth section correctly, it strikes me that a very singular expression is used—"unnecessary cruelty." I propose to make that read "wanton cruelty."

Mr. MORRILL. "Unnecessary severity" is the language.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to amend by inserting the words "and wanton" after "unnecessary."

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CRIMES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL. I move now that the Senate take up for consideration House bill No. 431.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 431) providing for the punishment of certain crimes therein named in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the bill by striking out the thirteenth section, in these words:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where attorneys are appointed by the court to defend prisoners on their trial, the court may order the payment of such fees for such defense as may be deemed reasonable, but in no instance to exceed twenty-five dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ALLEGHANY ARSENAL.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to take up a little bill from the House of Representatives which is recommended by the Secretary of War as necessary. It is a bill to authorize the purchase of certain lots of ground adjoining the Alleghany arsenal at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. There is a spring on the land that the Government uses, and the Secretary of War recommends the purchase of the ground. I move to take up House bill No. 1141.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1141) to authorize the purchase of certain lots of ground adjoining the Alleghany arsenal at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It empowers the Secretary of War to accept the offer of the Saint Francis Hospital Society to sell to the United States certain lots of ground situate in the borough of Lawrenceville, Pennsylvania, numbered one, two, three, and four, containing about nine thousand six hundred square feet, and upon which is a spring supplying the arsenal with water; and appropriates $3,800 to pay for the lots upon their conveyance to the United States by good and sufficient title in fee-simple.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COPYRIGHT LAW.

Mr. CRESWELL. The Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 491) amendatory of the several acts respecting copyrights, have instructed me to recommend that the amendment be concurred in.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to insert at the end of line nine of the second section the words "to give a receipt for the same if requested and."

The amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. BUCKALEW, the Senate (at ten o'clock and five minutes p. m.) adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 14, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Appropriations, by unanimous consent, reported back the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 918, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, with a recommendation that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate was as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to transfer two clerks from the third class to class four in the office of the Auditor of the Treasury at the Post Office Department; and a sum sufficient to pay the increased compensation required by said transfer for the remainder of the current year and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment of the Senate was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS J. FRAZIER.

Mr. DONNELLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Thomas J. Frazier; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

TENURE OF OFFICE.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 453, regulating the tenure of certain civil offices. The House made certain amendments to that bill, the effect of which is to require that Cabinet officers shall not be removed from office except by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Senate have disagreed to those amendments. I now ask that the bill be taken up for the purpose of submitting a motion to bring the matter to an issue. I move that the House insist upon its amendments, and ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

No objection being made, it was ordered accordingly.

LARCENY OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table an amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 604, to define and punish certain crimes. I desire to move that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate, and ask a committee of conference.

Mr. LE BLOND. I object to the bill being taken up out of its regular order.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope my colleague will not insist upon his objection, at least until I have an opportunity to explain the object of the bill.

Mr. LE BLOND. I will hear what the gentleman has to say, and reserve my right to object.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. This bill is simply one to define and punish the robbery and larceny of United States securities, and to punish the malicious obstruction of any railway on which are trains containing mail matter or other freight belonging to the Government. The Senate has made an amendment, and my object is to non-concur in the amendment and have a conference.

Mr. LE BLOND. Is the bill general in its application?

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. It is.

Mr. LE BLOND. It is confined to no particular locality?

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Certainly not.

Mr. LE BLOND. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be read.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert: That if any person shall rob another, lawfully in the custody thereof, of any kind or description of personal property belonging to the United States, or shall feloniously take and carry away the same, the person so offending shall on conviction be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor not less than one nor more than ten years, or by both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. LE BLOND. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference. The motion was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF WINES.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas it is reported that the American consul at Cadiz, Spain, has improperly refused to certify certain invoices of wine shipped to the United States, and has thereby caused much needless inconvenience to importers; and whereas it is reported that some correspondence has taken place between the Spanish Government and the Government of the United States in relation thereto: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to this House all papers, documents, and correspondence relating to the importation of wines from Cadiz, Spain, or having reference in any manner to the action of the American consul at Cadiz, in refusing to certify invoices of wines shipped from that port.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble and resolution were agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAIL SERVICE—CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that by unanimous consent Senate resolution No. 157, in relation to mail service between San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in Oregon, be taken from the Speaker's table for consideration at the present time. The bill has been examined by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and the chairman of that committee has authorized me to ask for its passage.

Mr. BIDWELL. I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Oregon will be agreed to. This bill can be passed in a few moments, and its passage is very important.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was read a first and second time.

The question being upon ordering the joint resolution to a third reading, it was read at length. It proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to employ ocean mail service between San Francisco, California, and Portland, Oregon, not less than three times per month, in continuation of the service from New York via Panama to San Francisco; provided the cost of the service shall not exceed $25,000 per annum; and it is made the duty of the Postmaster General to advertise for bids for the performance of this service for at least thirty days in at least one newspaper published at San Francisco, and one at Portland, Oregon, and to contract with the lowest responsible bidder.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BIDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANTHONY AND EUBANK.

Mr. HISE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution relating to a subject which, with certain papers that I hold in my hand, I desire to have referred to the Committee of Claims:

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the justice and validity of the claims of William Anthony and Carson Eubank, a firm with the name and style of Anthony & Eubank, against the Government of the United States for taking possession of their porkhouse, situated in the county of Sumner, State of Tennessee, on the Cumberland river, and its appurtenance, and appropriating the same for the use and benefit of the military forces of the United States, occupying as a military post the town of Gallatin, in said State, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

The SPEAKER. The papers of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Hise] in relation to this claim can be presented under the rule.

Mr. HISE. Very well; I will do that.

CHARLES O. ROWOHL.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a joint resolution for the relief of the mother of Charles O. Rowohl; which was read a first and second time.

The question was on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read the third time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the mother of Charles O. Rowohl, deceased, late of company I, eighth regiment Kansas volunteers, eight dollars per month from the date of the death of her son to the time when she first received a pension under the general pension law.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. CHAVES, by unanimous consent, presented the following memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, praying an appropriation by Congress for the completion of the capitol and penitentiary in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, very respectfully represent that the last Legislative Assembly of this Territory unanimously addressed memorial to your honorable bodies, in regard to an appropriation being made to complete the capitol and penitentiary, which buildings have been commenced in Santa Fé, New Mexico, but not completed. We do now sincerely indorse said memorial, and pray your honorable bodies to make the necessary appropriation to complete said buildings, which if not finished at an early day the materials and work already done on said buildings will soon go to ruin. Criminals go unpunished for the reason that the criminal laws cannot be executed; and public peace and security cannot be secured without a penitentiary.

The Federal officers of the Government, as also the Legislative Assembly, are not able to procure suitable rooms for their officers, and the last for their meetings, without paying an exorbitant rent therefor, which in a few years will amount to a greater sum than that required for the completion of the capitol buildings.

Your memorialists further represent that the honorable Secretary of the Territory and superintendent of public buildings have made an estimate of $9,500 for the repair of the Palace building belonging to the Government, which estimate has been forwarded to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury and the Register of that Department. This building is one of the oldest in the United States, and with the sum required it could be put in a good state of repair, and thereby save considerable rents which are now paid, and which would increase the value of the building much more than the sum asked for to repair it.

Your memorialists pray the favorable consideration of your honorable bodies in this matter; and, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

RESOLUTION.

Resolved by the Council of the Legislative Assembly, (the House of Representatives concurring therein,) That the honorable Secretary of the Territory be, and is hereby, required to forward certified copies of the memorials adopted by the last Legislature to his Excellency the President of the United States, to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the chairmen of the Committees on Territories of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to Hon. J. FRANCISCO CHAVES, our Delegate in Congress.

MIGUEL E. PINO,

President of the Council.

R. M. STEPHENS,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved, January 18, 1867:

W. F. M. ARNY,

Acting Governor.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of New Mexico.

J. W. F. M. ARMY, secretary and acting Governor of New Mexico, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original, which is on file in my office, as passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico at its present session.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto signed my name and affixed my official seal, this 21st day [L. s.] of January, A. D. 1867.

J. W. F. M. ARMY.

Secretary and Acting Governor of New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVES, by unanimous consent, presented two other memorials of the Legislature of New Mexico, relative to the same subject; which were referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

WAR DEBTS OF LOYAL STATES.

The SPEAKER announced as the first business in order the unfinished business at the adjournment yesterday, being the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House, on the 15th of January last, recommitted to the select Committee on the War Debts of the Loyal States the bill (H. R. No. 998) to reimburse the States that have furnished troops to the Union Army for advances made and expenses incurred in raising the same.

Mr. BLAINE. This bill proposes to reimburse the States that have furnished troops to the Union Army fifty-five dollars for each man so put into the Army, regardless of the expense incurred by the State in putting the men there. It pays for the men put in rather than for the expenses incurred in putting them in, treating in that respect all the States alike. And I desire, without detaining the House, to make a test question on the vote to reconsider; and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. McKEE. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. McKEE. Does this bill provide in this reimbursement that sums of money already paid shall be deducted; that is, sums already paid for arms, equipments, &c.?

Mr. BLAINE. The sums already paid have been paid under existing law. It does not make provision to deduct them, nor does it cut off any State from any claim which may be audited and paid under existing law. This is entirely extraneous.

Mr. DELANO. I should like to know what is the aggregate appropriation?

Mr. BLAINE. One hundred and fifteen million dollars in five per cent. bonds, the interest to be paid in currency and the bonds not to be negotiable until after July 1, 1867.

Mr. DELANO. This bill then proposes a very heavy appropriation for the purpose of the payment of these claims. The fact as to when these bonds are negotiable does not prevent them from increasing the obligations of the Government; and in the present condition of the country financially, I think the House ought to well understand what it is for.

I am aware, sir, this gives to the State of Ohio some thirteen million dollars. I represent in part that State, but Ohio is not the entire Union—only a portion of it. It is proper, therefore, the House should understand what this is before it makes this large expenditure of money.

I do not believe it is a measure we ought to enter upon now. There is not a State in the Union whose finances are not in a better condition than the finances of the Government of the United States. The time may come when the Government can assume this indebtedness and discharge it, but that time has not yet come.

There is now a large amount of unadjusted claims, some portion of which, with proper discrimination, will have to be paid. The demands of duty will require it. I hope, therefore, the House, before it assumes this debt, will see what it is doing and what necessity there is for it.

Mr. BLAINE. I will satisfy the gentleman: the unadjusted claims to which he refers will summarily and finally be adjusted by this bill. I need only call his attention to section three, which reads as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That each bond issued in pursuance of this act shall have plainly printed or engraved thereon the words following, namely: "The bonds of which this is one are issued to the State of — in full reimbursement for expenses incurred by said State in the war for the Union. Said bonds are not negotiable until after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1867, and then only upon the indorsement of the Governor of the State. And said bonds are accepted by said State in full payment of all claims for expenses incurred or losses sustained in the war for the Union, either by the State or by any municipal corporation within the State."

Mr. DELANO. The provision of the bill to which the gentleman has just called my attention does not touch the subject to which I have adverted. What I allude to is this: during the progress of the rebellion, in the loyal and in the disloyal States, private property was taken for the use of the Army. It was sometimes in the way of property and perhaps sometimes in the way of money. It was taken from loyal persons, and went to support the Army. It went for subsistence supplies, quartermaster supplies, &c.; and these individual claims are not covered by the provision of this bill to which my attention has been called.

We know that they are already pressed upon us, and that in some form the question is to be met. I ask whether those claims do not create a demand upon the Government infinitely more potential than these claims in behalf of the States? I make no proposition in reference to these private claims, but only present the condition of the country, so that gentlemen may understand it before breaking into this large appropriation of $115,000,000.

You have before you now, or will have shortly, the bounty bill, which will demand consideration perhaps over any other measure of this kind, and will take out of your Treasury, if I am not misinformed, some $250,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. I would ask the gentleman a question just at this point. Does not this $115,000,000, which the gentleman says adds so much to the national debt, relieve by just that amount the local debt?

Mr. DELANO. I do not so understand it; if it does, say so in plain English and not in such an obscure way that there may be doubt about its interpretation. Now I am for the measure; I think it is one that we are compelled to go for; but it is a subject which can bear postponement. Better let the States wait than let men wait who have periled their lives for their country. I hope the gentleman will not press his bill; if he does, I hope the House will so dispose of it that the burden will not be laid at the present time on the finances of the country.

Mr. LE BLOND. Has this bill come before the House from any regular committee?

Mr. BLAINE. It came from a special committee appointed at the first meeting of Congress.

Mr. LE BLOND. Has it been referred to any standing committee at any time?

Mr. BLAINE. A special committee was raised for the purpose of considering it.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I will vote to reconsider, with the understanding that it shall be referred to the appropriate committee for investigation, to be reported upon by that committee hereafter.

Mr. BLAINE. What will be the proper committee?

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not know of any that would be more appropriate than the Committee of Claims.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine from what sources the number of men with which the States are credited in this bill has been obtained? My reason for asking is, I observe the bill credits my own State for 267,588 men, while by the report of the adjutant general of Pennsylvania the number furnished by that State was 362,284, which is exclusive of militia. The number therefore in the bill is at least 100,000 less than what is certified by the adjutant general.

Mr. BLAINE. No, sir, not a man less. This bill has reduced the number to the standard of three years' service, and therefore while it is true that Pennsylvania furnished 362,284 men, when reduced to that standard it makes 267,588 men. There were a good many one-year, two-year, and nine-month men.

Mr. THAYER. Has the gentleman put the House in possession of the calculation by which his result is arrived at? It would be more satisfactory for us to go through the process by which these numbers have been arrived at.

Mr. BLAINE. I can answer it satisfactorily. The figures were furnished by the War Department upon a call for that information by this House. It is an official statement. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. THAYER. No; I am not satisfied.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. BLAINE. For a question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think the shortest way to dispose of this question will be the best. This bill proposes that the Federal Government shall assume a debt which it is in no manner by law or equity bound to pay, and I would remind the gentleman from Maine that the Treasury of the United States is not so flush at this time as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay any such debt.

Mr. BLAINE. I only yielded for a question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has cut me off in the middle of my argument. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. I yielded for a question, not for an argument. I have promised to yield a few moments to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCHENCK. My only object in rising was to make a proposition. This bill comes from a select committee created for the purpose of considering it. It is based upon a matter referred to that committee. It has been a long time before the House, the bill has been printed, and it has evidently passed in a great degree out of the minds of members of the House, who had turned their attention to it heretofore. I propose now, if it can be generally agreed to, that by common consent we reconsider and order the yeas and nays and lay the subject over to be voted upon at a future time.

Mr. BLAINE. What would that time be?

Mr. SCHENCK. Let it be some two or three days hence. I suppose we can do that by common consent and have the previous question called and seconded, so that the vote can be taken without debate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I shall object to that.

The SPEAKER. There are two bills ordered by unanimous consent to be considered after the morning hour, the indemnity bill and the bounty bill; and those bills cannot be displaced except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAINE. I of course care no more about this bill than any other gentleman in the House. It does not affect my State differently from anybody else's State, nor even quite so favorably as it affects some other States. All I desire is that the House shall be brought to a vote upon it. I care not particularly what that vote is, and the most direct way to reach that end is to consider the question of reconsideration a test question, and therefore I move the previous question upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BOYER. Will the gentleman allow me a few moments?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, sir; as the gentleman is a member of the committee.

Mr. BOYER. I had made up my mind to cast my vote in favor of this bill; but the action of this House during the present week has changed my determination. This bill proposes that the Federal Government shall assume certain debts contracted by the States, which otherwise it would not be bound to pay. I think that if all the States were represented on this floor it would be a measure which would commend itself to this Congress for adoption; but the recent legislation of this House has shown a disposition on the part of the dominant majority here to exclude from representation for an indefinite period, the southern States lately engaged in rebellion, and that without regard to their present disposition to obey in good faith the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope the gentleman will excuse me for interrupting. I know that I am obstructing the vital business of the session, and if he has anything to say on the bill itself I will yield to him willingly; but I cannot yield to allow him to go into a political argument on a side issue; I do not think that I am justified in doing so.

Mr. BOYER. I do not regard it as a side issue.

Mr. BLAINE. Well, I must be the judge of that in this case; and I now insist upon the previous question upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider will be to leave the bill before the committee.

Mr. BOYER. Do I understand the gentleman to refuse to yield to me as a member of the committee?

Mr. BLAINE. I will yield to the gentleman to make remarks upon the bill, but not to make a political harangue upon a subject which has no connection whatever with the bill.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether a motion to lay the bill on the table would be in order?

The SPEAKER. It would not; because the bill is now before the select Committee on the War Debts of Loyal States, and is not yet before the House. If the motion to reconsider prevails, the bill will then be before the House.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 50, noes 61.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. BLAINE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLAINE and Mr. BOYER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 54, noes 58.

Before the result of this vote was announced, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. FARNSWORTH called for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would suggest that the better way would be to agree to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted. Then when the bill shall be again before the House it can be referred to a standing committee of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think we better try it in this way.

The question was upon ordering the yeas and nays; and being taken, there were, upon a division—ayes thirteen.

Before the noes were counted, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. FERRY were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes twenty-four, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 72, nays 75, not voting 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Arnell, Baker, Beaman, Bidwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Bundy, Campbell, Chandler, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Cullom, Davis, Defrees, Delano, Dodge, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, LeBlond, Leftwich, Longyear, McCullough, McKear, Moorhead, Moulton, Niblack, Neill, O'Neill, Orth, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Ross, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Upson, Andrew H. Ward, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, and James F. Wilson—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Anderson, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Darling, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Grinnell, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jenckes, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, Mercier, Miller, Morris, Myers, Nicholson, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Starr, Stokes, Nelson Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Welker, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—75.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Boutwell, Brandegee, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Denison, Eliot, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hunter, Jones, Loan, Marshall, Morrill, Newell, Patterson, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Rousseau, Stevens, Stilwell, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Windom, and Wright—43.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. BLAINE to reconsider the vote by which the House recommitted the bill to the select Committee upon War Debts of the Loyal States.

Mr. BLAINE. I call the previous question. The question was taken upon seconding the call for the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 53, noes 50.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. SCHENCK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 65, noes 56.

So the previous question was seconded. *

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The bill recurred upon the motion to recommit the bill to the select Committee on the War Debts of the Loyal States.

Mr. BLAINE. As I have already stated, all I desire is to get a test vote on this question. I therefore withdraw the motion to recommit and call the previous question on the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] whether the Government of the United States has not already paid to several States all the claims of this sort properly chargeable to the Government?

Mr. BLAINE. That is debating the general issue, which I do not propose to go into now.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is a fact.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, except by general consent, as there are two undebatable questions pending—the demand for the previous question and the motion to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 62, nays 87, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Bidwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Campbell, Chandler, Cook, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Defrees, Delano, Denison, Dodge, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Latham, George V. Lawrence, LeBlond, Leftwich, Longyear, Marshall, McCullough, McKear, Moulton, Niblack, Neill, Orth, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Spalding, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Thornton, Upson, Andrew H. Ward, William B.

Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, and James F. Wilson—62.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Baldwin, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullom, Darling, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, Mercier, Miller, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Starr, Stokes, Strouse, Nelson Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Welker, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—87.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Conkling, Culver, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hunter, Jenckes, Jones, Moorhead, Morrill, Newell, Nicholson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Stevens, Stilwell, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Wright—41.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

On the question, there were—ayes 48, noes 46.

Mr. SPALDING called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SPALDING and CULLOM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 63.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 81, noes 47.

Mr. THAYER. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1128) to authorize the payment of prize money to certain officers and enlisted men of the signal corps of the Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 1141) to authorize the purchase of certain lots of ground adjoining the Alleghany arsenal, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) for the purchase of David's Island, New York harbor.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 431) providing for the punishment of certain crimes therein named in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 571) to regulate proceedings before justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 907) to amend the law of the District of Columbia in relation to judicial proceedings therein.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 128) authorizing limited partnerships in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 492) to protect the rights of married women, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 172) for the temporary relief of the destitute colored population in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had indefinitely postponed a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 1) extending the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 491) amendatory of the several acts respecting copyrights.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate, No. 90, to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORGANIZATION OF NATIONAL MILITIA.

The SPEAKER announced as the first business in order during the morning hour reports of committees, beginning with the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. PAINE. From the Committee on the Militia, I report back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 1145) to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, before the House proceeds to the consideration of this bill I will state, for the gratification of my friends who have business following the morning hour, that I shall make no speech upon the bill. I have spent much time in thinking about it, and I am unwilling to spend any more time in talking about it. I wish, however, to state the course which I should be glad to have pursued by the House in the consideration of this measure. It has been arranged between my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. NOELL,] and myself that the time occupied in the consideration of the bill shall be equally divided between the opponents and supporters of the bill.

After the bill is read I will ask the Clerk to read a brief statement of facts. Then I will yield what is left of the morning hour equally to the advocates and opponents of the bill, resuming the floor, however, ten minutes before the expiration of the morning hour for the purpose of demanding the previous question. If the previous question shall be seconded, I will then, to-day or to-morrow, in the morning hour, give as much time as may be required by the advocates and opponents of the bill, and will then ask for a vote. I will also yield the floor, not only for the purpose of opposing and supporting the bill, but for the purpose of moving amendments by those who are opposed to the bill as well as those who are in favor of it. To that end I ask unanimous consent that amendments desired to be submitted may be considered as pending, to be voted on in their order, notwithstanding the seconding of the previous question.

There was no objection to the last proposition, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. PAINE. I am glad of that, for otherwise I could not have allowed all the amendments to come in, if the previous question should have to be called, for want of time.

The SPEAKER. If this bill be not voted on to-day in the morning hour, it will go over till next Tuesday. It will take about forty minutes to read it.

Mr. PAINE. If there be no objection, the first reading of the bill can be dispensed with. The bill will not go over until next Tuesday, for I purpose to call the previous question before the morning hour expires.

Mr. ROSS. It is near the close of the session, and I think we had better move that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for the reading of the entire bill.

The Clerk then read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all able-bodied male persons who shall have been born or naturalized in the United States, or shall have declared, according to law, their intention to become citizens thereof, or shall have actually voted at any State, territorial, county, or municipal election therein, and shall be residents of any of the States or Territories thereof, and not less than eighteen nor more than forty-five years of age, excepting only Indians not taxed, idiots, lunatics, and persons convicted of any infamous crime, shall be liable to enrollment in the enrolled militia, in accordance with the provisions of the twenty-seventh section of this act.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the national guard of active militia shall consist of two regiments of infantry in each congressional district and Territory represented in the Congress of the United States and also such other forces of infantry, cavalry, and artillery as the respective States and Territories so represented may organize, arm, and equip, in accordance with the system prescribed in this act, all of which troops shall be organized of volunteers; and no person shall be an officer, non-commissioned officer, or private in said national guard who shall be disqualified for, or exempt from, enrollment in the enrolled militia, or shall ever have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or shall have voluntarily given aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto, or shall have sought, or accepted, or attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility thereto, or shall have yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto; and there shall be no discrimination between white and colored persons under this act, but they shall respectively be entitled to separate company and regimental organizations, and the number of white and colored troops respectively armed, equipped, clothed, and paid by the United States in each congressional district and Territory under the provisions of this act shall be proportionate to the white and colored population thereof.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there shall be an Assistant Secretary of War, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be specially charged with the execution of all laws of Congress enacted to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; and the Secretary of War shall detail for his assistance the necessary staff officers of the adjutant general's, quartermaster general's, and ordnance departments, and shall appoint the necessary clerks, and classify the same for payment, according to law.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the national guard shall be organized in accordance with the following provisions, namely: First. Each company of infantry, cavalry, and artillery shall, in pursuance of authority from the Governor of the State or Territory, be formed of the lawful number of persons, having all the qualifications prescribed by this act for enrollment in the enrolled militia and for enlistment in the national guard, who shall take and subscribe, in duplicate, the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I am a resident of the town, county, and State, or Territory, prefixed to my signature, and am in all respects qualified for enrollment in the enrolled militia and enlistment in the national guard, under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for other purposes;' that I have enlisted for a term of three years in the national guard, and that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof, and have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto; and I do further swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge my duties as a member of the national guard, so help me God;" which oath may be taken and subscribed before any justice of the peace, notary public, or other officer legally authorized to administer oaths in the district or Territory where such company shall be organized; and any person who shall falsely take such oath shall be guilty of perjury, and, upon conviction thereof in any Federal, State, or territorial court of competent criminal jurisdiction in such district or Territory, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment in any penitentiary or jail of such State, Territory, or district not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court, and shall also be stricken from the roll of the national guard. Second. After said oath shall have been taken and subscribed by the members of any company, as aforesaid, they shall elect one captain, one first lieutenant, and one second lieutenant. Third. The officers so elected shall annex to the aforesaid oath their official certificate in duplicate, setting forth that they were severally elected officers of such company according to law, and showing the time and place of such election and the office to which each was chosen, and shall thereupon transmit one oath and certificate to the Governor of the State or Territory, and the other to the Assistant Secretary of War; and if no fraud or illegality shall appear in such organization or election the Governor shall commission the said officers and assign the companies so organized to regiments, brigades, and divisions, but not before a sufficient number of such companies shall have been organized to constitute, in accordance with the provisions of this act, regiments, brigades, and divisions, respectively; and after such regiments, brigades, or divisions shall have been so organized, respectively, the officers thereof may be elected or appointed, as provided in the sixth section of this act; and no militia in any State or Territory of the United States shall be organized or maintained except in pursuance of the provisions of this act; and the organization of companies, regiments, brigades, and divisions shall be that of the Army of the United States, but four regiments of infantry shall constitute one brigade, and two brigades one division; and those persons only shall be eligible to such commissions who shall have all the qualifications for enrollment in the enrolled militia and enlistment in the national guard as in this act prescribed.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all persons who shall enlist in the national guard shall be held for a term of service of three years from the date of their muster-in, unless sooner discharged; and all commissioned officers shall hold their offices until the expiration of three years from the date of their original muster-in, unless sooner discharged; and all officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates who shall have honorably served until the expiration of such term shall, at their option, be exempt from further military service in time of peace, but shall be liable to enrollment thereafter in the enrolled militia until the age of forty-five years, and shall be eligible to commissions until fifty-five years of age; and any person who shall become an idiot or lunatic, or be convicted of any infamous crime, after muster into the national guard, shall be stricken from the rolls thereof; and officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates shall be exempt from duty in the national guard, in time of peace, when absent from the congressional district or Territory in which they shall have respectively enlisted, and may be discharged from service for disability by the Governor of the State or Territory.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all brigade and division officers shall be appointed and commissioned by the Governor of the State or Territory; and all commissioned officers of regiments and companies shall be elected by such regiments and companies, respectively, and commissioned by the Governor of the State or Territory; and all non-commissioned regimental and company officers shall be appointed by warrant of the regimental commander; and all elections to fill original or other vacancies, except the original elections of company officers, shall be held by ballot at such times and places and under such regulations as the Governors of the respective States and Territories shall prescribe; and if any company or regiment shall fail to fill an vacancy by election, the Governor of the State or Territory shall, without delay, fill the same by appointment; and in any election, the person having the highest number of votes cast for any office shall be elected; but the provisions of this section shall not apply to any State in which a different mode of appointment of officers of the national guard shall be prescribed by law.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That vacancies in the ranks of any company may at any time be filled to the maximum number assigned by law thereto by volunteers, who shall have all the qualifications prescribed by law for enrollment in the enrolled militia and for enlistment in the national guard, and shall take and subscribe, in duplicate, the oath prescribed in the fourth section of this act before some officer authorized by the provisions of said section to administer the same, and shall be subject to all the penalties prescribed in said section for falsely taking such oath; and one of said duplicates shall be transmitted, without delay, through the regular military channels, to the Assistant Secretary of War, and the other to the Governor of the State or Territory.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That, in addition to the officers provided for in the preceding sections of this act, there shall be in each State and Territory a commander-in-chief and an adjutant general of the militia therein; and the Governor shall be such commander-in-chief in each Territory, and also in each State, unless it shall be otherwise provided for by the constitution or laws of such State; and said adjutant general shall be commissioned by the Governor, and shall have the rank of brigadier general; and said officers shall receive for their services under this act, from their respective States and Territories, such compensation as may be provided by the laws thereof; and said commander-in-chief shall exercise all such authority over the militia, including the national guard, as is reserved by the Constitution to the States; but orders, returns, reports, and other official communications issued or received by the Assistant Secretary of War within the scope of his authority shall not be transmitted through said commander-in-chief or adjutant general of the militia; and it shall be the duty of said adjutant general, under the orders of said commander-in-chief, to train the national guard according to the discipline prescribed in this act; to inspect the same thoroughly at least once in each year; to receive the returns, reports, and other official communications provided for in this act; to transmit annually, in October, to the Assistant Secretary of War, for the information of the Government of the United States, three separate consolidated returns, one for ordnance and ordnance stores, one for camp and garrison equipage and clothing, and one for the adjutant general's department, and also a report of the inspections by him made, in obedience to the provisions of this act, which report shall show the discipline of the troops of the national guard within the State or Territory, their instruction in military exercises and duties, the state of their arms, clothing, equipments, and accoutrements of all kinds, the state of the division, brigade, regiment, and com- pany books, papers, and files, the zeal and ability of their officers, the condition of all public property, the fidelity and care of officers responsible therefor, and all other important matters affecting the efficiency of said troops.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That in time of peace the national guard shall obey all orders issued by the Assistant Secretary of War in organizing and arming the militia within the scope of the powers conferred upon Congress over the militia by the Constitution, and shall obey all orders issued by the Governors of the respective States and Territories within the scope of the authority reserved by the Constitution to the States; and the Assistant Secretary of War and Governor of each State and Territory shall, without delay, furnish each other with copies of all orders issued by them, respectively, to the national guard in such State and Territory; and each State and Territory shall have power to provide for training the national guard therein according to the discipline prescribed in this act, and for calling forth the same to execute the laws thereof and suppress insurrections therein, and for the appointment of all officers of the same; but neither the Governor nor the adjutant general of the militia in any State or Territory, nor the Assistant Secretary of War, shall exercise any authority whatever over the national guard or any part thereof until they shall have respectively taken and subscribed the oath prescribed in the act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862; and they shall each be subject to all the penalties prescribed by law for falsely taking said oath.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That whenever any company of infantry shall have been lawfully organized and mustered into the national guard, the captain of each company shall draw, for its use, from the proper departments, on his requisitions, approved by intermediate commanders, and by the Governor of the State or Territory, and on the order of the Assistant Secretary of War, the following articles of public property, namely: for each non-commissioned officer, musician, and private, one rifle, (or musket,) one bayonet, with scabbard, waist-belt and belt-plate, one cartridge-box, with cartridge-box plate, shoulder belt and belt-plate, one cap pouch, one canteen, one wiper, one ball-screw, one knapsack, one canteen, one haversack, one coat, one cap, and one pair of trousers; for every fifteen non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, one tent, two camp-kettles, and five mess-pans; for the non-commissioned officers and musicians, fifteen non-commissioned officers' swords, with scabbards, belts, and belt-plates, one fife and one drum; for the commissioned officers, three swords, with scabbards, belts, and belt-plates, and two tents. But the provisions of this section shall only apply to two regiments in any one congressional district or Territory, and said issues shall be made to white and colored troops in the proportion fixed by the second section of this act.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That whenever any regiment of infantry shall have been lawfully organized and mustered into the national guard, the commanding officer thereof shall draw, for the use of such regiment, and of the field, staff, and non-commissioned staff officers thereof, from the proper departments, on his requisitions, approved by the intermediate commanders, if there shall be any such, and by the Governor of the State or Territory, and on the order of the Assistant Secretary of War, the following articles of public property, namely: for each field and staff officer, one tent, one sword, with scabbard, belt, and belt-plate, one saddle, one bridle, and one pair of spurs; for each non-commissioned staff officer, one rifle, (or musket,) one bayonet, with scabbard, waist-belt and belt-plate, one cartridge-box, with cartridge-box plate, shoulder belt, and belt-plate, one cap pouch, one canteen, one wiper, one ball-screw, one knapsack, one canteen, one haversack, one coat, one cap, one pair of trousers, and one non-commissioned officer's sword, with scabbard, belt, and belt-plate; for the whole non-commissioned staff, one tent, two camp-kettles, and five mess-pans; for the regiment, one national color, one regimental color, four camp colors, and one field piece, with carriage, caisson, and equipments and implements; but the provisions of this section shall only apply to two regiments in any one congressional district or Territory, and said issues shall be made to the commanders of white and colored regiments as nearly as practicable in the proportion fixed by the second section of this act.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That whenever any brigade shall have been lawfully organized the commander thereof shall draw, on his requisitions, approved by the division commander, if there shall be one, and by the Governor of the State or Territory, and on the order of the Assistant Secretary of War, from the proper departments, for the use of himself and his staff officers, each one sword, with scabbard, belt and belt-plate, one saddle, one bridle, one pair of spurs, and one tent; but the provisions of this section shall be restricted to one brigade for every two congressional districts of any State represented in the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That whenever any division shall have been lawfully organized the commander thereof shall draw, on his requisitions, approved by the Governor of the State or Territory, and on the order of the Assistant Secretary of War, from the proper department, for himself and his staff officers, each one sword, with scabbard, belt and belt-plate, one saddle, one bridle, one pair of spurs, and one tent; but the provisions of this section shall be restricted to one division for every four congressional districts of any State represented in the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That all public property issued under the provisions of this act to the national guard, including clothing, shall remain the property of the United States, always subject to the control of the officer responsible therefor, and always in his actual possession when not in use in the active performance of military duty required or authorized by this act; and no such clothing or other property shall be used except in the performance of such duty, but the same shall be kept in the armories provided for in section twenty-one of this act, and shall be turned over by such officer to his successor in office, or to any other person legally authorized to receive the same; and every officer to whom such property shall be issued or turned over shall be responsible for the lawful use and careful preservation of the same, and if any officer, non-commissioned officer, or private, or other person shall, without good and sufficient excuse, injure, lose, damage, waste, or destroy any of such property, he shall be liable to the officer responsible therefor, and also to the United States for double damages and costs, recoverable in any Federal, State, or territorial court of competent jurisdiction; and if any person shall wantonly, maliciously, or willfully injure, lose, damage, destroy, or waste any of such property, or use the same, or permit it to be used at times or places or in modes not authorized by law, he shall be liable to indictment therefor in any Federal, State, or territorial court of competent criminal jurisdiction, and upon conviction thereof, to punishment by a fine not exceeding $10,000, one half of which shall be paid to the informer, or by imprisonment in a penitentiary or jail of the district or Territory for a period not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, and shall pay the costs of prosecution.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That every commanding officer entitled to receive public property under the provisions of this act shall have authority to draw, from time to time, from the proper departments, on his requisitions, approved by intermediate commanders and by the Governor of the State or Territory, and on the order of the Assistant Secretary of War, such articles issued under the provisions of this act as shall be necessary to supply deficiencies; but only one cap, one coat, and one pair of trousers each shall be issued for the use of the same men, or their successors, in three years; and all public property issued under the provisions of this act shall be delivered by the United States at the headquarters of the divisions, brigades, regiments, and companies to which the same shall be issued.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the times and places for division, brigade, battalion, company, and squad drills, and other military duties and exercises, shall be fixed by each State and Territory by law, or by command of the Governor thereof, but if not so fixed in any State or Territory shall be such as the respective commanding officers of the national guard therein shall appoint; but there shall be in the aggregate not less than three days of such drills and other military duties and exercises in each year; and there shall also be in each brigade a brigade encampment, and in each detached regiment a regimental encampment, of five days in each year, commencing on the last Monday of September, for such drills and other military exercises and duties, at such places and under such regulations as the Assistant Secretary of War shall prescribe.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That all commanders of companies shall make quarterly company returns to regimental headquarters on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October; and all commanders of regiments, brigades, and divisions shall make quarterly returns of their commands through the regular military channels, between the 1st and 10th days of the same months, to the Governors of their respective States and Territories, and also to the Assistant Secretary of War; and all officers responsible for public property shall make two separate quarterly returns thereof, one of ordnance and ordnance stores, and the other of camp and garrison equipage and clothing, which shall be forwarded in duplicate to the Assistant Secretary of War, and to the Governors of the respective States and Territories, between the 1st and 10th days of January, April, July, and October; and all of said returns shall be made under such regulations as the Assistant Secretary of War shall prescribe, upon printed blanks, which shall be furnished by him on requisitions made annually, or oftener if necessary.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That all commanders of brigades and detached regiments shall make semi-annual inspections of their commands, by regiments or companies, at such times and places as the Assistant Secretary of War shall direct; and all commanders of divisions and detached brigades, and all commanders of detached regiments, shall, respectively, at the annual brigade or regimental encampments provided for in this act, inspect the troops, who shall also at such encampments be reviewed and mustered for payment; and reports of the inspections so made—showing the discipline of the troops, their instruction in all military exercises and duties, the state of their arms, clothing, equipments, and accoutrements of all kinds, and of the brigade, regimental, and company books, papers, and files; the condition, situation, and manner of taking care of all public property; the fidelity and care of all officers responsible therefor; the mode of enforcing discipline, and other important information concerning the troops, shall be without delay forwarded, through the intermediate commanders, to the Assistant Secretary of War and to the Governor of the State or Territory.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That no officer shall be dishonorably dismissed or cashiered in time of peace except by sentence of a general court-martial; and no non-commissioned officer shall be reduced to the ranks in time of peace by a regimental commander without the approval of a superior commanding officer.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That all officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the national guard, armed, equipped, and paid by the United States in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall, while on duty at any muster, drill, parade, or encampment required by this act, and while going to and returning from the same, be privileged from arrest in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, and exempt from capitation taxes, from labor upon the public highways, and from the duty of attendance as parties or witnesses upon any Federal, State, or territorial courts.

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That each officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, and private shall receive from the United States two dollars per diem for the performance of military duty at the drills, encampments, and other exercises and duties provided for in this act; but such payment shall not in any case exceed ten dollars per annum; and each division, brigade, regimental, and company commander, when responsible for public property under the provisions of this act, shall, if not delinquent in the performance of any of the duties herein prescribed, receive from the United States fifty dollars per annum, in full compensation for his care of and responsibility for such property; and each regimental and company commander, when so responsible for public property, shall also receive the sum of fifty dollars per annum for the rent of an armory actually used for the safe-keeping of the same; and it shall be the duty of each commissioned officer to provide himself with the uniform prescribed in the regulations for the Army of the United States, and if not delinquent in the performance of this or any other military duty he shall receive from the United States, on account of clothing, twenty dollars per annum, and all of said payments shall be made annually, through the pay department, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, but the payments herein authorized shall be made only to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of two regiments of infantry in each congressional district and Territory, and to the officers of the brigades and divisions into which such regiments may be organized under the provisions of this act; and no officers, non-commissioned officers, or privates shall be paid by the United States under the provisions of this act, in time of peace, except those to whom or for whose use public property of the United States shall have been issued, as in this act provided; and white and colored troops shall be paid as nearly as practicable in the proportion fixed by the second section of this act.

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That any officer, non-commissioned officer, or private who shall, without a sufficient excuse, in disobedience of any lawful order, neglect or refuse to perform military duty at any muster, drill, parade, encampment, or other exercise of his company, regiment, brigade, or division, shall, by order of his immediate commander, be fined two dollars for each day's absence, and such fine shall be stopped from the pay of the delinquent, or, by command of the officer imposing it, levied upon his personal property not exempt from execution by the laws of the State or Territory of the United States, by a commissioned officer, or sheriff, or constable, who shall sell the same at public auction to the highest bidder, after five days' written or printed notice of sale, posted in three conspicuous places in the township in which such delinquent shall reside or said property be found, and out of the proceeds of such sale the officer making the same shall pay said fine into the treasury of the State or Territory, and shall retain such fees and costs as shall be allowed by law to sheriffs or constables for sales of personal property on execution, and shall pay over the residue to the officer, non-commissioned officer, or private so fined; but upon any application made by any officer, non-commissioned officer, or private so fined, within five days after notice of such fine, the order imposing the same shall be forwarded to the immediate commander of the officer who shall have imposed it, who shall review the case, and his order in the premises shall be final, and shall be executed as above provided; and for all other offenses officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates shall be liable to punishment by court-martial, according to the laws of the several States and Territories, or the orders of the Governors thereof.

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That whenever any troops of the national guard shall be ordered into the service of the United States, according to law, or shall, according to law, become a part of the Army of the United States, upon a declaration of war by Congress, they shall be entitled to the same pay and allowances and to the same issues of commissary's and quartermaster's stores which shall be provided by law for troops of like arms in the regular service; and in case of wounds, injuries, disability, or death, suffered in the line of duty, all provisions of law for the regular Army in such cases shall be extended to them, their widows, children, and personal representatives.

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Assistant Secretary of War to see that this act and all other acts of Congress to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia are faithfully executed; to superintend the distribution and preservation of all ordnance and ordnance stores, camp and garrison equipage, clothing, and other public property issued to the national guard; to prepare and issue to the national guard blank enlistment oaths, muster-rolls, requisitions, reports, returns, and receipts; to see that proper receipts are taken for all public property issued to the national guard, and that all delinquents are promptly and diligently prosecuted; to present to Congress annually, before the first day of January, an abstract of the annual returns of the militia; to receive, through the regular military channels, from the officers of the national guard, the returns, reports, and other official communications required of them by law; to superintend the schools of the national guard, and to perform all other duties prescribed by law.

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That Congress may provide for calling forth the whole or any part of the national guard into the service of the United States to execute the laws thereof, when the execution of the same shall be obstructed by combinations or forces too strong to be overcome by the civil authorities, to repel invasion, and to suppress insurrections against the authority of the United States, and also to aid in the execution of the laws of any State, and the suppression of insurrection therein, on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened; and the national guard, or any part thereof, when so ordered into the service of the United States, shall be subject to the rules and articles of war and to the regulations of the Army; and any officer, non-commissioned officer, or private who, when so ordered into the service of the United States, shall neglect or refuse to report for duty therein, shall be liable to trial, conviction, and punishment for desertion by a general court-martial of the Army of the United States; and no part of the national guard, or of any other militia force in the United States, shall be called into active service except in pursuance of the provisions of this act or of authority to be hereafter granted by Congress.

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That whenever Congress shall declare war, such portion of the national guard as Congress shall by law provide shall become a part of the Army of the United States; and any officer, non-commissioned officer, or private, who shall refuse or neglect to report for duty therein in obedience to such law of Congress, shall be liable to trial, conviction, and punishment for desertion, by a general court-martial of the Army of the United States; and when peace shall be declared, either by an act of Congress or by a proclamation of the President made pursuant to an act of Congress, said troops shall, without unnecessary delay, be mustered out of the Army of the United States and into the national guard.

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That whenever, in time of war, Congress shall authorize an increase of the Army above the effective strength of the national guard, and the quota of any congressional district or Territory shall not be filled by volunteers within thirty days after the President's proclamation announcing such quota, the President, unless it shall be otherwise provided by law, shall cause the assistant assessors of internal revenue to enroll the militia in such district or Territory, and shall fill such quota by a draft from the enrolled militia thereof, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the Constitution or laws, as he may prescribe; and the troops so raised by volunteering or draft, or both, shall have the company and regimental organization herein provided for the national guard; but their brigade and division organization shall be that of the regular Army; and when peace shall be declared, either by an act of Congress or by a proclamation of the President made in pursuance of an act of Congress, all troops raised in accordance with the provisions of this section shall be, without unnecessary delay, mustered out of the service of the United States; and the following persons shall be exempt from such draft, namely: Such as are rejected as physically or mentally unfit for the service; also,

1. The Vice President of the United States, the judges of the various courts of the United States, the heads of the various Executive Departments of the Government, and the Governors and judges of the several States.

2. The only son liable to military duty of a widow dependent upon his labor for support.

3. Where there are two or more sons of aged or infirm parents subject to draft, the father, or, if he be dead, the mother may elect which son shall be exempt.

4. The only brother of children not twelve years old, having neither father nor mother, dependent upon his labor for support.

5. The father of motherless children under twelve years of age, dependent upon his labor for support.

6. Where there are a father and sons in the same family and household, and two of them are in the military service of the United States as non-commissioned officers, musicians, or privates, the residue of such family and household, not exceeding two, shall be exempt.

7. Indians not taxed.

8. Persons convicted of felony; and no other persons shall be exempt.

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That the tactics, arms, accoutrements, equipments, uniform, colors, camp-colors, fies, drums, tents, camp-kettles, mess-pans, saddles, bridles, and spurs, and the regulations for guard duty, for the forms of guard mounting, inspection, review, and dress parade, and for courts-martial, funeral ceremonies, salutes, and honors paid by the troops to be observed by the national guard, shall be those lawfully prescribed for the regular Army.

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any troops of the national guard to hold any muster, drill, parade, encampment, or other meeting under arms, on the day of any election appointed by the laws of any State or Territory or of the United States; and any person guilty of a violation of the provisions of this section shall, upon indictment and conviction thereof before any Federal, State, or territorial court of competent criminal jurisdiction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment in any penitentiary or jail of the district, county, or Territory where the offense shall have been committed, for a period not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, and shall pay the costs of prosecution.

SEC. 30. And be it further enacted, That all the powers, privileges, and duties conferred or imposed by the provisions of this act upon the Governors of States shall be exercised in each State by such person as shall, under the constitution and laws thereof, be the commander-in-chief of the militia therein; and all provisions of this act relating to the Territories shall be equally applicable to the District of Columbia; and all provisions hereof relating to the Governors of Territories shall be equally applicable to the President, or other legally constituted chief executive officer of said District; but the powers and duties conferred and imposed by this act upon the Governors of Territories shall only be exercised or performed by such Governors of Territories as shall hold their offices by authority and in pursuance of some act or acts of the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 31. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act commissions in the Army of the United States shall be granted only to graduates of the United States Military Academy and of the schools of the national guard, and to officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the regular and volunteer military, naval, and marine forces, and national guard, of not less than one year's honorable service therein, and persons honorably discharged therefrom, after not less than one year's service therein.

SEC. 32. And be it further enacted, That the field pieces, carriages, caissons, equipments, and implements which shall be issued, under the provisions of this act, to regimental commanders, shall be used under their supervision for the instruction and practice of their commands in the tactics for light artillery prescribed for the Army of the United States; and with the approval of the brigade commander, the pieces and caissons of each brigade may be temporarily united in a four-gun battery, and served by volunteers or details from the respective regiments, under officers detailed by the brigade commander.

SEC. 33. And be it further enacted, That within eighteen months after the passage of this act four schools of the national guard shall be established at places most convenient for the several States and Territories, to be designated by joint resolution of Congress, within one year after the passage of this act, or by the President in case of the failure of Congress so to designate the same; and the course of instruction shall be the same as that prescribed for the United States Military Academy; and a sufficient number of competent instructors shall be provided by the Secretary of War, by the detail of officers of the Army of the United States, and the employment of civilians when necessary; and all said schools shall be under the superintendence of the Assistant Secretary of War; and within one year after two regiments of the national guard shall have been completely organized and mustered into service in any congressional district or Territory, four cadets, and in each year thereafter two cadets, shall be selected by competitive examination for said school from the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the national guard of such district or Territory by a board consisting of a majority of the field officers and captains therein, at such times and places, and under such regulations, as the Assistant Secretary of War may prescribe; and at each annual selection of cadets, after the third, in any district or Territory, so many shall be selected as will make the whole number from said district or Territory equal to eight; and the pay and allowances and uniform of such cadets shall be the same as those of the cadets of the United States Military Academy; and after the said schools shall have been so located the Secretary of War shall, without unnecessary delay, purchase sites for the same, erect the necessary buildings, and purchase the necessary books, implements, and apparatus; and until such buildings shall be in readiness for use shall rent, in the localities designated for such schools, buildings for the temporary accommodation thereof on the most advantageous terms; and such cadets shall be admitted only between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one years, but any officer, non-commissioned officer, or private of the national guard, who has honorably and faithfully served not less than one year as an officer or enlisted man in the regular or volunteer military service, or Marine corps, or as an officer or seaman in the naval service of the United States in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and who shall possess the other qualifications prescribed by law, shall be eligible to appointment until the age of twenty-four years; and said schools shall be subject to such of the rules and regulations for the government of the United States Military Academy, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as the Assistant Secretary of War shall from time to time direct; but the academic year of said schools shall commence at least five months earlier than that of the United States Military Academy; and all appointments of cadets in the United States Military Academy shall be made from the schools of the national guard, as follows, namely: every such appointment for any congressional district shall be conferred upon the person of the highest capacity, merit, and qualifications, among the cadets of such district in one of the schools of the national guard, to be selected by the academic board of such school, and nominated to the Secretary of War under such regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as he may prescribe; and three cadets in the United States Military Academy shall be annually appointed at large from each school, to be selected in like manner from the whole number of cadets therein; and the Assistant Secretary of War shall so apportion the cadets of the several districts and Territories that all the cadets from the same school; and all graduates of said school shall, after their graduation, serve three years in the national guard, or Army, Navy, or Marine corps of the United States.

SEC. 34. And be it further enacted, That in order to insure uniformity in the national guard the Secretary of War shall cause inspections of all the organizations thereof to be made once in two years by officers of the regular Army, detailed for that purpose, who shall report upon their discipline; instruction in military duties and exercises; the state of their arms, clothing, equipments, and accoutrements of all kinds; the state of the division, brigade, regimental, and company books, papers, and files; the zeal and ability of their officers; the condition of all public property; the fidelity and care of officers responsible therefor; and all other important matters affecting the efficiency of said troops.

SEC. 35. And be it further enacted, That the salary of the Assistant Secretary of War, to be appointed under the provisions of this act, shall be $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 36. And be it further enacted, That the following acts and parts of acts be, and the same are hereby, repealed, namely: "An act more effectually to provide for the national defense, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," approved May 8, 1792; "An act to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, and to repeal the act now in force for those purposes," approved February 28, 1795, except the sixth and ninth sections thereof; "An act additional to and amendatory of an act entitled 'An act concerning the District of Columbia,'" approved May 3, 1802; "An act in addition to an act entitled 'An act more effectually to provide for the national defense, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States,'" approved March 2, 1803; "An act more effectually to provide for the organization of the militia in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1803; "An act making provision for arming and equipping the whole body of the militia of the United States," approved April 23, 1808; "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act more effectually to provide for the organization of the militia of the District of Columbia,'" approved July 1, 1812; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act; but no parts of acts repealed by the acts hereby repealed shall revive; and all State and territorial laws enacted to provide for organizing, arming, or disciplining the militia, or calling forth the same, or for organizing or maintaining troops in time of peace which shall conflict with the provisions of this act shall be inoperative after the expiration of ninety days from and after the passage of this act; and any person who shall thereafter attend any drill, parade, muster, encampment, or other military exercise as an officer, non-commissioned officer, or private of any militia or military organization except the national guard herein provided for, or the Army or Marine corps of the United States, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, and shall pay the costs of prosecution.

Mr. ROSS. I make the point that the bill is an appropriation bill, and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. In what section does it make an appropriation?

Mr. ROSS. The Clerk did not read the number of the sections. I understood in one place it declares a certain sum shall be appropriated and paid out of the Treasury to the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the bill, and finds no appropriation in it.

Mr. PAINE. I am familiar with the bill, and I say there is no appropriation in it. I now move, by direction of the committee, the following amendments:

Section four, line sixty-one, after the word "respectively" insert "but company officers may be appointed in any other mode prescribed by law in such State or Territory," so it will read:

3. The officers so elected shall annex to the aforesaid oath their official certificate, in duplicate, setting forth that they were severally elected officers of such company, according to law, and showing the time and place of such election, and the office to which each was chosen, and shall thereupon transmit one oath and certificate to the Governor of the State or Territory and the other to the Assistant Secretary of War; and if no fraud or illegality shall appear in such organization or election the Governor shall commission the said officers and assign the companies so organized to regiments, brigades, and divisions, but not before a sufficient number of such companies shall have been organized to constitute, in accordance with the provisions of this act, regiments, brigades, and divisions respectively; but company officers may be appointed in any other mode prescribed by law in such State or Territory.

Section four, line sixty-nine, strike out from the word "but" to word "division" in line seventy, as follows:

But four regiments of infantry shall constitute one brigade, and two brigades one division.

Section five, at end of line twelve, after the following: "SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all persons who shall enlist in the national guard shall be held for a term of service of three years from the date of their muster in, unless sooner discharged; and all commissioned officers shall hold their offices until the expiration of three years from the date of their original muster in, unless sooner discharged; and all officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates who shall have honorably served until the expiration of such term shall, at their option, be exempt from further military service in time of peace, but shall be liable to enrollment thereafter in the enrolled militia under the age of forty-five years, and shall be eligible to commissions until fifty-five years of age," add these words: "and shall not be disqualified therefor by wounds or disability incurred in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States."

Section eight, line four, after the word "militia" insert the words "and also such other officers of the staff of the commander-in-chief as shall be provided for by law;" so that it will read:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That in addition to the officers provided for in the preceding sections of this act, there shall be in each State and Territory a commander-in-chief and an adjutant general of the militia and also such other officers of the staff of the commander-in-chief as shall be provided for by law therein, &c.

Section ten, line three, strike out the word "each" and insert in lieu thereof the word "such."

Section twenty-one, lines thirteen and fourteen, strike out the words "each regimental and company commander, whoso responsible for public property."

Section sixteen, lines fourteen and fifteen, strike out the words "Assistant Secretary of War" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Governor."

Mr. LE BLOND. I call the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 101, nays 28, not voting 61; as follows:

So the amendments of the committee were agreed to.

BOUNTY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] is entitled to the floor by the unanimous order of the House on the 29th of January, that the bounty bill reported by him should be taken up and made the special order after the morning hour. It is now reached in its regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say that I shall be compelled to leave this city to-morrow morning, and I desire to make as much progress as we can with the tax bill. I therefore ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to allow me to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the special order to-day.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I could not possibly yield, nor can I now without a distinct arrangement by which an hour may be agreed upon within the next twenty-four in which we can get up the bounty bill. I understand the gentleman from Vermont is obliged to leave town on account of a threatened domestic affliction. It would be a violation of every sentiment of the heart to decline under such circumstances to give him the opportunity he desires before leaving, as he is compelled to go and leave the tax bill in the hands of others who desire to spend a little time upon it. I yield, therefore, if I can have the unanimous consent that at some particular hour this evening or to-morrow this bill will be taken up.

The SPEAKER. Unless the House adjourns to-night on some unfinished business, there will be a morning hour to-morrow for private bills, and at the close of that the bounty bill will come up.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night nothing that shall come up shall interfere with the bounty bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent that the House adjourn to-night on his bill; that will bring it up.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to that understanding.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now understand that it is agreed, by unanimous consent, that this bill will be considered pending when the House adjourns to-day, which will bring it up the first thing after the morning hour to-morrow; and therefore I give notice to all the friends of the soldiers to be here when the bill comes up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if to-morrow were not private bill day, the adjournment of the House to-day, leaving this bill pending, would bring it up to-morrow before the morning hour, but to-morrow being private bill day it will not come up until after the morning hour.

KENNEBEC AND PENOBSCOT RIVERS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in compliance with the act of June 23, 1866, transmitting a report of the chief of Engineers relative to the survey and improvement of the Kennebec and Penobscot rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PLATTSBURG HARBOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in accordance with the act of June 23, 1866, transmitting a report of the chief of Engineers relative to the survey of Plattsburg harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HELL GATE, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in compliance with the act of June 23, 1866, transmitting a report by the chief of Engineers relative to the survey of Hell Gate, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONERS TO INDIAN TRIBES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending that an appropriation of $150,000 be made by Congress to enable the Department of the Interior to send commissioners to all the Indian tribes west of the Mississippi river; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LAWS OF THE TERRITORY OF UTAH.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the laws of the Territory of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for 1866; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, under the law:

Resolved, That there be printed of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year 1866 four thousand extra copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and one thousand copies for distribution from the office of the Coast Survey.

LIGHT-HOUSES.

Mr. LONGYEAR, from the Committee on Commerce, by unanimous consent, reported a bill to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed and recommitted.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 491) amendatory of the several acts respecting copyrights;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) for the purchase of David's Island, New York harbor;

An act (H. R. No. 1128) to authorize payment of prize money to certain officers and enlisted men of the Signal corps of the Army;

An act (H. R. No. 918) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 1141) to authorize the purchase of certain lots of ground adjoining the Alleghany arsenal, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House take a recess from half past four o'clock to half past seven o'clock this evening, to resume at that time, in the Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the tax bill.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendments.

Mr. SCHENCK. Before the Clerk resumes the reading of the bill I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of line thirty-nine, as follows:

That if any collector or assistant collector, assessor or assistant assessor, inspector, district attorney, marshal, or other officer, agent, or person, charged with the execution or supervision of the execution of any provisions of this act, shall demand or accept, or attempt to collect, directly or indirectly, as payment or gift or otherwise, any sum of money or other property of value, for the compromise, adjustment, or settlement of any charge or complaint for any violation or alleged violation of any provisions of this act, except as expressly authorized by law so to do, he shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for every such offense be liable to indictment and trial in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction; and on conviction therefor shall be fined in double the sum or value of the money or property received or demanded and be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period not less than one year nor more than ten years.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a suggestion. His amendment if adopted should be made to apply not only to this act, but to the act of which this is amendatory.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will modify my amendment in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] by inserting at the proper place the words "or of the acts of which this is amendatory."

Now, it is well enough to remember that, while we are with a sharp stick after the distillers who violate the law, there is probably a little fraud and wrong upon our own side. Now, within my own personal knowledge we have in the State of Ohio agents of the Government who go about and arrest right and left persons charged with violating the law, and then offer to accept black-mail to compromise and adjust these charges in a private and personal way. I propose that any action of that kind shall be made highly penal; that any agent or officer of the Government who shall be guilty of such an act shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, besides being fined twice the amount of the sum attempted to be compromised.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] that it should also be provided that these persons should upon conviction be dismissed from office. We now have men holding office who, at least in public opinion, are guilty and have been for some years.

Mr. SCHENCK. I take it for granted that we can hardly find a Secretary of the Treasury who will permit a man to continue to hold office after he has been sent to the penitentiary. The penalty which I propose is confinement in the penitentiary. I leave no alternative to the court.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. That only reaches the subordinate, not the principal officer.

Mr. SCHENCK. It applies to every officer guilty of the offense.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would suggest that the amendment of the gentleman should precede and not follow this clause.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend this amendment by adding to it a proviso that for a second offense the party guilty of the crime shall be tried by a court-martial or military commission without the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. BOUTWELL.) The Chair rules the amendment to the amendment out of order.

The amendment of Mr. SCHENCK was then agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose that the committee return to section five of this bill, which was passed over in Committee of the Whole last night.

No objection was made.

The section was as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if it shall at any time be ascertained that the manufacturer of any article upon which a tax is required to be paid by means of a stamp shall have sold or removed for sale any such articles without the use of the proper stamp, in addition to the penalties now imposed by law for such sale or removal, it shall be the duty of the proper assessor or assistant assessor, upon such information as he can obtain, to assume and estimate the amount of the tax which has been omitted to be paid, and to make an assessment therefor, and certify the same to the collector; and it shall also be the duty of the proper assessor or assistant assessor in like manner to assume and estimate the amount of taxes which may be due from any manufacturer of distilled spirits on account of any spirits manufactured by him upon which the tax has not been paid, and to make the proper assessment therefor, and the subsequent proceedings for collection shall be in all respects like those for the collection of taxes upon manufactures and productions.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend this section by inserting after the words "it shall be the duty of the proper assessor or assistant assessor" the words "within a period of not more than two years after such removal or sale."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to further amend the section by striking out the words—

And it shall also be the duty of the proper assessor or assistant assessor in like manner to assume and estimate the amount of taxes which may be due from any manufacturer of distilled spirits on account of any spirits manufactured by him upon which the tax has not been paid, and to make the proper assessment therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I ask unanimous consent to return to the first clause of section nine, which now reads as follows:

That section twenty-two be amended by striking out, after the words "assistant assessor," and before the word "actually," the words "four dollars for every day," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "five dollars for every day."

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say that I think the amendment which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DARLING] proposes to offer, as I understand it, is one that should be adopted, as there is some confusion as to whether those assistant assessors shall be allowed their pay for Sundays. Many of them have to work on Sundays; I do not know why they should not be paid for the work they do.

No objection was made.

Mr. DARLING. I now move to insert after the words "five dollars a day" the words "including Sundays."

Mr. GRINNELL. My impression is that if that amendment shall be adopted every man or almost every man will find it convenient to work on Sundays, and thus it will open the door to temptation to do work on Sundays which might be done on other days, and add largely to the cost of collecting the revenue. Now, those who work on Sundays are the exceptions and not the rule. Adopt this amendment and they will be the rule and not the exceptions.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section seventy-nine be amended as follows: in paragraph four, by striking out the following words: "in quantities of more than three gallons at one and the same time to the same purchaser, or." In paragraph five, by striking out the following words: "in quantities of three gallons or less." In paragraph sixteen, strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$500." In paragraph thirty-one, by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That no special tax shall be required of any person for the manufacture of butter and cheese. In paragraph thirty-two, by inserting after the word "garden" and before the word "who" the words "or traveling on foot and peddling fruits, vegetables, pies, cakes, and confectionery."

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by adding after the paragraph just read the following:

That section ninety be amended by inserting after the word "cigars," and before the first proviso in said section, the words "and all proceedings relating to forfeiture and sale of distilled spirits shall apply to tobacco, snuff, and cigars."

Also, in the second proviso, after the words "that manufactured tobacco" insert "or," and after the word "snuff" immediately following, strike out the words "or cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported." Also, in the latter part of said proviso, after the word "tobacco," wherever it occurs, insert the word "or" and strike out the words "or cigars" wherever they occur.

These paragraphs have, by some error in arranging the bill, been printed on page 12, though they more properly belong here.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEE. I move to amend by inserting after the amendment just adopted the following:

That section seventy-nine be amended as follows: In paragraph four strike out $100 and insert in lieu thereof $500.

This is intended to apply to the wholesale dealers of liquor, who under the present law are taxed simply in the sum of $100. I suppose that the object of the committee and of the House is to raise revenue for the Government. Now, a tax of $100 on a wholesale dealer of liquor amounts simply to nothing. These wholesale dealers can just as well afford to pay, and will just as readily pay, a tax of $500 as a tax of $100. I hope the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will give this amendment his assent.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot do so. This bill is for the purpose generally of reducing revenue. In the ordinary business of the country it is not proposed to increase taxation. The wholesale dealers are all subject to a tax of more than $100, provided their business exceeds a certain sum. They are subject to a tax of one dollar on every $1,000, beyond a certain amount.

On agreeing to the amendment of Mr. McKEE, there were—ayes 33, noes 47; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. McKEE and ALLISON.

Mr. McKEE. I would like to state the effect of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That cannot be done now without unanimous consent.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKEE. I am satisfied that members have not understood this proposition, and I ask that a vote may be taken on it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That proposition cannot be entertained now.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think the committee understand distinctly the effect of the proposition. It is to reduce the tax on the large dealers and raise the tax on the small ones.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph last read the following words:

Provided, That no special tax shall be required of any person for the manufacture of butter and cheese.

Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that my colleague and friend from the nineteenth district of Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is not here to defend his butter and cheese, representing as he does what in Ohio we call "Cheesedom." My reason for offering this amendment is that when other manufacturers are compelled to take out a special license I do not see why an exemption should be made in favor of those who manufacture butter and cheese. I can very readily understand that where a farmer makes butter and cheese, just as he makes sausages and a great many other things incidentally to the carrying on of his farm, he should not be treated as a manufacturer.

There are in my own State, in that part particularly, a great many persons who, without owning farms, manufacture into butter and cheese the milk and cream brought up to them and purchased for that purpose from the neighboring farms. It is in fact a great manufacturing business; so large, indeed, though I do not vouch for the fact, somewhere in the Western Reserve, in Ohio, this business being carried on upon top of a hill, a saw-mill is turned by the buttermilk below. [Laughter.]

I do not know it is carried on extensively anywhere; but I do know it is hard for a man who manufactures shoes, leather, or anything else, who is taxed and compelled to pay for a license for the privilege of doing so, to see the wealthy manufacturer of cheese pass without paying any license at all, while perhaps carrying on a business a hundredfold more extensive than the man who is taxed in all shapes.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WOODBRIDGE] suggests the clause stand as it is, and insert "from the products of his own dairy farm." Something of that sort is proper, or else the large manufacturers of cheese will escape.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to oppose the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. It is true, so far as representations have come before the Committee of Ways and Means, they have come from the State of Ohio, that is in regard to this tax; and it is also true we have from the start gone upon the principle of leaving the agriculturists nearly without any tax at all, and it is to carry out that principle this provision has been inserted. A great many farmers manufacture more than one thousand dollars worth of butter and cheese. Now, then, if the law is not amended, they will be compelled to take out a license as manufacturers.

But suppose they do not manufacture for themselves and are compelled to carry their milk one, two, three, and four miles to a manufacturer, a sort of joint stock company, I think they should be exempted.

I was surprised that the gentleman from Ohio should rise to make a motion to strike out. The amount received from this source is very small. There are several manufacturers in New York. I believe there are more in New York than in any other State. There are a considerable number in Ohio and further west. They put their milk to profitable use, and I wish to encourage them. If these manufacturers are suffered to increase they will relieve the women, for everywhere these manufacturers are established it takes the milk from the cow at once and relieves the women.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to strike out the last word of the proviso.

My friend from the Dayton district [Mr. SCHENCK] calls for the Representative from cheesedom, and regrets that his colleague from the nineteenth district [Mr. GARFIELD] is not present. I suppose he will accept me as a substitute, as I represent a portion of the country coming under that designation. I hope my friend has no special point to make against cheesedom for what is past. I will promise him everything in the future.

Sir, I have received from many of the farmers in my district a protest against the imposition of a manufacturer's tax upon these men who make butter and cheese. It occurs to me you may with as much propriety impose a manufacturer's tax upon the man who produces wheat and raises cattle for market as upon the farmer who produces butter and cheese, or apple-butter, my friend says, the product of his orchard.

The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has declared, and I think very properly, at this time it is not policy to tax the products of the farmer; and these are the products of the farmer, although there is some mechanical manipulation entering into the production of butter and cheese. Where curd or milk is gathered from a multitude of farmers it is made by a process of machinery. And, sir, I think the wholesome rule for us to adopt is to carry out the principle sought to be ingrafted by the Committee of Ways and Means, to prohibit a manufacturer's tax upon the production of butter and cheese, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. Chairman, if there is any class of people or any branch of industry that can bear taxation it is that which is affected by this proposition. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means suggests that this interest needs encouragement. If he lived in the city where he paid from sixty to seventy cents a pound for butter and from twenty to twenty-five cents a pound for cheese I think he would be quite satisfied they were getting all the encouragement they needed. I undertake to state another fact, in regard to which I have no doubt the gentleman from Vermont will agree with me, that there is no branch of the agricultural interest of our country that has prospered so much and increased so greatly within the last two or three years as this very branch.

Mr. MORRILL. Does the gentleman desire to have the products of the farms increased so that they will be compelled to pay higher prices?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to have them pay a little of the tax that the consumers who have to buy their butter have already saddled upon themselves. I am in favor of having these farmers, who are now exempt from taxation more than any class of men, do something—and this is a very small amount—for the purpose of relieving the burdens that the great consuming interest of the country has already upon its shoulders.

This business has attained such a magnitude in my own part of the State of New York that to-day the interest is a separate and distinct one from the farmers, as much as that of the conversion of wheat into flour. These manufacturing establishments are springing up and doing the whole of this business, and I see no reason why we should undertake to encourage these men or this branch of business, which is already encouraged by the enormous profits which it is making, while we require the shoemaker, the butcher, and men of almost every other calling who consume these products to pay a license. I hope this proposition will be stricken out, or if it is desirable that it should be retained, I hope the amount will be reduced for the benefit of the farmer, who from his own cows makes, say $500 worth. That might do, but as it is, it seems to me the proposition is a most unjust one. Either strike it out or so modify it as to have it do justice to all interests.

Mr. SPALDING withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose to withdraw my amendment and offer this as a modification:

Insert at the close of the proviso after the word "cheese" the words "when the same are made from the products of his own dairy farm, and do not exceed $500 per annum."

Mr. SPALDING. It has come in already; it is $1,000 now.

Mr. SCHENCK. This particular product?

Mr. SPALDING. Exactly; it is $1,000 now.

Mr. SCHENCK. Not $1,000 on cheese. I do not understand the $1,000 relates exclusively to cheese, but to general products. I do not wish to be misunderstood about this matter. I do not want my colleague who is present [Mr. SPALDING] nor my colleague who is absent [Mr. GARFIELD] to understand that I am making an attack on cheesedom.

Mr. SPALDING. Allow me to explain the present position of the law. These manufacturers are required to take out manufacturer's licenses when they make more than $1,000 worth.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well; make it $1,000.

Mr. SPALDING. I prefer your amendment simply to confine it to his own dairy.

Mr. SCHENCK. For the purpose of gratifying the gentleman I will leave out the part limiting the amount, and provide that these persons shall be exempt only where their cheese and butter are made from the products of their own dairy.

Mr. SPALDING. I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. SCHENCK. I believe you now tax bakers and sausage-makers and all others who follow a regular branch of manufacturing industry. My object is to reach those who follow as a branch of manufacturing industry the business of making butter and cheese. That is a very large branch of industry, and there is no reason why any one who follows it as a branch of manufacturing industry should be exempt, as you exempt farmers for the production of that which is in fact the growth of their own farms, merely the form and shape of it being changed for market.

Now, I have no idea of attacking the interests of "cheesedom," far from it. Whether there be any connection between butter and cheese and political questions I will not attempt to determine; but I know that where they make the most cheese and butter in Ohio they are sounder, politically, than in other parts of the State.

Mr. GARFIELD. The cream of the State.
